CHILTON COUNTY

Is the geographical center of Alabama. The Louisville and Nashville, the L. T. & W. Ga. and the Montgomery, Tuskaloosa and Memphis Railroads pass through the county, and the Coosa river is the boundry line on the east. The chief industries are farming and saw milling. Population 15,000.

Clanton, the county seat, is on the L. & N. R. R., 30 miles south of Birmingham and 40 north of Montgomery. Several large saw mills are located in the vicinity of the town.

CAHEEN'S

WE ARE MASTERS OF THE SITUATION!

☞ Our famous stock of Fall Goods masters of others as to low prices, quality and selection! We are second to none in the South. Our stock is bought cheaper than others from the simple reason that we pay spot cash for our stock as we buy it. Manufacturers very often need the cash, therefore we buy a great part of our stock somewhat less than manufacturers' prices. Our stock is a great deal, by 200 per cent., more numerous than others. We buy and sell larger quantities than others. Our styles are exclusive and we control several exclusive lines of popular goods, which the public will buy because they want the best and cheapest.

Room is what we want. We must have it. How do we intend to get it? We will sell Dry Goods, Milinery, Gents' Furnishing goods, House Furnishing goods, so low that they will just simply fly out of our large establishment.

A VISION OF LOVELINESS! A HOUSE FULL OF CONVINCING TRUTHS!

Our Fall and Winter business is starting out under very flattering auspices! We can so far look ahead that we can see what a grand success this season will be with us. We are doing the best business of our line in the city, in the past, now, forever and always!

IMMIGRATION CONVENTION

MEET AT ASHEVILLE FOR DELIBERATION.

THE SOUTHLAND BOOMED AS A FITTING HOME FOR THE THRIFTY IMMIGRANT—GENERAL REPORT ON THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE CONVENTION.

Three hundred and fifty delegates, representing every section of the south, were present at the opening of the south-western interstate immigration convention at Asheville, N. C., Wednesday. The body was called to order by N. J. T. Johnson, of Texas. Hon. R. B. Vance, of Asheville, was chosen temporary chairman and welcomed the convention to the state of North Carolina. Captain Nat Atkinson delivered an address of welcome on behalf of the city of Asheville, and Governor Fowle welcomed the convention on behalf of the state of North Carolina. James Dinny, of Virginia, delivered a response on behalf of the convention. The committee on permanent organization made the following report for permanent officers of the convention: Mr. Bryant, of Tennessee, president; D. H. Elliott, of Florida, secretary; D. C. Garlington, of South Carolina, and Mr. Wilcox, of Georgia, assistant secretaries; F. N. Waddell, of Asheville, sergeant-at-arms; vice presidents to be elected by each state in the convention. The convention adjourned at 6 o'clock p. m. till Thursday morning at 10 o'clock.

The convention got down to business Thursday morning, the second day of the session, and during the day several very important measures were adopted.

It has been decided that the scalpers of railroad tickets are a menace to the south, also that they interfere with the influx of emigrants, and consequently they must be abolished.

THE FORCE BILL ALLUDED TO.

A sensation was caused by the introduction of this resolution, fathered by W. H. Malone, of Alabama:

Whereas, It is the sense of this convention that all sectional animosities between the North and the South should cease; that the agitation of sectional questions tends to retard the general prosperity of the whole country; therefore,

Resolved, That we deprecate as unwise and impolitic the present agitation in congress of what is known as the national election law, or force bill, and do hereby protest against the enactment of this bill into law.

No sooner had the secretary read the resolution than a howl was raised that the inter-state convention was held to promote immigration, and that politics should have no part in its deliberations. The resolution was tabled.

The following resolution from North Carolina was introduced:

We deplore the proposed legislation where it retards the prosperous condition of the Southern states, and which tends to hinder the flow of capital into the Southern states.

Referred to the committee on resolutions.

The following resolutions were introduced by R. J. Boone, of Durham, N. C., and referred to the committee:

Resolved, That the war between the sections is ended, and all bitter remembrances thereof are forgotten.

Resolved, That on the maps of the world and in southern hearts the United States is one nation, bound together by every tie of commercial interests and of brotherly love.

Resolved, That we, citizens of the southern part of this, the grandest nation the world ever saw, extend to our brothers in the north and west the right hand of fellowship, and invite them to come and make their homes among us, and aid us in developing the richest country in natural resources and the most favored in climate and location of any section on the face of the earth:

Resolved, That we hereby issue a call for 500,000 sturdy sons of toil and 500,000 manufacturers of the north and west to make their homes with us and to join in the development of this land of ours.

Resolved, That we recognize no political east, no political west, no political north and no political south; that under a common banner and in a common country, we pledge ourselves to every honest effort to the upbuilding of this nation, of which the south is the most favored by nature and nature's God.

THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

The following executive committee was chosen:

Alabama—J. C. Keith, Anniston.

Arkansas—John J. Sumpter, Hot Springs.

Florida—William Davidson, Jacksonville.

Georgia—W. L. Glessner, Americus.

Kentucky—E. Pope Johnson, Franklin.

Louisiana—T. W. Poole, New Orleans.

North Carolina—P. M. Wilson, Winston.

South Carolina—N. R. Duncan, Spartanburg.

Texas—S. J. T. Johnson, Corsicana.

Tennessee—Major H. M. Aiken, Knoxville.

Virginia—G. W. B. Hale, Rocky Mount.

West Virginia—C. F. Moore, Huntersville.

THE RAILROAD QUESTION.

The committee appointed to make suggestions to correct grievances met and considered railroad business, and made the following report:

The committee begs leave to report unanimously that it endorses the plan adopted by the railways of selling what are called "home seekers" and land excursion tickets to promote and encourage immigration, and recommends that a committee of three be appointed by the southern interstate immigration convention to apply to the several passenger and traffic associations for an extension of the sale of such tickets at as low a rate and at as frequent dates as can be secured. As far as the practice of scalping or ticket brokerage makes the sale of such tickets on numerous dates and from many points at low rates hazardous to the transportation lines selling such tickets, and diverts the use of such tickets from their original purposes, the committee recommens that this convention memorialize congress to prohibit scalping or ticket brokerage by an amendment to the interstate commerce act, as recommended by the interstate commerce commission in its fourth annual report. That we further recommend that each state delegation to this convention bring the action of this convention to the attention of the congressional representatives of their respective States, and ask their co-operation in securing the proposed legislation. Also, that the same State delegations ask the legislature of their several States to instruct their representatives in congress to enact legislation outlined by the interstate commerce commission.

The report brought on a discussion, participated in by the representatives from nearly every State. Finally the report was adopted.

MANAGER CHILTON'S REPORT.

F. B. Chilton, of Austin, Tex., general manager of the southern interstate commerce convention, then made his report.

At the afternoon session, Colonel Waddell submitted a splendid report from his committee, showing the vast importance of immigration, which was received with enthusiastic applause.

The remainder of the afternoon was occupied by a prolonged speech by Mr. James McKenzie, of Kentucky, one of the world's fair commissioners.

SITTING BULL DEAD.

HE IS KILLED IN ATTEMPTING TO ESCAPE FROM THE INDIAN POLICE.

A dispatch from St. Paul, Minn., says: Sitting Bull has been killed. General Miles received two dispatches Monday evening—first from Pierre, S. D., stating that Sitting Bull and his son had been killed, but giving no further particulars. The other was from Standing Rock agency and stating that Indian police started out during the morning to arrest Sitting Bull, having understood that he proposed starting out for the Bad Lands at once. The police were followed by a troop of cavalry, under Captain Fechet, and infantry under Colonel Drum. When the police reached Sitting Bull's camp on Grand river, about forty miles from Standing Rock, they found arrangements being made for departure. The cavalry had not yet reached camp when the police arrested Sitting Bull and started back with him. His followers quickly rallied to his rescue and tried to retake him. In the melee that ensued the wily old chief is said to have been killed, and five of the best of the Indian police were also killed.

THE NEWS CONFIRMED.

Indian Commissioner Morgan, at Washington, received from Indian Agent McLaughlin, Monday evening, the following dispatch, dated Fort Yates, N. D., December 15:

The Indian police arrested Sitting Bull at his camp, forty miles northwest of the agency, this morning at daylight. His followers attempted his rescue, and the fighting commenced. Four policemen were killed and three wounded. Eight Indians were killed, including Sitting Bull and his son, Crowfoot, and several others were wounded. The police were surrounded for a time, but maintained their ground until relieved by the United States troops, who now have possession of Sitting Bull's camp, with all the women, children and property.

ROBONS ARE EASY.

"Your habits will be the death of me," said Mrs. Hershey.

"Well, your costumes are ruining me," retorted Mr. H.

WASHINGTON NEWS.

SECOND SESSION OF THE FIFTY-FIRST CONGRESS.

THE LAW-MAKERS OF UNCLE SAM'S DOMAIN AGAIN AT WORK—ROUTINE OF THE HOUSE AND SENATE—EACH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS TERSELY TOLD.

The house consumed Tuesday in the apportionment bill. The bill provides for 356 members of the house. It has, however, been made to read that it shall not go into effect until the fifty-third congress.

The house, after a long discussion, passed the reapportionment bill Wednesday afternoon. Nearly every member of the Georgia delegation, except Mr. Blount, voted against it, because the republicans refused to grant New York a recount, which would have given that city another member. The bill is the one providing for 356 members. It will probably pass the senate without difficulty.

In the house, on Thursday, the bill was passed for the construction of a bridge across Duck river by the county of Humphreys, Tenn. The morning hour expired, and Mr. Farquhar, of New York, moved that the house proceed to the consideration of the senate bill to place the American merchant marine on an equality with that of other nations. After considerable argument, the motion prevailed, and Mr. Farquhar took the floor to argue in favor of the bill and occupied the remainder of the afternoon session. When the committee rose the house adjourned.

There were only eight senators present when the speaker's gavel fell Tuesday morning. The presiding officer laid before the senate Mr. Morgan's resolution calling on the secretary of the treasury for information relative to the payment of the claims of John I. Davenport as supervisor of elections and as circuit court commissioner. The resolution was adopted. Mr. Morgan presented the credentials of the election of his colleague, Mr. Pugh, and they were laid upon the table. The pending business was stated to be the consideration of the Dolph resolution, providing for an investigation as to whether the right to vote was denied or abridged in any state, etc., and Mr. Morgan addressed the senate against the bill. Mr. Dolph spoke in favor of it. Without concluding his argument, Mr. Dolph yielded for a motion to adjourn.

In the senate, on Wednesday, Mr Hoar, asked unanimous consent that Friday at 3 o'clock p. m., debate on the election bill should be clonsidered as closed. This was met by a chorus of objections from the democrats and the request fell through. The senate resumed consideration of the election bill, Mr. Dolph continuing his speech of Tuesday. He was followed by Messrs. Morgan, Gibson, Kenna, Reagan and Butler, who made strong speeches against the measure. Mr. Hoar again endeavored to extract from democratic senators the mention of some specific time—any time, no matter when—for taking a vote on the pending bill. Mr. Gordon remarked that the senate was only on the theshold of debate on the bill. There were quite a number of senators on both sides of the senate who desired to speak upon it. The senate then adjourned.

On Thursday, immediately after the approval of the journal, the senate, on motion of Mr. Hale, went into secret session, which lasted but a few moments. In its regular order a bill came up to terminate the reduction in numbers of the engineer corps of the navy, and was passed. The bill providing that the tariff act shall not be held to impede or impair the force of treaties between the United States and another country was called up and placed on the calendar. The election bill was then taken up, and Mr. Coke addressed the senate in opposition to it. He was followed by Messrs. Collum and Bates who also spoke in opposition to the measure. The election bill was then laid aside informally, and several bills were taken up and passed. Among them were house bills for public buildings at Rome, ($25,000), and Reidsville, Ms., ($25,000). After a short executive session, the senate adjourned.

NOTES.

The District of Columbia appropriation bill for the next fiscal year, as reported to the house, carries, exclusive of the water department, $5,083 227, being $477,309 less than the appropriation for the current year, and $58,880 less than the estimates. The appropriation for the water department, which is payable from the water revenues, is $302,493.

The president, on Thursday, nominated to be postmasters Morgan S. Russell, at Tuskegee, Ala., and Frederick B. Fay, at Union Springs, Ala. The senate confirmed the following nominations: Postmasters—Duncan Jordan, Cuthbert, Ga.; J. G. Gatlin, Darlington Court house, S. C., and Phillip Gerlach, Orangeburg, S. C.

It has recently developed that there are three Alliancemen in the present house. They are Pickler, of South Dakota; Lewis, of Mississippi, and Pierce, of Tennessee. Mr. Pierce, made himself solid by introducing on Tuesday, a resolution call upon the ways and means committee to report the sub-treasury bill to the house on January 5th, and providing that the following monday be fixed for its consideration.

Mr. Sherman reported to the senate from the finance committee, Thursday morning, the financial bill agreed upon by the Republican caucus Wednesday night, and it was recommitted to the finance committee. The only change of consequence made in the measure was the limitation on banks having a capital of not more than $50,000 of the operation of the provision, reducing to $1,000 the compulsory requirement of deposits of bonds with the treasury.

The question of a holiday recess came up in Thursday's republican caucus. A ten-day recess was proposed, but was laughed at. The senators were almost unanimously of the opinion that no recess at all, more than two or three days, could be taken. Of course the democrats want just as long a recess as it be possible to get, but the republicans are against any at all, more than Christmas and New Year's days. However, the chances favor a compromise, probably a week.

NEWS OF THE SOUTH

BRIEF NOTES OF AN INTERESTING NATURE.

PITHY ITEMS FROM ALL POINTS IN THE SOUTHERN STATES THAT WILL ENTERTAIN THE READER—ACCIDENTS, FIRES, FLOODS, ETC.

A 10,000-gallon water tank collapsed at the Buena Vista paper mills in Augusta county, Va., Tuesday, resulting in the killing of one man and injuring two other employes.

About twenty small houses on the square bounded by Melpomene, Terpsichore and Franklin streets, New Orleans, burned Wednesday night. Loss estimated at $30,000, insurance light.

Henry D. McHenry, member of the national democratic committee, and delegate from Ohio county to the Kentucky constitutional convention, died suddenly Wednesday morning of heart disease, at his home in Hartford, Ky.

Wm. S. Chelkey, confideltial clerk and bookkeeper for Peeples & Trotter, wholesale grocers at Chattanooga, was arrested and placed in jail Tuesday, charged with larceny, embezzlement and false entry of accounts. The amount stolen will aggregate over $1,000, covering a period of about a year.

The Chattanooga Volunteers, composed of the old Chattanooga Rifles and Lookout Mountain Guards, State troops, disbanded and withdrew from the Third Regiment Thursday on account of the limited appropriation by the legislature to the State militia. There is now no company of the State militia in Chattanooga.

The preliminary examination of Attorney General Pope, at Columbia, S. C., charged with violating a section of the state constitution, in discharging Thomas B. Butler from the engrossing department, because he voted for Haskell against Tillman, was heard before Trial Justice Youmans Tuesday morning and the case dismissed on the ground that the section did not apply to state officers.

Governor Jones, on Tuesday, reprieved Ann Patterson, who was sentenced to be hanged in Scale, Russell county, Ala., Friday, for the murder of her husband, by poisoning. The reprieve was the result of a petition signed by nearly every lady in Scale, asking for the commutation of the woman's sentence to imprisonment for life. Governor Jones granted the reprieve until January 16th, to gain an opportunity to give the case close investigation.

BANK WRECKERS.

INDICTED BY THE GRAND JURY—THE LEADER IN JAIL.

A Philadelphia dispatch of Friday says: George T. Work, who was the mastermind of the Work-MacFarlane-Pfeiffer-Dungan syndicate, which, it is alleged, wrecked the Bank of America and the American Life Insurance Company, was arrested Thursday night on a warrant sworn out by District Attorney Allen, and in default of $30,000 bail, was committed to Moyamensing prison. The district attorney also swore out warrants for the arrest of State Senator John J. MacFarlance, Louis E. Pfeiffer and James S. Dungan, but Work was the only one of the number that he could find. The warrant on which Work was arrested charges him with rehypothecating stocks and with conspiracy to cheat and defraud depositors and others interested in the Bank of America.

TELEGRAPH AND CABLE.

WHAT IS GOING ON IN THE BUSY WORLD.

A SUMMARY OF OUTSIDE AFFAIRS CONDENSED FROM NEWST DISPATCHES FROM UNCLE SAM'S DOMAIN AND WHAT THE CABLE BRINGS.

The banking house of S. A. Kean & Co., of Chicago suspended Wednesday.

It is expected that the rice crop this season in India will be larger than the average.

The Indianapolis car works were sold Thursday to a syndicate of creditors for $52,500.

The Spokane National bank, of Spokane Falls, Washington, suspended Wednesday.

Kansas City has been selected as the next place of meeting of the American Public Health association.

Brevet Major General Alfred H. Terry, United States army, retired, died at New Haven Tuesday morning.

The Corning mill of the Ohio Powder Company, near Youngsville, O., blew up Tuesday. Two workmen were killed.

Chesterfield county, Pa., bank closed its doors Tuesday morning. The depositors are safe by a mortgage on real estate.

S. A. Kean, doing a banking business under the name of S. A. Kean & Co., at Chicago, made an assignment Thursday morning, assets and liabilities not stated.

The Iowa legislature on Wednesday, in joint session, took two ballots for United States senator without result. The second ballot resulted: Dubois 17, Sharp 9 McConnell 9 Claggett 8, Mahew, democrat 3.

A Chicago dispatch says: Miller's objections have been met and President Harrison can issue his world's fair proclamation. The directors met Tuesday night and accepted the $5,000,000 city ordinance.

The Paris Figaro, on Wednesday, publishes Russian advices stating that another plot to murder the czar has been discovered. The conspirators are members of a noblemen's club. Several Poles have been arrested for complicity in the plot, and the club house was closed.

A dispatch of Tuesday from Centralia, Mo., says: J. G. Gillespie, treasurer of Boone county, is short over $20,000 in his accounts. The county will lose nothing as his bondsmen are able to make good the amount. Gillespie has assigned his property to his bondsmen.

Owen Brothers, agents of the Atlantic mills, at Providence, R. I., made an assignment Thursday. The liabilities are large, but the mills will continue running as usual under the management of Stephen O. Metcalf. The failure will be a serious one. The cause is stringency in the money market.

A dispatch from Jonesville, Wis., says: The struggle for Wisconsin tobacco has begun by a descent upon the market of many eastern dealers. All last week the demand for leaf was sharp, but Thursday, prices rose with a jump from 8 to 10 and even 12 cents. Sales have been heavy. No such excitement has been seen in the market since 1885.

At Philadelphia Geo. F. Work, Louis Pfeiffer and James S. Dungen, were given a hearing Wednesday morning at the Central police station on the charge of wrecking the Bank of America, and the American Life Insurance company, and at its conclusion were held in $30,000 bail each, to answer at court. Being unable to obtain this amount of bail, they were remanded to prison.

A wreck occurred on the Valley branch of the Baltimore & Ohio road, about two miles north of Harrisonburg, Va., Thursday evening. The southbound train, drawn by three engines, ran into a snow drift and was derailed. Two of the engines were thrown from the track and demolished, while the third was thrown across the track. Six persons, all railroad employes, were injured.

A Quebec dispatch says: The westbound Halifax, express train went through a bridge at that place shortly before noon Thursday. The entire train, except the baggage car and engine, went down. A number of passengers were killed, and others injured. No particulars as to the number of killed and injured, but it is said the cars were smashed to pieces.

A box of giant powder exploded in Sunday Lake mine at Wakefield, Mich., Tuesday, killing two men instantly and fatally wounding others. Two men were engaged in opening a can of powder with a chisel and a spark got into the can. The explosion set fire to the timbers of the mine and it burned briskly. There are some men in the mine, but particulars cannot be learned.

A terrible accident occurred Wednesday at Bonsenfosse colliery, at Horne, province of Hainaut, Belgium. A shift of eighteen men had entered the cage and the engine started to lower them into the pit. Suddenly, and without warning, the rope connecting the cage with the drum broke and the men were precipitated to the bottom of the shaft. Every one of the occupants of the cage were killed.

A dispatch of Tuesday from Paris, France, says: Seven Alpine chasseurs, working under command of an officer at a new fortress on the summit of Sachara), between LaBuga and Riviere, were swept, with their superior, by a sudden blast over a precipice. Five of the men, and the officer, fell a distance of 1,500 feet. Their bodies have been recovered in a frightfully mutilated condition. Two of the men managed to cling to some rocks and so managed to espape death.

HEAVY SNOW STORMS

IMPEDING TRAFFIC AND DOING CONSIDERABLE DAMAGE.

A New York dispatch says: The storm Wednesday seriously interfered with river harbor business. Several canal and smaller boats sunk at the piers in both North and East rivers, and the high tide and gale have combined to make it difficult for ferry boats to run into their slips safely. Many of the outgoing passenger steamers which were to have sailed during the day are at anchor in the lower harbor.

Reports from Pittsburg, Pa., say: The snowfall Wednesday was the heaviest in several years. The wires are down all over Pittsburgh, Allegheny and Birmingham. Horses were killed and several men badly injured by contact with electric light wires. The situation is so desperate that the department of public safety has ordered all the electric street car lines to stop running for the present. There has been a tremendous snowfall in the Allegheny mountains, and at Bedford it is one and a half feet deep on a level. Railroad wires are down, and there is much anxiety for fear of accidents. The Pittsburg and Western is snowed up completely. No freight trains whatever were running on any roads, and the passenger trains that straggled through were late from one to six hours.

IN TENNESSEE AND VIRGINIA.

Knoxville, Tenn., dispatches say: The snow which began falling in this section Wednesday has continued to fall with more or less constancy ever since. Upper East Tennessee has from four to eight inches on the ground. Mountains thirty miles north of here are covered to about the same depth and mountains along the Tennessee and North Carolina border have from six inches to two feet of snow. The snow was one foot deep on a level at Bristol and in places is drifted four feet deep. Trains are having trouble to get through. In southwest Virginia snow has drifted badly and is said to be very heavy about Marion, Virginia.

There was a heavy snowstorm at Danville, Va. In Patrick county the snow was eighteen inches deep and the track of the Danvill and New River railway was badly blocked. All trains are blocked at Staunton, Va.

A dispatch from Roanoke, Va., says: The roof of the blacksmith shop of the Roanoke Machine Works fell in under the heavy weight of snow, at 2 o'clock a. m. Wednesday. One man of the night force was killed and eight seriously injured. The damage to the building and machinery is estimated at $100,000; uninsured. It is the heaviest snowstorm for years.

NO CONVENTION

WILL BE HELD, BUT A CONFERENCE OF COMMITTEES WILL BE HAD.

At a meeting in Jacksonville, Fla., Tuesday night, attended by General Master Workman Powderly and John Davis, member-elect of congress, from Kansas, on behalf of the Knights of Labor, President Polk, national lecturer; Mr. Willetts, member of the executive board; Mr. Wardwell, of North Dakota, and others of the Farmers' Alliance, it was decided to have no convention at Cincinnati on February 23d, as had been arranged. It was decided that the call for the Cincinnati convention should not be formally issued, but that in its stead, a conference of committees of five from each of the organizations appointed should be held some time in February, which should go over the ground carefully, and without taking formal action, practically decide what course of action should be pursued. This is a decided victory for the conservative element among the third party men.

The California State Alliance has been organized at San Jose. Thirteen counties being represented.

At Ocala the sub-treasury plan was readopted and will continue to be the rallying cry of the Alliance. The objection to it, what little there was, seems to have made but little impression.

***

Various prominent Kansas Farmers' Alliancemen mentioned in recent dispatches as having been concerned in a plot to disintegrate the southern democracy by supporting the subtreasury amendment at the Farmers' Alliance convention, laugh at the story Messrs. Willetts, Chase and others said that they voted for the subtreasury bill because they believed in it.

***

The Newspaper, (California, Mo.) figures up the loss and gain thusly: "In the recent election in Missouri the Democratic party cast 11,982 less votes than it did two years ago. The Republicans cast 48,062 less. The Prohibitionists cast 6,541 less, whilst the Union Labor party cast 6,465 more votes than it did two years ago. Look out for a Kansas cyclone in this State in '92."

***

The National Citizens Alliance was formed at the recent convention at Ocala, Fla., by the adoption of a platform and the election of these officers: J. P. Holden, of Kansas, president; Ralph Beaumont, of New York, secretary, and L. P. Wild, of Washington, treasurer. During the recent elections the Citizens All ances were formed in Kansas, Nebraska and Iowa as auxiliaries to the Farmers' Alliance movement. It comprises people in the cities, towns and villages, and its object is to promote the principles of the St. Louis Platform. Outside of the officers there is to be an executive committee consisting of one from each State and Territory. Offices are to be opened in Washington at once, and a weekly paper will be established. The organization will hold joint conventions with the Knights of Labor and the Farmers' Alliance, and the local branches are forbidden to make any coalition with either of the two old parties. The organization formed is only temporary. As soon as a majority of States are organized a national convention will be held.

***

A dispatch of Thursday from Eldorado, Kansas, says: The effects of the alliance movement in Kansas are already beginning to be felt. Two years ago the Kansas state senate appointed a committee to revise certain portions of existing state laws. The committee is composed of five republicans. The committee will hold its last meeting at Topeka, and will present its report to the government. Senator Murdock, of the committee, says the report abolishes a dozen useless boards; consolidates half a dozen other boards; revises the laws regarding the control of the state normal and state agricultural colleges and Hutchinson reformatory; decapitates Sam Crawford, state agent at Washington; cuts down the number of local district judges about one-fourth; Sheriff sales, state and county printing of all kinds, 50 per cent; provides for the Australian system of voting and the election of a state board of railway commissioners; provides that the state furnish schoolbooks of uniform text, free; overhauls the system of taxation and assessment, and puts it on a bona fide basis; cuts down the fees and salaries of all county officers, except coroners and commissioners, and affects constables and justices of the peace's fees. The report says Mr. Murdock, if adopted and enacted into law will save the people of Kansas $800,000 in taxes annually. As all of the committee are republicans, and as the report is simply a redemption of pledges made in the recent state republican platform, the republican house cannot refuse to adopt it.

Homeless Men.

The natives of Lapland have a tradition that when the Great Spirit visited earth in a thunder-cloud, the ancestors of the Swedes took refuge in a cave of hewn, while the original Lap proved his superior valor by remaining in the open air. This for all that bowstring has since become a concomitant of extreme latitudes. The only nations of the present day who habitually dispense with roofs to their houses are the Esquimaux of the Arctic Ocean, and the aborigines of the Orange River, and the aborigines of the Island of the Ceylon were prepared to do so from choice.

To the eternal credit of the Farmer's Alliance will be attributed the defeat of the force bill in the Senate. There is scarcely any doubt but that the Ocala condemnation has put several Radical Senators on their good behavior. The hearts of the farmers of America are in the right place.—Birmingham News.

In our last issue a few typographical errors of some moment were noticeable. In an article on a possible combination between Republicans and Democrats the types made us say that we hoped no erring brother would "run off after straight goods." We wrote, "run off after strange gods." Another unintentional error was in neglecting to credit an article on the normal schools taken from the Prattville Progress.

Governor Jones having wisely invited many reforms in our laws, would do himself yet great honor by pointing out to the legislature that the prevailing system of official bonds, state or county or municipal, is obsolete in principle and ought to be set aside, in so far as state, county or city is required to levy upon the private property of individuals, called bondsmen, to save itself from the malfeasance of its officers. Let official bonds be taken under the security of Trust Companies, at the expense of the state, county or city as the case may require.—Columbiana Chron.

We are much pleased to receive a copy of the "Messenger," a very excellent weekly issued from the Deaf, Dumb and Blind Institute at Talladega with Osce Roberts as editor. Mr. Roberts is himself deaf and dumb but besides being an excellent printer and a good editor is a member of the faculty of the Institute. In addition to the misfortunes mentioned, Mr. Roberts lost a leg by being run over by a railroad train when he was but a boy. So here is a young man with three great afflictions that would utterly discourage ordinary mortals, doing a good and noble work in adding to the happiness and dispelling the gloom of others afflicted less than himself. Osce Roberts is no ordinary man. His heart and mind are strong indeed to endure with such resignation his great afflictions and continue steadfastly in forgetting himself while lightening the burdens of others. Osce is the son of Mr. Willis Roberts, senior member of the great printing firm of Roberts & Son, of Birmingham. He has our good wishes in abundance. We congratulate him upon the beautiful appearance and general make up of the Messenger.

The Cigarette Law.

The Legislature never did a wiser thing than to pass the anti-cigarette law.

It is designed to check a popular evil which is doing even more harm than the liquor traffic to sap and blast the strength and health of the boys of this country.

An act to prevent the sale, furnishing, giving or providing to any minor under eighteen years of age of cigarettes, tobacco or cigarette paper or any substitute therefor.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Alabama: That from and after the passage of this act it shall not be lawful for any person, persons, firm or corporation by himself or by themselves to sell furnish, give, or provide any minor under eighteen years of age to or with cigarettes, tobacco or cigarette paper any substitute for cigarettes or cigarette tobacco or cigarette paper.

Sec. 2. Be it further enacted, That any person violating the provisions of the preceding section of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be fined not less than ten nor more than fifty dollars for each offense, or be imprisoned in the county jail, or sentenced to hard labor for the county, for not exceeding thirty (30) days.

Sec. 3. Be it further enacted, That all justices of the peace and notaries public with powers of justice of the peace, shall have jurisdiction of all violations of the provisions of this act, such jurisdiction to be concurrent with that of the Circuit, City, Criminal and

Another year is entered upon for us, and with it the forebodings of financial depression, labor strikes, Congressional legislation and the general damnation that would be consequent thereto appear to be subsiding.

It has been a pleasing surprise in casting up accounts for the past year to find that the VIEW has been more than usually prosperous in spite of tight times and the low price of cotton. Our subscription list is the best to be desired, and if a business man at a distance wants a list of the most reliable, substantial and trustworthy citizens of the county he will naturally apply at this office.

If our advertising columns were in as great demand at home as in Birmingham and Montgomery we would be forced to print a larger paper. Some of our patrons mentioned have continued their advertising with us all the way from two to eight years, which is evidence that they have built up a good trade in this section by keeping their names before the people.

Few of our local business men have acted thus wisely, and the result is loss to us, to the community and to its business men. These are disagreeable but irrefutable facts which perhaps many new years will not change, and a large amount of trade which should be kept at home will continue to go to Birmingham and Montgomery merchants.

The subject is referred to in no spirit of complaint, as the VIEW has succeeded better than it expected to succeed on the encouragement received at its inception. We have been surprised quite as much as friends and family that in spite of continued feeble health we have been able to accomplish as much as we have in a business that is generally precarious at its best.

The county is continually growing in wealth and in population. Its progress is steady and sure. There is room yet for five thousand more homes and as many new and progressive citizens. The new year can be expected to bring much in this direction.

While the VIEW has been persistently and we think consistently Democratic, it has always endeavored to be conservative in politics, and its efforts have been to allay political discord and strife. It is a cause for congratulation that there is now much less bitterness among our home people on account of politics than there has been in years past. First one class and then another seemed to be "down on" the paper because at times we did not care to be pulled into politics any further than was consistent with our own ideas of propriety and right. Bitterness and bickerings, political or otherwise, have never been desired. Life is too uncertain, and the time is too far ahead to predict anything for the next campaign, as many of us may be in our graves before it is well entered upon. The indications are that no serious discord will be aroused. The Alliance farmers now seem to have the politics of the county in their own hands. Many good men are now among them to select good officers from, and if those Democrats who are not Alliancemen will expect nothing in the way of party plums, they will not be subject to disappointment. From the present outlook it is probable that a farmer will be placed in every office in the county two years hence. There was a time when we were apprehensive that if such was the case a proper consideration would not be given other classes. There is no reason for such apprehension now, since several of them have been tried, and with the exception of the remarkable but misguided gentleman who misrepresented the county in the Legislature two years ago, we have not heard of any serious complaint. Such an experiment as his is not likely to be tried again.

Let two men try two opposite policies. Let one man advertise in the home paper—not putting in an "ad" written in a minute on a scrap of paper, but preparing an announcement with care and study, changing it frequently, always with the same care, and keeping the series going steadily. Let the other man try any plan he pleases of pushing business—chromos, prizes, brass bands, balloon, real estate tricks, personal solicitation from house to house—anything he pleases—and see how it will come out. For the same money the newspaper advertiser will beat the other man two to one.—New Decatur Advertiser.

OVER THE COUNTY.

Neighborhood News Gathered by Our Correspondents.

Dixie Dots.

Mrs. M. A. Hare who has been quite sick for some time is now in Verbena for her health.

Our little town has been improving some. Mr. William Davis, of Dallas county, near Summerfield, has moved his interesting family here, and we are glad to have them in our midst.

Quite a destructive fire occurred on Mr. Buckner Harris' place on the 20th. A house containing over three hundred bushels of cotton seed and a quantity of fodder was burned, with all of the contents.

Nox.

Providence Points.

Married at the residence of the bride's father on the 25th inst., at 3 o'clock p. m., Mr. D. S. Roberson and Miss Ammie Callaway. The young couple start in life with a host of friends wishing them a long and happy life. May success ever crown them.

Christmas has passed away and business has been resumed to its normal state. It was a jolly Christmas.

Married at the residence of the bride's father on the 25th inst., Mr. C. R. Wells and Miss Pollie Chettie. May happiness be with them as long as time shall last.

Mr. Wm. A. Huckebee has purchased the farm of Mr. B. H. Chesnutt, and is now building. He will soon be ready to declare himself a farmer.

As farmers have succeeded so well by economizing, some of the merchants decided to use economy by mending and dying their wornout suit.

Mapesville Dots.

Our handsome young friend Frank Kelley, has been visiting here again. He asked his best girl if his blonde moustache was becoming? She replied, Yes, it is A COMING, and I hope it will BE when it comes.

We regret our kind neighbor, George Fox, has moved near Stanton.

Mr. Crumpton has moved into his beautiful new house, where his wife uses the broom as energetically as ever. Don't understand us over her husband's head.

Mrs. Mary DuBose has returned from Selma, leaving her sick daughter, Mrs. Alice DuBose in improved health.

Our young friend, Mr. William Walker, has just completed the most beautiful house in the county. We regret that it was not built in our growing town. We regret the family's sickness. Mr. Walker, Sr., has suffered many months with paralysis. Miss Sallie is convalescing from a long sickness of typhoid fever.

Mr. Bearden, while practicing with his new Winchester, unfortunately shot and killed a fine horse belonging to a good colored man.

Stanton Notes.

At four o'clock this morning the fire alarm awakened our town to see a cabin burn down belonging to Gregory & de Lavigne Co. The house was unoccupied. Some negroes had a dance in the building last night and toward the wind up of the frolic a shooting scrape occurred, but no one was hurt and it is supposed during the excitement the fire was communicated to the building. This makes the 3rd fire Stanton has had the past week. No damage was done to the other two as they were discovered in time.

O. H. P. Wright, C. C., W. T. McCarty, V. C., W. J. Ruddick, P. C., Warren McCarty, Prelate, C. W. Plant, K. of R. & S., I. G. White, M. of F. & M. of E., Micheal McCarty, M. at A., G. W. Lodge, I. G., W. H. Rouse, O. G. Representatives to the Grand Lodge, C. W. Plant and W. W. Little, Trustees, O. H. P. Wright, C. W. Plant and W. J. Ruddick. This Lodge is not quite one year old and has nearly doubled its membership.

News was received here this morning that Mr. Wm. Parnell, of the Dixie saw mill, was seriously ill with pneumonia.

Another dog of the Newfoundland breed and belonging to Mr. I. G. White was killed here this morning supposed to be mad. Mrs. White was bitten by the dog and from his strange action in other respects gives cause for believing him mad.

The meeting of the Baptist ministers was held here the past week.

Dr. W. C. Cleveland filled his regular appointment Saturday and Sunday at the Baptist Church.

The Farmers say they can get better prices for their cotton here than they can get in Selma, consequently the Alliance store is buying a good deal. In the neighborhood of 400 bales have already been shipped from the depot and the cotton continues to come in.

Mr. W. H. Welch, of the firm of Welch Bros., lumbermen at Chilton, on the E. T. Va. & Ga. railroad was happily married at the first Presbyterian Church in Selma on the morning of the 19th inst., to Miss Inez Love, of Selma. After the ceremony the happy couple returned to Chilton their future home.

Now is the time to subscribe for your county paper.

A friend of ours, a working man, hands us three of his thoughts in the three following paragraphs says an exchange, which seem to us worthy of a place in this column:

"If a man stands for the right and truth, though every other man's finger be pointed at him, though every woman's lips curl with scorn at the mention of his name, he stands in a majority for God and good angels are over with him, and greater are they that are for him, than those that be against him.

"To love and serve God in the beauty of holiness, is worth more to us than all the wealth and honor of worlds untold and unnumbered.

"Always leave the home with loving words, for they may be the last."

FARMERS' ALLIANCE NOTES

NEWS OF THE ORDER AND ITS MEMBERS.

WHAT IS BEING DONE IN THE VARIOUS SECTIONS FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF THE GREAT ORGANIZATION.—ECHOES FROM THE REFORM PRESS.

The State Alliance of Pennsylvania, was recently organized at Harrisburg. It is expected that a rapid growth of the order will begin at once, and the State soon rank among the foremost in the order.

⁂

Minnesota has an Alliance called the McKinley Bill Killers' Alliance. May all the kindly fates and all the good men and women in Minnesota assist that Alliance to kill the famous bill so dead that it can never have a resurrection in this world or in any other.—Progressive Farmer.

⁂

There is no ground for the claim that Alliance principles are not clearly defined. The English language could not more plainly express their meaning at no greater length. And Alliance members are everywhere united upon these principles. They will win.

⁂

Some of our friends of the press were very much afraid the National Alliance, lately in session at Ocala, Fla., would go into politics. Be quiet, brethren. The word politics has a wider and better meaning than partisanism; and Alliance men mean to use it in its widest and best sense in the future.—Progressive Farmer.

⁂

A dispatch of Saturday from Topeka, Kan., says: Jerry Simpson, Farmers' Alliance congressman-elect, from the seventh Kansas district, is becoming dangerous as a candidate in the race for the seat made vacant by the expiration of Ingalls's term. The farmers of the seventh district have espoused his cause, and now the third and sixth district farmers have caught the contagion.

⁂

The declaration of principles adopted at the national meeting will challenge the admiration of every candid, thinking man throughout the entire nation. Its demands are simple, plain, practical, and entirely within the provisions of the Constitution. There is nothing revolutionary in their character, and they could be easily and cheaply administered. The convention [illegible] honestly and [illegible]. These demands are limited almost entirely to the three great questions, land, transportation and currency. Upon these it speaks with no uncertain sound.—National Economist.

⁂

At the National Alliance and Industrial Union a commission was created to be known as the cotton commission, whose duty it is to visit the various cotton centers in America and Europe for the purpose of adjustment of tare, the uniformity of bales, the covering for cotton, to bring the producer and consumer closer together, and consider any and all questions connected with cotton, with a view of advancing the interests of the farmers. Communications may be addressed to either of the following commissioners: F. A. Clayton, 218 Gravier Street, New Orleans, La.; W. A. Broughton, Madison, Ga.; G. F. Gaither, Birmingham, Ala.

⁂

A RED-HOT RESOLUTION.

The grand council of the National Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union, passed the following resolution which all Alliancemen should read and carry out:

"Whereas many of the leading journals of the land are publishing the most false and malicious charges, and in their editorials attacking Alliancemen and Alliance measures; therefore be it resolved by this grand council, that all papers guilty of such publication be denounced as our most dangerous enemies, and unworthy of the support of Alliancemen.

"And also that reporters furnishing such matter to said papers be likewise condemned."

Mr. Humphrey, of Texas, president of the colored alliance, in reply to a question as to its membership, said: "We have now 1,200,000, of whom 100,000 are adult males. Our statistics show that seven-tenths of the negroes of the South are engaged in agriculture. We are organized in thirty States. The bulk of our membership is in the South Atlantic and Gulf States, distributed as follows: 100,000 in Alabama, 84,000 in Georgia, 90,000 in South Carolina, 90,000 in Mississippi, 90,000 in Texas, 20,000 in Arkansas, 50,000 in Louisiana, 50,000 in Virginia, 25,000 in Kentucky, 60,000 in Tennessee, 55,000 in North Carolina, and the rest scattered.

⁂

The Alliance of the Ninth Congressional District of Texas, in a recent convention unanimously adopted the following demands:

1. We demand of R. Q. Mills, our Congressman, and also of Senators Reagan and Coke, to urge the passage and vote for the demands of the Texas State Alliance adopted at its last session.

2. We demand that they urge the passage of and vote for the sub-treasury bill as introduced into the house at its last session.

3. We demand [of our national Congress to amend our Constitution, that our President and Senators may be elected by a direct vote of the people.

TALK WITH DELEGATES.

A dispatch of Thursday, from Topeka, says: The Kansas delegation to the National Farmers' Alliance convention, at Ocala, Fla., has returned. They all speak in the warmest terms of the hospitality of the Southern people, and are encouraged to renew their organization and work in Kansas. "The call issued by John H. Rice for a national conference to organize a third party was unauthorized by the meeting at Ocala, and the Alliance North and South will pay no attention to it." These were the words of Dr. L. McLallin, editor of The Alliance Advocate, official organ of the Kansas Alliance, on his return from the convention. He spoke with earnestness and as one having authority to speak for the great organization he represented. "We are not ready to consider a third party movement yet," continued Dr. McLallin. "It is too early, and such a movement is premature. First, we want relief from the burdens that depress agriculture and make slaves out of the men who produce that which the people consume. We want to elevate agriculture and secure legislation which will throw protection around this most important of all industries in this country." Dr. McLallen said he found the colored men of the south aroused on the questions agitated by the Alliance, and that thousands of them would hereafter vote with the whites on the great issues advocated by the National Alliance. "Sectionalism is dead," he continued. "The negroes have organized and they will no longer be the willing tools of the bloody shirt Republicans and carpet baggers of the south." Never was the Alliance so firmly united in Kansas as at the present time. The leaders who attended the Ocala convention are looking after the senatorial contest, which will occur on the 27th day of January. Every effort possible will be made by the republicans to re-elect Ingalls, and this fact alone has put the leaders of the Alliance on guard, and every movement will be watched from this date until the ballot is had. The situation is simply this: The Alliance has ninety members, or seven more than enough to elect. There is no possible way for Ingalls to be re-elected without the Alliance vote.

THIRD PARTY TALK.

Mr. McGrath, president of the Kansas Alliance, in an interview Thursday said, the legislative committee of the National Alliance will meet in Washington some time in February. "Thirty-five states," he said, "will be represented at the meeting, and the third party movement will be one of the principal things to be acted upon. This movement said Mr. McGrath, "will eventually embrace all labor organizations in the United States. In fact, all of them are committed to it now, except the 'grange,' and most of the 'granges' are members of the Farmers' Alliance. I cannot say when the party will be organized, but it will be done at the proper time."

A LATER REPORT.

A Topeka dispatch says: The following interview with President McGrath, published Monday, would indicate that the Alliance has, for the present, decided to drop the third party movement. He says: "The agitation in the South over the Lodge bill precludes the possibility of any indepent movement at this time. While in Ocala I investigated the conditions as thoroughly as my limited stay would permit, and I came to the conclusion that more time was needed. It will come about in time, but the time is not this year." A delegation of Kansas editors which has returned from a tour through the South, having made a thorough investigation of the farmers' move there, found that a large majority of southern farmers believe in working for their reforms within the Democratic party. In Louisiana, for example, the editors found five advocates of the third party move. The president of the Alliance in that State, Thomas S. Adams, secretary of the State board of agriculture, in a conversation with a correspondent, who accompanied the Kansas delegation said: "The political condition in this State precludes the possibility of an independent move at this time. With us it is a battle for white supremacy, and any movement which will divide the white people politically will not find favor." The editors found that Mr. Adams expressed the sentiment pretty generally held by southerners, and for this reason they also concluded that it would be impossible to do anything with the new movement at this time.

WASHINGTON NEWS.

SECOND SESSION OF THE FIFTY-FIRST CONGRESS.

THE LAW-MAKERS OF UNCLE SAM'S DOMAIN AGAIN AT WORK—ROUTINE OF THE HOUSE AND SENATE—EACH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS TERSELY TOLD.

When the senate met Tuesday Mr. Hoar concluded his speech of Monday. A sensation was created when Edward O. Walcott, of Colorado, arose and said: "I am opposed to this bill, and shall vote against it." This proved to be a bombshell, coming as it did from a native of Maine and a staunch republican. When Mr. Wolcott concluded, all the senators left the floor for the cloakrooms to discuss the effect of the speech. It had created the sensation of the season, but was only like the explosion of a firecracker to the bombs that followed. Of course for a while there was a calm, which was filled in by short speeches from Senator Stewart, of Nevada, on free coinage, and by Senator Reagan, of Texas, on the force bill and the financial condition of the country. Then the second bomb exploded, and from that time on there was a general bombardment of Mr. Hoar and his bill, all coming from the republican side. During the long fight of the republicans the democrats remained silent, but upon every face was a broad smile. Each and every one of them were delighted, for the fight was now a republican fight, and the chances are Walcott, Teller and Stewart will be reinforced by other western republican senators, who will speak out against the force bill and cloture rule.

Senator Teller threw another bomb into the ranks of the force bill camp Wednesday when he announced to Mr. Hoar that the Mississippi constitution was as just and fair as that of Massachusetts. Then he went on, to the amazement of Mr. Hoar, to show that even if the Mississippi constitution, which he had spent so much time in denouncing, was unjust, there was not a word in the force bill that could remedy it. He therefore thought it time for such talk to close. This and Senator George's speech, explaining the Mississippi constitution, were the only incidents of the day. After speaking for four and a half hours Mr. George said that he was weary and tired and would like to stop now, and to have the privilege of finishing his speech when the senate meets again. No objection to his request came from the republican side of the chamber.

NOTES.

The members of the commission on the location of a navy yard on the Gulf coast, will leave Washington shortly for New Orleans.

A vigorous effort will be made as soon as possible to get a day fixed for the consideration of the swamp lands bill. The bill has very strong support on both sides of the house.

The president, on Wednesday, nominated to be postmasters: Virginia—Alex G. Foster, Clifton Forge. South Carolina—Thos. N. Torbert, Abbeville Courthouse. Alabama—Jefferson H. Williamson, Auburn. Florida—Robert C. Scrimgeour, Titusville. Georgia—Charles H. Merrill, Carrollton.

There is any amount of talk just now, of an extra session just after the 4th of March. The leaders on both sides say if the force bill is not gotten out of the way within two weeks, it will be impossible for congress to finish the work before it by the 4th of March. The democrats are not at all alarmed. They would welcome an extra session.

THE CRACKER MEN

TO ERECT A MAMMOTH "TRUST" BUILDING IN NEW YORK.

The cracker trust is to erect an enormous factory in New York. This trust is a corporation of the principal biscuit bakers in the United States, mostly in the eastern, middle and central states. The building is to be built on a large scale, and when completed will be 200x247 feet in dimension, and will in all be six stories in height. The whole block will be composed of four buildings, which will present a solid front as of one building. It will take nearly two years to build it and will cost nearly $2,000,000. The material to be used is brick, granite and iron throughout.

TEXAS TIN.

REPORTED DISCOVERY OF LARGE DEPOSITS ON COLORADO RIVER.

A San Antonio dispatch of Monday, says: Tin has been discovered within one hundred miles from here. A prominent civil engineer has just arrived with specimens of it. He says that it has been found on the Colorado river, in Llano county, south of the Bielknapf iron hill. The specimens brought here are conclusive. Sixty deposits are already located.

A FINE SHOWING.

THE ANNUAL REVIEW OF THE SOUTH'S PROGRESS.

The Manufacturers' Record publishes in this week's issue its annual review of the industrial progress of the south for 1890, showing great activity and prosperity throughout that section. The total assessed value of property for 1890 is nearly $4,500,000,000 a gain of $270,000,000 over 1889, and of $1,600,000,000 over 1880. The number of national banks in the south is 590, with an aggregate capital of $90,768,705, an increase during the year of 104 banks and $10,985,000 capital. Ten years ago the south had 230 national banks, with a total capital of $43,438,985. According to the report of the United States comptroller of currency the net earnings of all southern national banks for the twelve months ended November 30, 1890, were $10,583,793, or an average of 11½ per cent on the total capital.

During the year 2,499 miles of railroad were built in the south, against 2,296 miles in 1889. Gross earnings of all Southern railroads for the first eleven months of 1890 were $100,894,517, against $90,200,570 for the same time in 1889, an increase of $10,604,047.

The total value of foreighn exports from all southern ports for the first eleven months of 1890, was $268,293,000, an increase of $24,141,010 over the corresponding months of 1889, while the increase in the balance of the country was only $4,837,477, the increase at southern ports being five times as great as the combined gain at all other United States ports.

The production of pig iron for the year foots up to about 1,960,000 tons, a gain of 358,000 tons over 1889, of 830,000 tons over 1888, and more than 1,000,000 tons over 1887.

The total production of cotton for the last six years has been 42,000,000 bales, worth, including the value of seed sold, about $2,300,000,000, or an average of nearly $400,000,000 a year.

The consumption of cotton by southern mills was 549,458 bales last year against 266,000 bales in 1885, a gain of over 100 per cent. During the year 8,917 new manufacturing enterprises, covering every variety of industry from tack works to steel works, were organized in the south, making a total during the last five years of over 17,000 new enterprises.

IN THE WOODS.

PECULIAR PREDICAMENT OF A TENNESSEE RAILROAD.

A Nashville dispatch says: When Judge Jackson appointed a receiver for the Decatur, Chesapeake and New Orleans railroad, some weeks ago, its affairs were known to be in a very bad condition. Just how bad was shown when Receiver W. L. Frierson filed his report in the United States circuit Tuesday. The road was intended to run seventy-eight miles from Decatur, Ala., to Shelbyville, Tenn. Fourty-three miles of the road is complete, but both ends are in the woods. There is enough material in hand to complete the road, but every dollar's worth has been attached by the creditors. The total indebtedness is about $800,000. Judgments to the amount of $100,084 have already been secured, and suits are pending for $227,000.

A LOST STEAMER.

THE THANEMORE WITH FIFTY PEOPLE ON BOARD PROBABLY SUNK.

A Baltimore dispatch of Friday says: Patterson, Ramsay & Co., agents of the Johnson line at this port have given up for lost the steamship Thanemore, which left Baltimore, Nov. 26th, for London. She passed out of the capes November 27th, twelve hours ahead of the Atlantic transport liner Maryland, upon which Captain Alex Luckhurst and three men lost their lives, the vessel being forced be put into Philadelphia to make repairs. The Thanemore had a cargo aboard valued at $175,235, and 480 head of cattle. The firms shipping the cattle have insured against total loss. Thirty-four men comprised the officers and crew, and there were also twelve cattlemen on board.

FOUR BLOCKS OF BUSINESS HOUSES SWEPT AWAY.

A terrible conflagration raged in London, on Tuesday. The scene of the fire was in Queen Victoria, and Thomas streets, near Black Friar's bridge. Numerous warehouses were swept out of existence. The fire was the most destructive in the history of the city of recent years. It originated in a building occupied by O. Davidson & Son, paper and paper felt manufacturers, and paper bag manufacturers, at 19 Queen Victoria street. Four blocks were destroyed, and the amount of damages as far as known is estimated to be $4,860,000 or $2,000,000.

NEWS OF THE SOUTH

BRIEF NOTES OF AN INTERESTING NATURE.

FIFTY ITEMS FROM ALL POINTS IN THE SOUTHERN STATES THAT WILL ENTERTAIN THE READER—ACCIDENTS, FIRES, FLOODS, ETC.

A half interest in the Methodist Advocate, in Chattanooga, has been sold to Rev. Horace E. Warner, of Cedar Falls, Iowa.

H. C. Markes & Co., dry goods merchants of Anniston, Ala., have made an assignment. Liabilities, $25,000; assets, $40,000.

General Francis E. Spinner, ex-treasurer of the United States, died at Brooklynsburg, near Jacksonville, Fla., Wednesday evening.

Paul Conrad, of New Orleans, was on Wednesday elected president of the Louisiana State Lottery Company, vice M. A. Dauphin, deceased.

A $100,000 fire destroyed the business portion of San Augustine, Texas, Tuesday. The fire is supposed to have started from negro gamblers in a stable loft.

A committee has been appointed at Nashville to arrange for the reception and entertainment of guests on Jackson's Day, January 8. A large crowd is expected.

The trade council of Birmingham, Ala., has appointed a committee to bring about a conference between the striking coal miners and coal operators, and, if possible, settle the strike.

Samuel Black, general merchant, of Natchez, Miss., assigned Saturday. Preferred creditors $8,500; total liabilities estimated at $30,000. Britton & Koontz' bank loses $7,000.

The Chattanooga, Rome and Columbus Railroad has been sold to the Central Railroad and Banking Company of Georgia. The deeds have been signed, and January 1st the day appointed for the transfer.

The police, of Chattanooga, have received notice that Peter Wilson, a well to do merchant of that city, has been missing from his home since last Thursday. When last seen he had $350 in his pocket, and foul play is expected.

The Carpenters' Union has addressed a letter to the contractors of Chattanooga asking an advance of 15 per cent., to take effect May 1. The carpenters give four months notice, in order that all contracts under way may be completed. The decision of the contractors has not yet been made public.

A Jackson, Miss., dispatch says: Another investigation is shortly to commence of ex-State Treasurer Hemingway's books. This time the investigation is to be thorough in every respect. Colonel Hemingway and his friends have never been satisfied with the investigation made of his books so far, claiming that they were not of the kind to unearth the complicated errors which they still believe exist.

A review of Richmond's business for 1890, shows that of manufactures there are 788 plants, giving employment to 21,018 persons; capital employed, $16,508,947; sales of manufactured products, $34,580,947—an increase of $2,000,000. The reassessment of lands and lots shows a total value of $40,000,000—an increase of $8,000,000. Bank clearances, $112,503,000—increase, $5,000,000. During the year 939 new houses were erected.

A BANK ROBBED.

BUT THE PERPETRATORS PURSUED AND CAPTURED.

Three men entered the South Chicago National bank, at Chicago, about one o'clock Monday afternoon. Two of them engaged the cashier's attention, while the third slipped through the door and, coming up behind the cashier, dealt him a blow which knocked him senseless. Then the three quickly rifled the bank and dashed away in their buggy. After a chase of seven miles, the police captured two of the robbers at Fiftieth street and recovered all the money—$4,500. Several shots were exchanged between the police and the fleeing robbers, and one of the latter was seriously wounded in the thigh. The third robber is still at large.

A CAUTIOUS INVENTOR.

"I can see a profit on what I have bought so far," said an investor who had spent the afternoon driving about the country with a real estate man, and who had bought a number of tracts of good land near a booming city. "But what could a man pass on that?" They had pulled up in front of a piece of land so stony that it looked as though it would take a month's work with dynamite to clear it.

"Raise on it," said the real estate man. "Why, he can raise on the agricultural implements that would be required to work it."—New York Sun.

FIGHT WITH INDIANS.

TROOPS SURROUNDS BIG FOOT'S BAND AND A CONFLICT ENSUES.

A special dispatch from Pine Ridge Agency, says that couriers from Bad Land's, who arrived there Monday morning announced that a bloody and desperate conflict occurred on Porcupine creek, between United States troops and hostiles. Big Foot's band had been surrounded by troops when the former were being disarmed by Colonel Forsyth, a bloody encounter took place. Captain Wallace and five soldiers of the seven cavalry were killed; Lieutenant Garlington and fifteen men wounded. The Indians are being hunted up in all directions.

ANOTHER ENGAGEMENT.

A special of Tuesday from Rushville, Neb., says: Advices from the seat of war give news of another encounter between the troops and Indians at a point within four miles of the agency. The Seventh and Ninth cavalry were just coming in from Monday's battlefield, followed at some distance by their provision train. On reaching the point named, a large band of Indians, headed by Chief Two Strike, dashed suddenly upon the train, captured it, and were making off towards the Bad Lands when the cavalry wheeled and gave pursuit. In the battle which followed, over thirty Indians were wounded, but no soldiers were killed.

According to the latest report Two Strikes' Indians had up to Monday been considered peaceable and subdued, but their sudden change of mind causes the gravest fears that perhaps none of the so-called friendlies can be relied upon.

Reliable news is also at hand that Col. Henry is now approaching the agency with 700 Indians, captured in the Bad Lands. This is believed to include all of the rebels in the reservation, and hopes are entertained of a speedy settlement. It has cost the lives of about 250 Indians, twenty-five or thirty soldiers killed and wounded to effect this, if indeed it may be said that peace is yet established. The body of the gallant Captain Wallace and other dead soldiers, will be shipped to Fort Robinson, the nearest military post.

THE COTTON MOVEMENT.

THE NEW ORLEANS COTTON EXCHANGE FIGURES FOR LAST QUARTER.

The following is the New Orleans crop statement from September 1st to December 26th inclusive: Ports received 4,221,428, against 4,070,056 last year; overland to mills and Canada, 609,742, against 531,436; interior stocks in excess of September 1st, 548,201, against 425,347; southern mill takings, 237,283, against 236,490; amount of crop brought into sight during 117 days, 5,606,654, against 5,253,329; northern spinners' takings and Canada overland, 1,151,264, against 1,018,902; increase of stocks at ports and twenty-nine leading interior southern markets during the week, 135,988, against 185,247.

A RETROSPECT.

THE BUSINESS DISASTERS OCCURING THE PAST YEAR.

The business failures occuring throughout the United States for the entire year of 1890, as reported to R. G. Dunn & Co.'s mercantile agency, are 10,907 in number, being but twenty-five greater than in the year 1889. The liabilities, however, show a very large increase over 1889, being $189,000,000 against $148,000,000, an increase of over $40,000,000, the largest liabilities since 1884, when they amounted to $225,000,000. In Canada the failures for the year are 1,947 in number, as against 1,777 the year previous. The liabilities are $18,000,000 in 1890 against $14,000,000 in 1889.

The Cardiff Giant Humbug.

One of the men who made a fortune out of the Cardiff giant humbug nearly twenty years ago died in New York recently. His name was George Hull. He was formerly a tobacconist in Binghamton, and was the author of the fraud, which he engaged an Italian stonecutter of Chicago to carry out. A large gypsum slab was obtained in Iowa and cut into the form of a gigantic man. The stone was, artificially colored, to give the appearance of great age, and then buried in the vicinity of Cardiff, where it was accidentally (of course) discovered and exhumed, and exhibited about the country as a prehistoric figure. The imposition was so clever that many scientific men were deceived by it.—Chicago Herald.

ANTOINE LE LORRIER, aged 106 years, died at Kingston, Ont. He was born near Quebec in 1787 and served in the war of 1812. He was in fair health until last Tuesday. His end was painless. His wife, ninety-three years old, died in the last house, Mr. Le Lorrier, a week before his death. Sixteen children in his family survive.

THE Treasury Department has decided that goods taken to Canada to be spun cannot be returned to the United States free of duty.

TELEGRAPH AND CABLE.

WHAT IS GOING ON IN THE BUSY WORLD.

A SUMMARY OF OUTSIDE AFFAIRS CONDENSED FROM NEWSY DISPATCHES FROM UNCLE SAM'S DOMAIN AND WHAT THE CABLE BRINGS.

Owing to the cold weather throughout Great Britain, a number of leading industries have been forced to stop work.

Dispatches of Wednesday say: Intensely cold weather prevails in Hungary. The Danube is frozen over at Budapest and the ice block extends from Pressburg nearly to Vienna.

The value of imports into the United States for November was $63,930,848, against $58,994,764 last year. Exports during the same month were $80,118,419, against $93,713,826 in 1889.

On Wednesday Hope & Co., bankers of Amsterdam, filed a suit against the state board of liquidation of Louisiana asking the state board to fund $4,000,000 in bonds into consolidated bonds. The board had refused and hence the suit.

The Frick Coke Company, of Scottdale, Pa., gave notice Wednesday that they will shut down 1,100 more coke ovens indefinitely next week, which will throw about 1,200 men out of work. No cause is given for the shut down.

The Norfolk and Western railroad has purchased a control of the Shenandoah Valley, and have given out a contract to build into Washington, D. C., from somewhere near Luray, Va. The contract provides for the completion of the road within a year.

The reorganization of the board of directors of the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Company took place at New York Wednesday, resulting in the reinstatement of John H. Inman, N. Baxter, Jr., and their associates in the control of the property.

The Washington Protective Association, composed of colored citizens of that State, has been organized at Tacoma. The object of the association is stated to be to encourage immigration of colored people to the State of Washington and to improve their condition.

The Southern Cotton Oil Company was grated a writ of certiorari in New York state Wednesday, returnable within twenty days. The company claims it is not a state organization and is exempt from tax in New York. The company has mills in the principal southern cities. A tax of $2,392 has been levied on its capital stock.

Dispatches of Wednesday from Glasgow say: General managers of Scotch railways have announced that the strikers have been, to all intents and purposes, defeated. The Caledonian railway has already reinstated a large number of strikers, who have gone back to work on the company's terms. Trains are now running regularly.

Chief of Police Coyde, of San Diego, Cal., on Tuesday, received a letter from a man visiting in that city from Independence, Mo., informing him that the writer had met face to face on the streets of San Diego, the notorious Missouri bandit, Jim Cummings, for whom a standing reward is offered dead or alive. The writer refused to give his name for fear of vengeance from the members of the Cummings gang, who infest the locality where he lives.

A meeting of the manufacturers and jobbers of the plate glass trade will be held in Pittsburg, Pa., in the near future. At the recent New York meeting, it was decided to advance prices 50 per cent, but since the western men have made a stand for 25 per cent advance, the avowed intention of the fraternal combine is to keep plate glass prices at the highest figures possible, and at the same time keep it low enough to shut out all importations.

RUSSIAN HATRED.

A NEW LAW PROMULGATED AGAINST THE JEWS.

St. Petersburg, Russia, dispatches say that the new law against the Jews will be promulgated with the opening of the new year. It forbids the a lien leasing or mortgaging to a Jew in any case within the empire; all privileges heretofore granted to certain Jewish families as to ownership of real estate are recalled; Jewish artisans who have been permitted to reside outside the Pale will have to return. The most disastrous consequences upon the Jews are hardly to be calculated. Countless numbers of Jews are expelling [illegible]

OAHEEN'S

WE ARE MASTERS OF THE SITUATION!

Our famous stock of Fall Goods masters of others as to low prices, quality and selection! We are second to none in the South. Our stock is bought cheaper than others from the simple reason that we pay spot cash for our stock as we buy it. Manufacturers very often need the cash, therefore we buy a great part of our stock somewhat less than manufacturers' prices. Our stock is a great deal, by 200 per cent., more numerous than others. We buy and sell larger quantities than others. Our styles are exclusive and we control several exclusive lines of popular goods, which the public will buy because they want the best and cheapest.

Room is what we want. We must have it. How do we intend to get it? We will sell Dry Goods, Milinery, Gents' Furnishing goods, House Furnishing goods, so low that they will just simply fly out of our large establishment.

A VISION OF LOVELINESS! A HOUSE FULL OF CONVINCING TRUTHS!

Our Fall and Winter business is starting out under very flattering auspices! We can so far look ahead that we can see what a grand success this season will be with us. We are doing the best business of our line in the city, in the past, now, forever and always!

FARMERS' ALLIANCE NOTES

NEWS OF THE ORDER AND ITS MEMBERS.

WHAT IS BEING DONE IN THE VARIOUS SECTIONS FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF THE GREAT ORGANIZATION.—ECHOES FROM THE REFORM PRESS.

The State Alliance of Pennsylvania was recently organized at Harrisburg. It is expected that a rapid growth of the order will begin at once, and the State soon rank among the foremost in the order.

⁂

Minnesota has an Alliance called the McKinley Bill Killers' Alliance. May all the kindly fates and all the good men and women in Minnesota assist that Alliance to kill the famous bill so dead that it can never have a resurrection in this world or in any other.—Progressive Farmer.

⁂

There is no ground for the claim that Alliance principles are not clearly defined. The English language could not more plainly express their meaning at no greater length. And Alliance members are everywhere united upon these principles. They will win.

⁂

Some of our friends of the press were very much afraid the National Alliance, lately in session at Ocala, Fla., would go into politics. Be quiet, brethren. The word politics has a wider and better meaning than partisanism; and Alliance men mean to use it in its widest and best sense in the future.—Progressive Farmer.

⁂

A dispatch of Saturday from Topeka, Kan., says: Jerry Simpson, Farmers' Alliance congressman-elect, from the seventh Kansas district, is becoming dangerous as a candidate in the race for the seat made vacant by the expiration of Ingalls's term. The farmers of the seventh district have espoused his cause, and now the third and sixth district farmers have caught the contagion.

⁂

The declaration of principles adopted at the national meeting will challenge the admiration of every candid, thinking man throughout the entire nation. Its demands are simple, plain, practical, and entirely within the provisions of the Constitution. There is nothing revolutionary in their character, and they could be easily and cheaply administered. The convention [illegible]ly, honestly and [illegible]ation. These demands are limited almost entirely to the three great questions, land, transportation and currency. Upon these it speaks with no uncertain sound.—National Economist.

⁂

At the National Alliance and Industrial Union a commission was created to be known as the cotton commission, whose duty it is to visit the various cotton centers in America and Europe for the purpose of adjustment of tare, the uniformity of bales, the covering for cotton, to bring the producer and consumer closer together, and consider any and all questions connected with cotton, with a view of advancing the interests of the farmers. Communications may be addressed to either of the following commissioners: F. A. Clayton, 216 Gravier Street, New Orleans, La.; W. A. Broughton, Madison, Ga.; G. F. Gaither, Birmingham, Ala.

⁂

A RED-HOT RESOLUTION.

The grand council of the National Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union, passed the following resolution which all Alliancemen should read and carry out:

"Whereas many of the leading journals of the land are publishing the most false and malicious charges, and in their editorials attacking Alliancemen and Alliance measures; therefore be it resolved by this grand council, that all papers guilty of such publication be denounced as our most dangerous enemies, and unworthy of the support of Alliancemen.

"And also that reporters furnishing such matter to said papers be likewise condemned."

Mr. Humphrey, of Texas, president of the colored alliance, in reply to a question as to its membership, said: "We have now 1,200,000, of whom 100,000 are adult males. Our statistics show that seven-tenths of the negroes of the South are engaged in agriculture. We are organized in thirty States. The bulk of our membership is in the South Atlantic and Gulf States, distributed at follows: 100,000 in Alabama, 84,000 in Georgia, 90,000 in South Carolina, 90,000 in Mississippi, 80,000 in Texas, 80,000 in Arkansas, 50,000 in Louisiana, 50,000 in Virginia, 25,000 in Kentucky, 93,000 in [illegible], 80,000 in North [illegible]

⁂

[illegible]sional District of Texas, in a recent convention [illegible] adopted the following:

1. We demand of R. Q. Mills, our Congressman, and also of Senators Reagan and Coke, to urge the passage and vote for the demands of the Texas State Alliance adopted at its last session.

2. We demand that they urge the passage of and vote for the sub-treasury bill as introduced into the house at its last session.

3. We demand [illegible] of our national Congress to amend our Constitution, that our President and Senators may be elected by a direct vote of the people.

TALK WITH DELEGATES.

A dispatch of Thursday, from Topeka, says: The Kansas delegation to the National Farmers' Alliance convention, at Ocala, Fla., has returned. They all speak in the warmest terms of the hospitality of the Southern people, and are encouraged to renew their organization and work in Kansas. "The call issued by John H. Rice for a national conference to organize a third party was unauthorized by the meeting at Ocala, and the Alliance North and South will pay no attention to it." These were the words of Dr. L. McLallin, editor of The Alliance Advocate, official organ of the Kansas Alliance, on his return from the convention. He spoke with earnestness and as one having authority to speak for the great organization he represented. "We are not ready to consider a third party movement yet," continued Dr. McLallin. "It is too early, and such a movement is premature. First, we want relief from the burdens that depress agriculture and make slaves out of the men who produce that which the people consume. We want to elevate agriculture and secure legislation which will throw protection around this most important of all industries in this country." Dr. McLallen said he found the colored men of the south aroused on the questions agitated by the Alliance, and that thousands of them would hereafter vote with the whites on the great issues advocated by the National Alliance. "Sectionalism is dead," he continued. "The negroes have organized and they will no longer be the willing tools of the bloody shirt Republicans and carpet baggers of the south." Never was the Alliance so firmly united in Kansas as at the present time. The leaders who attended the Ocala convention are looking after the senatorial contest, which will occur on the 27th day of January. Every effort possible will be made by the republicans to re-elect Ingalls, and this fact alone has put the leaders of the Alliance on guard, and every movement will be watched from this date until the ballot is had. The situation is simply this: The Alliance has ninety members, or seven more than enough to elect. There is no possible way for Ingalls to be re-elected without the Alliance vote.

THIRD PARTY TALK.

Mr. McGrath, president of the Kansas Alliance, in an interview Thursday said, the legislative committee of the National Alliance will meet in Washington some time in February. "Thirty-five states," he said, "will be represented at the meeting, and the third party movement will be one of the principal things to be acted upon. This movement said Mr. McGrath, "will eventually embrace all labor organizations in the United States. In fact, all of them are committed to it now, except the 'grange,' and most of the 'grangers' are members of the Farmers' Alliance. I cannot say when the party will be organized, but it will be done at the proper time."

A LATER REPORT.

A Topeka dispatch says: The following interview with President McGrath, published Monday, would indicate that the Alliance has, for the present, decided to drop the third party movement. He says: "The agitation in the South over the Lodge bill precludes the possibility of any indepent movement at this time. While in Ocala I investigated the conditions as thoroughly as my limited stay would permit, and I came to the conclusion that more time was needed. It will come about in time, but the time is not this year." A delegation of Kansas editors which has returned from a tour through the South, having made a thorough investigation of the farmers' move there, found that a large majority of southern farmers believe in working for their reforms within the Democratic party. In Louisiana, for example, the editors found four advocates of the third party move. The president of the Alliance in that State, Thomas S. Adams, secretary of the State board of agriculture, in a conversation with a correspondent, who accompanied the Kansas delegation said: "The political condition in this State precludes the possibility of an independent move at this time. With us it is a battle for white supremacy, and [illegible] which [illegible] the [illegible] vot." The editors found that Mr. Adams expressed the sentiment pretty generally [illegible] they also concluded that it would be impossible to do anything with the new [illegible] at this time.

WASHINGTON NEWS.

SECOND SESSION OF THE FIFTY-FIRST CONGRESS.

THE LAW-MAKERS OF UNCLE SAM'S DOMAIN AGAIN AT WORK—ROUTINE OF THE HOUSE AND SENATE—EACH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS TERSELY TOLD.

When the senate met Tuesday Mr. Hoar concluded his speech of Monday. A sensation was created when Edward O. Walcott, of Colorado, arose and said: "I am opposed to this bill, and shall vote against it." This proved to be a bombshell, coming as it did from a native of Maine and a staunch republican. When Mr. Wolcott concluded, all the senators left the floor for the cloakrooms to discuss the effect of the speech. It had created the sensation of the season, but was only like the explosion of a firecracker to the bombs that followed. Of course for a while there was a calm, which was filled in by short speeches from Senator Stewart, of Nevada, on free coinage, and by Senator Reagan, of Texas, on the force bill and the financial condition of the country. Then the second bomb exploded, and from that time on there was a general bombardment of Mr. Hoar and his bill, all coming from the republican side. During the long fight of the republicans the democrats remained silent, but upon every face was a broad smile. Each and every one of them were delighted, for the fight was now a republican fight, and the chances are Walcott, Teller and Stewart will be reinforced by other western republican senators, who will speak out against the force bill and cloture rule.

Senator Teller threw another bomb into the ranks of the force bill camp Wednesday when he announced to Mr. Hoar that the Mississippi constitution was as just and fair as that of Massachusetts. Then he went on, to the amazement of Mr. Hoar, to show that even if the Mississippi constitution, which he had spent so much time in denouncing, was unjust, there was not a word in the force bill that could remedy it. He therefore thought it time, for such talk to close. This and Senator George's speech, explaining the Mississippi constitution, were the only incidents of the day. After speaking for four and a half hours Mr. George said that he was weary and tired and would like to stop now, and to have the privilege of finishing his speech when the senate meets again. No objection to his request came from the republican side of the chamber.

NOTES.

The members of the commission on the location of a navy yard on the Gulf coast, will leave Washington shortly for New Orleans.

A vigorous effort will be made as soon as possible to get a day fixed for the consideration of the swamp lands bill. The bill has very strong support on both sides of the house.

The president, on Wednesday, nominated to be postmasters: Virginia—Alex G. Foster, Clifton Forge. South Carolina—Thos. N. Torbert, Abbeville Courthouse. Alabama—Jefferson H. Williamson, Auburn. Florida—Robert C. Scrimgeour, Titusville. Georgia—Charles H. Merrill, Carrollton.

There is any amount of talk just now, of an extra session just after the 4th of March. The leaders on both sides say if the force bill is not gotten out of the way within two weeks, it will be impossible for congress to finish the work before it by the 4th of March. The democrats are not at all alarmed. They would welcome an extra session.

THE CRACKER MEN

TO ERECT A MAMMOTH "TRUST" BUILDING IN NEW YORK.

The cracker trust is to erect an enormous factory in New York. This trust is a combination of the principal biscuit bakers in the United States, mostly in the eastern, middle and central states. The building is to be built on a large scale, and when completed will be 200x200 feet in dimension, and will in all be six stories in height. The whole block will be composed of four buildings, which will present a solid front as of one building. It will take nearly two years to build it and will cost nearly $2,000,000. The material to be used is brick, granite and iron throughout.

A FINE SHOWING.

THE ANNUAL REVIEW OF THE SOUTH'S PROGRESS.

The Manufacturers' Record publishes in this week's issue its annual review of the industrial progress of the south for 1890, showing great activity and prosperity throughout that section. The total assessed value of property for 1890 is nearly $4,500,000,000 a gain of $270,000,000 over 1889, and of $1,600,000,000 over 1880. The number of national banks in the south is 590, with an aggregate capital of $90,703,705, an increase during the year of 104 banks and $10,985,000 capital. Ten years ago the south had 220 national banks, with a total capital of $43,448,985. According to the report of the United States comptroller of currency the net earnings of all southern national banks for the twelve months ended November 30, 1890, were $10,583,798, or an average of 11¾ per cent on the total capital.

During the year 2,499 miles of railroad were built in the South, against 2,296 miles in 1889. Gross earnings of all Southern railroads for the first eleven months of 1890 were $100,894,517, against $90,990,670 for the same time in 1889, an increase of $10,604,047.

The total value of foreighn exports from all southern ports for the first eleven months of 1890, was $268,298,000, an increase of $24,141,010 over the corresponding months of 1889, while the increase in the balance of the country was only $4,887,477, the increase at southern ports being five times as great as the combined gain at all other United States ports.

The production of pig iron for the year foots up to about 1,900,000 tons, a gain of 385,000 tons over 1889, of 630,000 tons over 1888, and more than 1,000,000 tons over 1887.

The total production of cotton for the last six years has been 42,000,000 bales, worth, including the value of seed sold, about $2,300,000,000, or an average of nearly $400,000,000 a year.

The consumption of cotton by southern mills was 549,458 bales last year against 266,000 bales in 1883, a gain of over 100 per cent. During the year 2,917 new manufacturing enterprises, covering every variety of industry, from tack works to steel works, were organized in the south, making a total during the last five years of over 17,000 new enterprises.

IN THE WOODS.

PECULIAR PREDICAMENT OF A TENNESSEE RAILROAD.

A Nashville dispatch says: When Judge Jackson appointed a receiver for the Decatur, Chesapeake and New Orleans railroad, some weeks ago, its affairs were known to be in a very bad condition. Just how bad was shown when Receiver W. L. Frierson filed his report in the United States circuit Tuesday. The road was intended to run seventy-eight miles from Decatur, Ala., to Shelbyville, Tenn. Fourty-three miles of the road is complete, but both ends are in the woods. There is enough material in hand to complete the road, but every dollar's worth has been attached by the creditors. The total indebtedness is about $800,000. Judgments to the amount of $100,934 have already been secured, and suits are pending for $327,000.

A LOST STEAMER.

THE THANEMORE WITH FIFTY PEOPLE ON A BOARD PROBABLY SUNK.

A Baltimore dispatch of Friday says: Patterson, Ramsay & Co., agents of the Johnson line at this port have given up for lost the steamship Thanemore, which left Baltimore, Nov. 26th, for London. She passed out of the capes November 27th, twelve hours ahead of the Atlantic transport liner Maryland, upon which Captain Alex Luckhurst and three men lost their lives, the vessel being forced be put into Philadelphia to make repairs. The Thanemore had a cargo aboard valued at $175,233, and 480 head of cattle. The firms shipping the cattle were insured against total loss. Thirty-four men comprised the officers and crew, and there were also twelve cattlemen on board.

A LONDON BLAZE.

FOUR BLOCKS OF BUSINESS HOUSES SWEPT AWAY.

BRIEF NOTES OF AN INTERESTING NATURE.

FIFTY ITEMS FROM ALL POINTS IN THE SOUTHERN STATES THAT WILL ENTERTAIN THE READER—ACCIDENTS, FIRES, FLOODS, ETC.

A half interest in the Methodist Advocate, in Chattanooga, has been sold to Rev. Horace E. Warner, of Cedar Falls, Iowa.

H. C. Markee & Co., dry goods merchants of Anniston, Ala., have made an assignment. Liabilities, $25,000; assets, $40,000.

General Francis E. Spinner, ex-treasurer of the United States, died at Brooklynsburg, near Jacksonville, Fla., Wednesday evening.

Paul Conrad, of New Orleans, was on Wednesday elected president of the Louisiana State Lottery Company, vice M. A. Dauphin, deceased.

A $100,000 fire destroyed the business portion of San Augustine, Texas, Tuesday. The fire is supposed to have started from negro gamblers in a stable loft.

A committee has been appointed at Nashville to arrange for the reception and entertainment of guests on Jackson's Day, January 8. A large crowd is expected.

The trade council of Birmingham, Ala., has appointed a committee to bring about a conference between the striking coal miners and coal operators, and, if possible, settle the strike.

Samuel Black, general merchant, of Natchez, Miss., assigned Saturday. Preferred creditors $8,500; total liabilities estimated at $30,000. Britton & Kounts' bank loses $7,000.

The Chattanooga, Rome and Columbus Railroad has been sold to the Central Railroad and Banking Company of Georgia. The deeds have been signed, and January 1st the day appointed for the transfer.

The police, of Chattanooga, have received notice that Peter Wilson, a well to do merchant of that city, has been missing from his home since last Thursday. When last seen he had $350 in his pocket, and foul play is expected.

The Carpenters' Union has addressed a letter to the contractors of Chattanooga asking an advance of 15 per cent., to take effect May 1. The carpenters give four months notice, in order that all contracts under way may be completed. The decision of the contractors has not yet been made public.

A Jackson, Miss., dispatch says: Another investigation is shortly to commence of ex-State Treasurer Hemingway's books. This time the investigation is to be thorough in every respect. Colonel Hemingway and his friends have never been satisfied with the investigation made of his books so far, claiming that they were not of the kind to unearth the complicated errors which they still believe exist.

A review of Richmond's business for 1890, shows that of manufactures there are 786 plants, giving employment to 21,618 persons; capital employed, $16,508,947; sales of manufactured products $34,580,947—an increase of $2,000,000. The reassessment of lands and lots shows a total value of $40,000,000—an increase of $8,000,000. Bank clearances, $112,603,000—increase, $5,000,000. During the year 930 new houses were erected.

A BANK ROBBED.

BUT THE PERPETRATORS PURSUED AND CAPTURED.

Three men entered the South Chicago National bank, at Chicago, about one o'clock Monday afternoon. Two of them engaged the cashier's attention, while the third slipped through the door and, coming up behind the cashier, dealt him a blow which knocked him senseless. Then the three quickly rifled the bank and dashed away in their buggy. After a chase of seven miles, the police captured two of the robbers at Fiftieth street and recovered all the money—$4,500. Several shots were exchanged between the police and the fleeing robbers, and one of the latter was seriously wounded in the thigh. The third robber is still at large.

A CAUTIOUS INVENTOR.

New York has an association for preventing the kidnapping of rich people and putting them in insane asylums.

It is predicted that if the cotton being held by the farmers is sold at a good price next spring, money will become "plush" and an unprecedently large Spring trade will be a result.

Henry Clews concluded a review of the business situation as follows: "It would seem therefore, from the present financial situation, both here and abroad, that there will soon be a growing demand for silver as a very expedient part of the circulating medium. In the large field of human concerns which enter into that exceedingly complex arrangement of society vaguely called business, I have here attempted but a very limited and cursory survey, and from it I am satisfied that the ensuing year will compare favorably with almost any of its predecessor and surpass many of them in prosperity."

The Nashville Banner, in an editorial on the financial outlook, says:

"The financial outlook is according the statement of many of the best and most conservative business men of New York, encouraging and promising of good business. There is a fine prospect of easement in money matters based upon good solid grounds. The thought and the energy of the financiers, the bankers and other business men who are interested most in the preservation of settled conditions, are directed to the maintenance of confidence and assured stability. It is only the reckless speculators who seek to shake confidence in values."

A certain colored man in Greensboro worked aft day Christmas. He said he made up his mind to do so a day or two before hand in order to keep out of mischief, "But the thing that bothered me most," he continued, "was sumthin' to say to the niggers who'd pass by and sass me bout workin' that day. I lay wake Wednesday night till I thought of my answer, then I went to sleep. Show nuff, bright and early Thursday mornin here cum long a black fellar all dressed up and smokin' his cigar, and say, 'Hio! What you workin' on Chrismus fur?' and then I told him I had to work to sport my wife, as she want cookin for no white folks like hisn was. He went on off and didn't say no more to me."—Watchman.

What is "cohture," anyhow? We can't find it anywhere but in the newspapers.—Eutaw Mirror.

Like the Mirror we have been unable to find the word in any of the later dictionaries. It is probably an obsolete term, but its formation and the use now being made of it give a tolerably clear definition. If it was newly coined we would have to be guided in defining solely by its usage. But it was used back in the fifties, and seems to be a combination of our English words clot, or clogg, and the Latin word durus, meaning rude or harsh. The cloture resolution in the United States Senate is intended to clogg and shut off debate on the elections bill, and give the opposition no further attention. Webster defines the word clot as "a concretion of soft matter." The italics are ours to indicate that in the case of Republican Senators a heavy accent should be given the word "soft." The cloture resolution is a last resort by means of which the Republicans hope to overcome the Democratic program of "how not to do it."

Anent the resolution of the National Alliance at Ocala, Fla., demanding the establishment of Sub-treasuries the Michigan state Grange delivers itself in convention assembled as follows:

"We regret that the National Grange, Farmer's Alliance and other organizations of farmers have endorsed the proposition in one form or another to make loans by the Government to the people. That the issuing of one billion dollars of treasury notes and loaning to the people, either directly or indirectly at a lower rate of interest would lead to wild clamor for credit. Every intelligent person must admit that no system could be devised or its operation so guarded as to prevent partiality and favoritism in its distributing first to personal friends of loaning agents, and next to his political associates. Every thoughtful man must foresee that it would create a feeling of helpless dependency upon the Government, aided by those to whom it is designed to benefit, thereby relaxing their individual effort, destroying their energy and self reliance and rendering them helpless mendicants of government charity, every observer of human nature must know that it would lead to improvidence relying upon government aid or government forbearance by those whom it seeks to benefit and prove a curse instead of a blessing, is so plainly evident that we are surprise that the National Grange should allow itself to be carried away by the clamor of those who have themselves public preferment by holding to a scheme so enticing to ignorant or improvident debt and scheming speculators."

The Force Bill Laid Aside.

The proceedings in the United States Senate on Monday resulted in laying aside the Lodge elections bill and taking up the bill to prevent the contraction of the currency. The motion was that of Senator Stewart a silver advocate. It is a result that is intensely gratifying to the Democracy all over the country and was a surprise to the Republican Senators.

The force bill was born in hatred and nutured by frantic demagogues for partisan advantage. They have been outwitted in parliamentary tactics by the Democratic Senators, and it is conceded that this result of laying aside the bill will seal its fate. If this proves true live men and dead men, white men and "poor niggers" will all have cause to rejoice.

Legislation in the interest of the silver dollar, "the poor man's money," is what the country needs and needs badly. Senator Stewart's bill is of that character, and with its passage money matters will improve.

The Alliance Herald in its usual rich, rare and red-hot style is a strong advocate of the bill to place probate judges on salaries. The bill is known as the Adams bill, and has been published in these columns. The Herald also advocates a reduction of the pay of sheriff's, tax collectors and tax assessors. This reduction would be hard on the three officers last mentioned in some counties. For instance, the sheriff of Chilton informs us that he cannot make as much as $1000 a year out of his office, and the assessor and collector make about $500 each out of theirs. The bill placing probate judges on salaries would not materially affect the pay of the probate judge in this county, as the office does not pay much over $1000, we understand, and that is the amount of the salary fixed by the bill for counties of Chilton's population. If the pay of these four important officers is materially reduced in such counties as Chilton, then good men cannot afford to accept the places, and though the places might not go begging for candidates, yet it is possible that they would be left to incompetent men. There is a weighty motive for advocating the reductions, and that is to cut down the pay of such officers in rich counties where their fees make a large sum in the aggregate, and give part of these fees to the public schools. The hope is to raise an additional $100,000 for the school fund by this means. It is a good move, and if tried we think it would prove a wise one, provided, that in the smaller counties special attention is given to insuring a reasonable compensation for services rendered by good officers. The public schools need more money, but they don't want it bad enough to institute a program of "robbing Peter to pay Paul."

There is as yet no change in the strike situation. The efforts of the Birmingham Trade's Council to bring about a settlement have so far failed.

We return thanks to Roberts & Son, of Birmingham, for a handsome lithographed calender for 1891. This is the only lithographing establishment in Alabama.

A good prohibition argument is found in this: "Thirty-six wet counties in Georgia have one convict to every 600 people, while the one hundred and one dry counties have one convict to every 1,329 people."

The Curse of Drink.

The following, which has previously appeared in these columns, is republished by request:

"Intemperance cuts down youth in its vigor, manhood in its strength and age in its weakness. It breaks the father's heart, bereaves the doting mother, extinguishes natural affections, erases conjugal love, blots out filial attachments, blights parental hope and brings down mourning age in sorrow to the grave. It produces weakness, not strength; sickness, not health; death not life. It makes devoted wives widows, children orphans, fathers, friends, and all of them beggars and paupers. It feeds rheumatism, nurses gout, welcomes epidemics, invites cholera, imports pestilence and embraces consumption. It covers the land with idleness, misery and crime. It fills your jails, supplies your almshouses, and demands your asylums. It engenders controversies, fosters quarrels and cheers riots. It crowds your penitentiaries and furnishes victems for your scaffolds. It is the life blood of the gambler, the prop of highwaymen and the support of the midnight incendiary. It countenances the liar, respects the thief, and esteems the blasphemer. It violates obligations, reverences fraud and honors infamy. It defames benevolence, hates love, scorns virtue and slanders innocence. It invites the father to butcher his helpless offspring, helps to massacre his wife, and the children to grind the parricidal axe, burns up good men and consumes some of the best of women. It nurses perjury, defiles the jury box and stains the judicial ermine. It brings shame, not honor; terror, not safety; despair, not, hope; misery, not happiness. And it calmly surveys its frightful desolation and unsatisfied with its havoc, it poisons felicity, kills peace, ruins morals blights confidence, slays reputation, and wipes out national honors, then curses the world and laughs at its ruin."—Ingersoll.

Better Roads.

The people of Sumpter county, seem to be in earnest about getting better roads in the county. They held a "Road Congress" at Livingston a few days ago and passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we as a committee recommend that our representatives in the General Assembly draft into a bill and have introduced, and endeavor to have passed in the present General Assembly of Alabama, the following amendments to the road law so far as it concerns Sumpter county.

1. That we recommend the narrowing of the public highways of first grade to twenty feet in places most difficult of working.

2. That the ages subject to road duty shall be from 16 to 55 years.

3. That we recommend the commissioners to purchase and distribute to overseers or public roads one spade, shovel, or pick to every five hands where necessary; also, that one or more road scrapes, in the discretion of the commissioner's court, be furnished each beat in the county.

4. That we recommend that if the overseer refuses to turn over to his successor all tools entrusted to his care that he be fined $1 for each tool lost.

2. That we recommend a supervisor be appointed who shall supervise all public roads and bridges in the county, and shall report to each grand jury, Shall direct the working of overseers when necessary. He shall be appointed by the commissioner's court until the next regular election when his office will become elective by the people according to the election of state and county officers. His term of office shall be two years. His entire term shall be devoted to his duty. His salary shall not exceed $600.

6. We recommend he give a bond for the faithful performance of duty of $1200.

7. We recommend the time for working the road shall be extended from ten to fifteen days.

A Letter That Pleased the Editor.

Waynesboro, (Pa.) Messenger.]

Now and then we see articles on "How to Write to a Newspaper," and we give the following, received on Saturday evening last, from our old friend, Charles A. Lucas, of Freedom, Owens county, Indiana, which we recommend as a perfect model for newspaper writers, who should never omit the first clause under any pretense:

"Mr. J. Pauley: Dear Sir—Inclosed find three dollars, which I wish placed to my subscription to the old Messenger. Politically we are all happy out here. Our roosters are all tearing their derned throats, each trying to crow the loudest. We have had an unfavorable season for everything but grass, which is a heavy crop. Apples scarce, as were also plums and grapes. Black and raspberries a heavy crop. Health of the country good. C. A. LUCAS.

A resolution has been adopted by the Alabama legislature directing the committee on education to inquire into the propriety and expendiency of admitting students of both sexes into the state institution of learning, and also as to the expendiency of a woman's annex to the Agriculture and Mechanical College, at Auburn. Mississippi has a Girl's Industrial College, at Columbus. Georgia has just laid the corner-stone of a splendid building for the same purpose. It seems time, indeed, that Alabama, should awaken to the needs of the age. Industrial education is being more and more widely recognized as a factor in the making of good citizens and money cannot be better spent than in giving to both girls and boys that knowledge of handicrafts that may one day be the very bread of life to them. Beyond the practical result the intellectual benefit of hand-training is being generally acknowledged. The civilized brain has grown with the trained hand. It is to be hoped that this resolution will not be allowed to melt away in the thin air of neglect; but that the thoughtful men in our legislature will push it vigorously. We intend to keep trace of it, if it can be done.—New Decatur Advertiser.

It is said that a newspaper has an average of five readers to every subscriber. So that a country paper with 500 subscribers to please has five times that many readers who never pay it anything and who are therefore much harder to please. We get this information from an exchange that has probably been trying to please both kinds of readers.

New York has an association for preventing the kidnapping of rich people and putting them in insane asylums.

It is predicted that if the cotton being held by the farmers is sold at a good price next spring, money will become "flush" and an unprecedently large Spring trade will be a result.

Henry Clews concluded a review of the business situation as follows: "It would seem therefore, from the present financial situation, both here and abroad, that there will soon be a growing demand for silver as a very expedient part of the circulating medium. In the large field of human concerns which enter into that exceedingly complex arrangement of society vaguely called business, I have here attempted but a very limited and cursory survey, and from it I am satisfied that the ensuing year will compare favorably with almost any of its predecessor and surpass many of them in prosperity."

The Nashville Banner, in an editorial on the financial outlook, says:

"The financial outlook is according the statement of many of the best and most conservative business men of New York, encouraging and promising of good business. There is a fine prospect of easement in money matter's based upon good solid grounds. The thought and the energy of the financiers, the bankers and other business men who are interested most in the preservation of settled conditions, are directed to the maintenance of confidence and assured stability. It is only the reckless speculators who seek to shake confidence in values."

A certain colored man in Greensboro worked all day Christmas. He said he made up his mind to do so a day or two before hand in order to keep out of mischief, "But the thing that bothered me most," he continued, "was somthin' to say to the niggers who'd pass by and sass me bout workin' that day. I lay wake Wednesday night till I thought of my answer, then I went to sleep. Show nuff, bright and early Thursday mornin here cum long a black feller all dressed up and smokin' his cigar, and say, 'Hio! What you workin' on Chrismus fur?' and then I told him I had to work to sport my wife, as she want cookin for no white folks like hisn was. He went on off and didn't say no more to me."—Watchman.

What is "cloture," anyhow? We can't find it anywhere but in the newspapers.—Eutaw Mirror.

Like the Mirror we have been unable to find the word in any of the later dictionaries. It is probably an obsolete term, but its formation and the use now being made of it give a tolerably clear definition. If it was newly coined we would have to be guided in defining solely by its usage. But it was used back in the fifties, and seems to be a combination of our English words clot, or clogg, and the Latin word durus, meaning rude or harsh. The cloture resolution in the United States Senate is intended to clogg and shut off debate on the elections bill, and give the opposition no further attention. Webster defines the word clot as "a concretion of soft matter." The italics are ours to indicate that in the case of Republican Senators a heavy accent should be given the word "soft." The cloture resolution is a last resort by means of which the Republicans hope to overcome the Democratic program of "how not to do it."

Anent the resolution of the National Alliance at Ocala, Fla., demanding the establishment of Sub-treasuries the Michigan state Grange delivers itself in convention assembled as follows:

"We regret that the National Grange, Farmer's Alliance and other organizations of farmers have endorsed the proposition in one form or another to make loans by the Government to the people. That the issuing of one billion dollars of treasury notes and loaning to the people, either directly or indirectly at a lower rate of interest would lead to wild clamor for credit. Every intelligent person must admit that no system could be devised or its operation so guarded as to prevent partiality and favoritism in its distributing first to personal friends of loaning agents, and next to his political associates. Every thoughtful man must foresee that it would create a feeling of helpless dependency upon the Government, aided by those to whom it is designed to benefit, thereby relaxing their individual effort, destroying their energy and self reliance and rendering them helpless mendicants of government charity, every observer of human nature must know that it would lead to improvidence relying upon government aid or government forbearance by those whom it seeks to benefit and prove a curse instead of a blessing, is so plainly evident that we are surprise that the National Grange should allow itself to be carried away by the clamor of those who have themselves public preferment by holding to a scheme so enticing to ignorant or improvident debt and scheming speculators."

The Force Bill Laid Aside.

The proceedings in the United States Senate on Monday resulted in laying aside the Lodge elections bill and taking up the bill to prevent the contraction of the currency. The motion was that of Senator Stewart a silver advocate. It is a result that is intensely gratifying to the Democracy all over the country and was a surprise to the Republican Senators.

The force bill was born in hatred and nutured by frantic demagogues for partisan advantage. They have been outwitted in parliamentary tactics by the Democratic Senators, and it is conceded that this result of laying aside the bill will seal its fate. If this proves true live men and dead men, white men and "poor niggers" will all have cause to rejoice.

Legislation in the interest of the silver dollar, "the poor man's money," is what the country needs and needs badly. Senator Stewart's bill is of that character, and with its passage money matters will improve.

The Alliance Herald in its usual rich, rare and red-hot style is a strong advocate of the bill to place probate judges on salaries. The bill is known as the Adams bill, and has been published in these columns. The Herald also advocates a reduction of the pay of sheriff's, tax collectors and tax assessors. This reduction would be hard on the three officers last mentioned in some counties. For instance, the sheriff of Chilton informs us that he cannot make as much as $1000 a year out of his office, and the assessor and collector make about $500 each out of theirs. The bill placing probate judges on salaries would not materially affect the pay of the probate judge in this county, as the office does not pay much over $1000, we understand, and that is the amount of the salary fixed by the bill for counties of Chilton's population. If the pay of these four important officers is materially reduced in such counties as Chilton, then good men cannot afford to accept the places, and though the places might not go begging for candidates, yet it is possible that they would be left to incompetent men. There is a weighty motive for advocating the reductions, and that is to cut down the pay of such officers in rich counties where their fees make a large sum in the aggregate, and give part of these fees to the public schools. The hope is to raise an additional $100,000 for the school fund by this means. It is a good move, and if tried we think it would prove a wise one, provided, that in the smaller counties special attention is given to insuring a reasonable compensation for services rendered by good officers. The public schools need more money, but they don't want it bad enough to institute a program of "robbing Peter to pay Paul."

There is as yet no change in the strike situation. The efforts of the Birmingham Trade's Council to bring about a settlement have so far failed.

We return thanks to Roberts & Son, of Birmingham, for a handsome lithographed calender for 1891. This is the only lithographing establishment in Alabama.

A good prohibition argument is found in this: "Thirty-six wet counties in Georgia have one convict to every 600 people, while the one hundred and one dry counties have one convict to every 1,329 people."

The Curse of Drink.

The following, which has previously appeared in these columns, is republished by request:

"Intemperance cuts down youth in its vigor, manhood in its strength and age in its weakness. It breaks the father's heart, bereaves the doting mother, extinguishes natural affections, erases conjugal love, blots out filial attachments, blights parental hope and brings down mourning age in sorrow to the grave. It produces weakness, not strength; sickness, not health; death not life. It makes devoted wives widows, children orphans, fathers, friends, and all of them beggars and paupers. It feels rheumatism, nurses gout, welcomes epidemics, invites cholera, imports pestilence and embraces consumption. It covers the land with idleness, misery and crime. It fills your jails, supplies your almshouses, and demands your asylums. It engenders controversies, fosters quarrels and cheers riots. It crowds your penitentiaries and furnishes victems for your scaffolds. It is the life blood of the gambler, the prop of highwaymen and the support of the midnight incendiary. It countenances the liar, respects the thief, and esteems the blasphemer. It violates obligations, reverences fraud and honors infamy. It defames benevolence, hates love, scorns virtue and slanders innocence. It invites the father to butcher his helpless offspring, helps to massacre his wife, and the children to grind the paracidal axe, burns up good men and consumes some of the best of women. It nurses perjury, defiles the jury box and stains the judicial ermine. It brings shame, not honor; terror, not safety; despair, not, hope; misery, not happiness. And it calmly surveys its frightful desolation and unsatisfied with its havoc, it poisons felicity, kills peace, ruins morals blights confidence, slays reputation, and wipes out national honors, then curses the world and laughs at its ruin."—Ingersoll.

Better Roads.

The people of Sumpter county, seem to be in earnest about getting better roads in the county. They held a "Road Congress" at Livingston a few days ago and passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we as a committee recommend that our representatives in the General Assembly draft into a bill and have introduced, and endeavor to have passed in the present General Assembly of Alabama, the following amendments to the road law so far as it concerns Sumpter county.

1. That we recommend the narrowing of the public highways of first grade to twenty feet in places most difficult of working.

2. That the ages subject to road duty shall be from 16 to 55 years.

3. That we recommend the commissioners to purchase and distribute to overseers or public roads one spade, shovel, or pick to every five hands where necessary; also, that one or more road scrapes, in the discretion of the commissioner's court, be furnished each beat in the county.

4. That we recommend that if the overseer refuses to turn over to his successor all tools entrusted to his care that he be fined $1 for each tool lost.

2. That we recommend a supervisor be appointed who shall supervise all public roads and bridges in the county, and shall report to each grand jury. Shall direct the working of overseers when necessary. He shall be appointed by the commissioner's court until the next regular election when his office will become elective by the people according to the election of state and county officers. His term of office shall be two years. His entire term shall be devoted to his duty. His salary shall not exceed $600.

6. We recommend he give a bond for the faithful performance of duty of $1200.

7. We recommend the time for working the road shall be extended from ten to fifteen days.

A Letter That Pleased the Editor.

Waynesboro, (Pa.) Messenger.]

Now and then we see articles on "How to Write to a Newspaper," and we give the following, received on Saturday evening last, from our old friend, Charles A. Lucas, of Freedom, Owens county, Indiana, which we recommend as a perfect model for newspaper writers, who should never omit the first clause under any pretense:

"Mr. J. Pauley: Dear Sir—Inclosed find three dollars, which I wish placed to my subscription to the old Messenger. Politically we are all happy out here. Our roosters are all tearing their derned throats, each trying to crow the loudest. We have had an unfavorable season for everything but grass, which is a heavy crop. Apples scarce, as were also plums and grapes. Black and raspberries a heavy crop. Health of the country good. C. A. Lucas.

A resolution has been adopted by the Alabama legislature directing the committee on education to inquire into the propriety and expendiency of admitting students of both sexes into the state institution of learning, and also as to the expendiency of a woman's annex to the Agriculture and Mechanical College, at Auburn. Mississippi has a Girl's Industrial College, at Columbus. Georgia has just laid the corner-stone of a splendid building for the same purpose. It seems time, indeed, that Alabama, should awaken to the needs of the age. Industrial education is being more and more widely recognized as a factor in the making of good citizens and money cannot be better spent than in giving to both girls and boys that knowledge of handicrafts that may one day be the very bread of life to them. Beyond the practical result the intellectual benefit of hand-training is being generally acknowledged. The civilized brain has grown with the trained hand. It is to be hoped that this resolution will not be allowed to melt away in the thin air of neglect; but that the thoughtful men in our legislature will push it vigorously. We intend to keep trace of it, if it can be done.—New Decatur Advertiser.

It is said that a newspaper has an average of five readers to every subscriber. So that a country paper with 500 subscribers to please has five times that many readers who never pay it anything and who are therefore much harder to please. We get this information from an exchange that has probably been trying to please both kinds of readers.

The Equitable Life Assurance Society

OF THE UNITED STATES.

In selecting a company in which to insure, why not take the best instead of being persuaded by the eloquence of representatives of weaker companies to take what is less advantageous? It is the company, not the agent, with whom the assured must deal after the policy is once taken. It is the company, not the agent that pays the dividends and meets claims when they mature. It costs no more to assure in the best and strongest company than any other established on a sound business basis; therefore, we again ask, WHY NOT TAKE THE BEST?

The Equitable Life Assurance Society

Does a Larger Business,
Holds a Larger Surplus,
Gives a Better Contract,

And Pays its Losses more promptly than any other Life Assurance Society in the World.

Circuit—On the eleventh Monday after the fourth Monday in February, and on the thirteenth Monday after the fourth Monday in August, and may continue two weeks each time.

Commissioners'—Regular term second Monday in February and August, and first Monday in April and November. Special term second Monday in May and July.

County—First Monday in each month.

A cross mark (X) after your name means that your subscription is due and that we would be glad to have you renew.

LOCAL LACONICS.

If you have a friend or relative visiting you let us know it.

Prof. A. B. Harwood has a school of eighty pupils near Strasburg.

Mr. and Mrs. Baker have returned home from their trip to Arkansas.

Mr. N. A. Kicker is with Merritt & Duke. Mr. W. H. Sartor remains with Mr. Ehrman.

Public lands in Chilton are being homesteaded very rapidly. A sure indication of substantial growth of the county.

The Ladies Aid Society of the M. E. Church will give an oyster supper Friday night for the benefit of the church. Be sure to go.

A Clanton lady, Mrs. J. D. Bivings, has been eating strawberry shortcake and gathering the strawberries from her own garden. Who can beat this for January?

At the citizens meeting at the courthouse on last Thursday, a subscription was taken up for the purpose of employing a surveyor and getting a new plat of the town of Clanton.

There is no doubt of a bright future for this county. People continue to come in from all directions, though the black belt is still the largest contributor to our population.

Rev. Mr. Duval and wife, of Missouri, made a brief visit to Clanton last week. Mrs. Duval is a sister of Mrs. O. A. Duke. Mr. Duval has been called to the pastorate of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church at Selma.

We were in error in stating that Mr. W. H. Welch who was recently married in Selma was a member of the lumber firm of Welch & Bro. at Chilton. While Mr. Welch resides at Chilton, he is not a member of the firm mentioned.

Capt. John C. Cheney, of Montgomery, made a brief visit to Clanton Tuesday. He is selling fertilizers but says he is not getting rich at it. He is the worthy manager of the great Southern Exposition, which reflected so much credit upon the management and upon our great State.

See advertisement of the Equitable Life Assurance Society, the most substantial life insurance organization in the United States. It is represented at Clanton by Mr. G. C. Hanks as special agent. Mr. Hanks is also solicitor for the Clanton agency of the Hartford Fire Insurance Co., of Hartford, Conn., and the Commercial, of Montgomery.

Rev. R. J. Briggs and wife returned from their wedding tour Saturday to find that their numerous friends had kindly remembered them with enough handsome presents to set them up in housekeeping.

A meeting of representative citizens was held at the courthouse on the night of January 1st. The meeting was an assemblage of temperance men. A committee was selected to draft a new incorporation law for the town of Clanton. The object being to have the existing defecting law repealed and get a new one passed incorporating the town and prohibiting the sale of intoxicants within the limits of the incorporation. Several parties who have hitherto favored the sale of whiskey have come over on the dry side and openly opposed its sale in speeches at the meeting. We feel confident that the temperance folks compose a large majority of the voters of the town and that the "wets" will have a difficult and up-hill job in any effort to bring the sale of whiskey back to Clanton and fail when it come to an expression of the will of the people by voting on the question.

The Baby Show.

The baby show at the residence of Mrs. Jno. Garner, on Friday afternoon afforded considerable diversion and merriment for the fond mammas. Fifteen babies under two years of age were on exhibition. Little Mary Callen, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Callen, won the blue ribbon as the prettiest baby on exhibition, and her baby brother won the ribbon for being the best developed and most forward baby. Mr. and Mrs. Ike Gallespie's baby boy came out ahead with the ribbon as the "largest and finest" baby of its age present. Remarkable to relate the judges managed to get home without serious bodily harm.

Jemison.

Your correspondent is authorized and requested to give the voice of our alliance at Collin's Chapel, (which I think numbers one hundred) in regard to the building of a new court-house at Clanton.

When the bill in question was presented by our worthy representative and brother, it is not thought that he had the remotest idea that the great wave of a money panic would beat back with such force upon, not this county alone, but all the country. It is alarming to look into the treasury vault and find no money with which to support the needful paupers. A fact which has not been known before since the first provisions were provided for them.

Under the consideration of unforeseen circumstances it is thought proper to reconsider the matter and let every one be contented with the old court-house until more money comes in circulation so that we can breathe in better financial air. A MOTHER.

Mapesville Dots.

Mrs. Foshee and Mrs. Goodwin and Dr. Woolley have each given very pleasant entertainments during the holidays.

Miss Ollie Garner has been visiting her aunt, Mrs. Goodwin.

Miss Mamie Kelley has been visiting her aunt, Mrs. DuBose.

Mr. Omer Adams, of Birmingham, has been visiting our resident engineer.

Mr. Visscher is much pleased with our country.

Miss Louisa Dansby has had a most enjoyable visit to Mrs. Glover and Miss Bobbie Glover returned to Birmingham with her.

Mr. Jessie Martin is now occupying Mrs. Bowline's house. He moved in for the benefit of our excellent school.

We are pleased that our young friend, Robert Martin, is again at his old stand which gives Tom Foshee an opportunity to visit his Virginia sweetheart.

We are having prospectors looking around our country every few days, which makes us know our country is being developed.

Mr. Ben Glover has gone to Randolph to attend the wedding of Mr. Davis and Miss Cox.

While we are kept pretty hard at work during the busy season, we can't forget to wish for our patrons that the present year may be one of success and prosperity to them all. What success the VIEW has attained is due to them, and their kindly efforts in our behalf are warmly appreciated. In the language of the "daisy poet" of the Northport Breeze, we need only remind them:

"If anything on subscription
You are due,
Or if your time is out
Please renew."

The Tuskaloosa Times of Thursday says: "A Times reporter had a conversation this morning with two or three of the Montgomery, Tuskaloosa and Memphis contractors who are in the city. In response to a query of the reporter's relative to the progress of work on the road, they said things were at a stand still on their sections. Three months have elapsed since they received any money for their work, and they have concluded to cease operations until the lucre is forthcoming. This is the day set, however, for the road to be transferred from the Montgomery, Tuskaloosa and Memphis company to the Alabama Terminal and Improvement company, and it is hoped and believed that the financial pressure will be relieved upon the new company taking charge. At any rate, before taking any definite action in the matter, the contractors are waiting to see what the new company will do.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

For the CHILTON VIEW.

Affection's Tribute.

Only a trembling dog
Out on the wet grass lying,
With a pleading look in his soft brown eyes,
Feebly lifting his tail which he tries
To pat, while dying.

Only a shivering gasp
While his foot in my hand is prest,
His head falls back on the red-brown leaves,
And death his spirit gently frees.
My friend has gone to rest.

My faithful friend,
The same in shadow, the same in shine
If only a crust, or bounteous fed,
To feel my hand on his silken head
Was joy for this dog of mine.

Only a dog, you say.
Why grieve for a soulless brute?
If men with souls and women too,
In friendship and love were half as true,
Then 'twere only a brute.

Stanton, Ala. W.

Mrs. J. P. Allen, of Jemison, came down on a visit Tuesday.

Mr. J. P. Allen, has opened his new store in Clanton. He proposes to keep on hand a stock of first-class general merchandise, and offers them at prices that will make them go. Read his advertisement and call on him. Mr. G. W. Dawson will be found behind the counter and will be pleased to see and wait upon his friends.

OUR $1. A WEEK Club System while as convenient to the buyer as any instalment system, is at a wholesale spot cash system to us. The co-operation of the club members sells us 28 watches in each $28 Watch Club, and we get cash from the Club for each watch, before it goes out, though each member only pays $1 a week. This is why we give you more for your money than any one else, and why we are doing the largest watch business in the world. We sell only first quality goods, but our prices are about what others get for second quality. Our $12.50 Silver Watch is a substantial 18 karat (satisfaction or any time) Stem-Wind American Lever Watch—either hunting case or open face, that quality, stiffened Gold American Lever Watch, guaranteed to wear 20 years. It is fully equal to any watch sold for $25 cash. We sell a fine 14 karat Gold Case much more satisfactory and serviceable than any Solid Gold Case that can be sold for less than double the money, as cheap solid cases are invariably filled, and of low quality, and worthless after short use. Our Gold Watches are the best made, and are fully warranted by us and by the manufacturers. Stem-Wind Stem-Set Hunting or Open Face, 7 jewels, $15. AGRICULTURAL.

QUINCES.

Among the very profitable fruits to which too little attention is generally given is the quince. Quinces will always bring a good price in the market and often very extravagant figures are obtained for them. Usually the quinces brought to market are wormy, knotted and deformed, but if care is taken and large, fair fruit obtained, you will have only to name your price. They have often sold for $2.50 a bushel, and are now retailing at $4 and $5 per bushel.

The borers which infest quinces more than any other may be kept out by not allowing the bushes to branch out too near the ground, but should be pruned up like a tree so that one can easily get around them to cut out the borers, and to kill all grass and weeds that spring up. Quinces will not bear neglect, and if they cannot be attended to after being planted they had better not be started.

Good, clean land is needed in a high state of cultivation; strong, rich loam well drained; such land as is required for large pear and celery culture. Ground bone and wood ashes are an excellent dressing spread over the ground in the fall at the rate of 1000 pounds to the acre.

The trees should be planted about eight feet apart and the space between may be used for growing strawberries or low growing vegetables for the first year or two. Plenty of manure should be used on the ground yearly.—New York Herald.

FACTS ABOUT TOMATOES.

1. The tomato plant is quickly susceptible to careful selection.

2 As elsewhere in the vegetable kingdom, the character of the plant as a whole appears to have more hereditary influence than the character of the individual fruit.

3. Very heavy manuring does not lessen productiveness.

4. Neither nitrate of soda nor muriate of potash alone are profitable tomato manures upon thin soil.

5. Very early setting of stocky plants in the field, even in dark and raw weather, augmented earliness and productiveness this season.

6. Seedlings gave far better results than cuttings.

7. Trimming the plants lightly late in summer gave a greatly increased yield.

8. A double or monstrous flower upon a young plant is no indication that succeeding flowers upon the same plant will be double and produce irregular fruits. But varieties which habitually bear double flowers are also the ones which habitually bear irregular fruits.

9. Cool and dark weather in early fall and early fall frosts are the leading drawbacks to profitable tomato culture in the North. To avoid these dangers as much as possible plants must be started early and forced rapidly.

10. The essential general points in profitable tomato culture are these: Careful selection and breeding; early sowing; frequent, or at least occasional, transplanting to obtain stocky plants; rich soil, well prepared and well tilled.

11. There is evidence that varities of tomatoes run out, even under good culture.

12. The best market tomatoes appear from our tests to be Ignotum, Favorite, Bay State, Atlantic, and perhaps Ruby among the red varieties; Beauty, Mikado and possibly Potato Leaf among the pink or purple varieties; Golden Queen among the yellow sorts.

13. Among the novelties Rubin and Chemin Market are most promising.—Cornell University Agricultural Bulletin.

FARM AND GARDEN NOTES.

Mulch your strawberry beds with straw.

Use gravel on all your walks and keep out of the mud.

Buckwheat bran is more nourishing than wheat bran.

Where food is cooked for animals there is less waste.

Do not try to winter pigs unless you can provide them with a dry, warm shelter. It will not pay.

Hogs are good in their place, but do not go to an extreme and depend upon them alone for profit.

Too much feeding of corn to breeding hogs is inclined to make them feverish. It contains too much heat.

Lime added to the arsenites for the purpose of spraying fruit trees tends to prevent injury to the foliage.

One advantage in fattening reasonably early is that a better opportunity is afforded for providing a good ration.

If proper attention were paid to growing timber one-half the timber land might be kept to grow something else.

The pig will do his best to reach an early market. The trouble is, the owner does not know how to make this natural propensity work to its greatest capability. In Sweden 200 pound pigs take the cake.

It is an error to say that swine should be allowed to wallow in the mire. Swine are partial to a clean bed. If provided with it they should fatten faster than if they have to do without, or simply with mud.

During the winter every advantage should be taken to give the fowls plenty of fresh air and sunlight whenever the condition of the weather will permit. They will do better if confined in stormy weather, however.

Herbemont and Delaware grape vines need protection. Lay them down from the trellis and protect a little, adding more protection as the season advances and the cold increases. The ordinary soil will do in addition to straw.

Immature potatoes which have not been frozen so as to turn soft will ripen in the sunshine if picked from the vines. If under glass all the better. They will also make a good pickle if red pepper and onions are used in the combination.

Professor Henry, of the Wisconsin Agricultural College, fed two lots of pigs, one on corn exclusively, and the other on a ration of mixed grain, in which mill-stuffs largely predominated. When killed, the power required to break the bones was 435 pounds for the corn-fed pigs, and 1140 pounds for the others. This shows that pigs fed on corn alone are liable to have weak bones and often give out.

St. Peter's Church at Rome, Italy, has a seating capacity of 54,000.

HOUSEHOLD MATTERS.

BAKED CALVES' LIVER.

Baked calves' liver is a dish that needs only to be eaten to be appreciated. Wash the liver in cold water and wipe it dry. Cut a long deep hole in the side and fill it with a dressing made of bread crumbs, minced bacon and onion, salt to taste, small piece of butter and one well-beaten egg. Sew or tie the liver together, lard the top and bake in a moderate oven, basting frequently. Serve with the gravy and currant jelly.—New York World.

BREAKFAST DISHES.

Fish makes capital breakfast dishes. Flaked, tossed in a little white sauce of butter, seasoned and served piled on croutons of fried bread or made into cutlets, or steamed in little molds and served with anchovy sauce, or in omelets. Eggs again are excellent. The following makes a very pretty dish: Have ready some boiling hard and slip into it as many whole eggs as you require and let them fry, stirring the fat the whole time so as to keep up a circular motion. When cooked lift them out and serve on croutons of fried bread spread with either ham or anchovy butter or on a bed of spinach.—Brooklyn Citizen.

SQUASH PIE.

Peel a Hubbard squash, cut in pieces about two inches square, remove the seeds without taking away any of the substance of the squash and put it to steam in a colander closely covered in a pot of boiling water; or place it in a porcelain lined saucepan, without water, and set it over a gentle fire where it will soften slowly without burning, stirring it occasionally to prevent burning, or boil it until tender in sufficient water to cover it.

When the squash is tender drain it until it is quite free from water and rub it through a sieve or a fine colander with a wooden spoon or potato masher. Mix one quart of the squash so prepared with one quart of milk, four eggs well beaten, one tablespoonful of mixed ground cinnamon, mace and ginger, one teaspoonful of salt and one cupful of sugar, and use it to fill two large pie plates lined with a good plain pastry. Do not cover the pies with pastry, but grate a little nutmeg over the top or sprinkle over the grated yellow rind of a lemon.—Julia Corson, in Chicago News.

TOMATO BISQUE.

Many popular soups are made from tomatoes. One of the most fashionable of these is tomato bisque, a new recipe for which is here given:

One can of tomatoes, or enough fresh ones to equal that amount; one pint of thin sweet cream, one-half teaspoonful of soda, one generous teaspoonful of sugar, one tablespoonful of minced onion, one tablespoonful of corn starch, one tablespoonful of butter, one-half pint of boiling water, two tablespoonsful of rolled crackers, pinch of cayenne pepper, and salt to taste. Stew the tomatoes with the water and onion for half an hour, then add sugar, salt and pepper. Heat the cream in a double boiler and add the soda. Rub butter and flour to a paste, thin with a little of the hot cream, and stir into the double boiler just as the cream reaches the boiling point. Cook for a few moments till well thickened. Press the tomatoes through a colander, add the thickened cream, stir in the rolled crackers and serve at once. If prepared according to the directions there is no danger of curdling, and the bisque is rich, and delicious. If served at lunch in cups, a teaspoonful of whipped cream on the top of each cup renders it more attractive.—Good Housekeeping.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

Well-ventilated bedrooms will prevent morning headaches and lassitude.

A pinch of soda beat to a foam in either molasses or honey will cut the phlegm from babies' throats.

Lettuce certainly has a sedative action on the nervous system, and can be usefully employed in insomnia.

Tacks taken from carpets should be well scalded before being used again as a precaution against the moth.

When acid of any kind gets on clothing, spirits of ammonia will kill it. Apply chloroform to restore the color.

If you set anything hot on oilcloth, and it burns white, drop on a little spirits of camphor; rub with a dry cloth.

The toughest fowl can be made eatable if put into cold water, plenty of it, and cooked very slowly from five to six hours.

Scalding hot water should never be poured into dishes which have held milk until it has been removed by cold water.

It is a mistake, affirms culinary authority, to cook corn as much as most persons do. Long boiling does not make it tender, but hardens it like an egg over-boiled.

Starch Polish—A piece of stearine, candle spermacetti or white wax as large as a robin's egg will give a nice gloss. A teaspoon of salt to each pint of starch prevents sticking.

To Revive Old Silk—When silk has lost its gloss and becomes limpy it may be restored by sponging with a solution of half an ounce of gum tragacanth in a pint of hot water.

Whole cloves are now used to exterminate the merciless and industrious moth. It is said they are more effectual as a destroying agent than either tobacco, camphor, or cedar shavings.

A good remedy for sore mouth is one teaspoonful each of powdered borax and alum, one-half teaspoonful of soda and one teacupful of sage tea. Mix well and rinse the mouth frequently.

If one wishes to cool a hot dish in a hurry, it will be found that if the dish be placed in a vessel full of cold, salty water it will cool far more rapidly than if stood in water free from salt.

Every housekeeper knows how important it is to keep the refrigerator clean. Wash the shelves and ice racks in soap, ammonia and water. Vinegar and water will remove every stain from the zinc.

WOMAN'S WORLD.

PLEASANT LITERATURE FOR FEMININE READERS.

VASSAR COLLEGE GIRLS.

Vassar College is twenty-five years old. In that time 867 have graduated and only fifty-one deaths are reported. Of the 815 Vassar survivors only thirty-six per cent. have married. The late Professor Maria Mitchell used to say: "Vassar graduates marry late in life but they marry well." Most of the Vassar women teach. Just now 305 are holding important positions in colleges or academies. Wellesley has two, Smith two, Terry Hall one, Massachusetts Institute of Technology one, and Barnard, Wells, Elmira and Wilson colleges have each had a special teacher from Vassar. Four are authors, four edit weekly papers, and one is a collector of poetry. In twenty-four years twenty-two M. Ds. have graduated from Vassar. Several of the physicians have taken degrees at foreign universities, in France, in Germany, and in Switzerland, and one Dr. Sutro-Merritt, '77, of California, is a Fellow of the American Academy of Medicine. No one meeting the gentle little lady, Mrs. Christine Ladd Franklin, '69, would dream from her speech or manner that she is a Fellow of Johns Hopkins University, has received the degree of LL. D., and is the author of papers on the "Pascal Hexegram," "Methods of Determining the Horopter," etc., whose very names are enough to make the listener turn pale. Mrs. Richards, whose achievements are equally erudite, will be mentioned in the list of chemists. Others have distinguished themselves by biological or physiological investigations. Miss L. J. Martin, '80, is Fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.—New Orleans Picayune.

A STORY OF JEWELS.

There is a great lady in Paris whose life is being made miserable these days by an odious espionage. Whenever and wherever she appears abroad a vulgar looking man, though clad as a gentleman, is close in her train and follows her till she returns to her own door. If she enters a carriage the vulgar apparition is after her directly on a bicycle. There is no remedy because the rudeness of the "shadow" stops on the safe side of the law. Even in France a man may take the road when he chooses, though he be a detective.

Stranger still is the explanation of this curious case, furnished by an ingenious correspondent. The great lady, being in financial straits—as great ladies sometimes are—sold her jewels, the richest in France, to a wealthy baroness, but reserved in them a life estate. The baroness, though having secured her reversionary interest, feels sure of nothing else, not even human nature. She is haunted by the fear that when her purchase at length comes into her hands it will be found to have undergone the baleful alchemy of the pawnshop and been translated into paste. To prevent such bad faith on the part of the great lady she has impressed the service of a professional shadow.

Such fate befell the crown jewels of Great Britain during the reign of one of the Georges, in order that the necessities of the "First Gentleman of Europe" might be relieved. But that was more than a century ago. The story sounds oddly enough in this day and will, we trust, be a waring to Chicago millionaires who may contemplate taking over the treasures of impecunious European nobles on similar terms.—Chicago Herald.

FASHION NOTES.

Fans with folding handles are sometimes seen.

There is a craze among collectors for old tapestries.

It is going to be the fashion to wear small bonnets at concerts.

Velvet calf is exceedingly popular for ladies' hand bags and purses.

Styles are very picturesque and materials and trimmings very rich.

Tea gowns have become very simple garments since the designers have ceased to ring the changes on sleeves.

The best wearing silk for sleeves to woolen gowns is a heavy faille of bengaline, which is always ranked with silks.

Earrings with drops are beginning to be seen again, but the fancy for any species of this ornament is on the wane.

The newest cloaks for babies are in the form of a short pelisse of white fox fur. The cape is made entirely of the fur, while the under bodice is of cashmere.

Some of the new pocketbooks are without silver mountings. They are quite large and square in shape, so that the visiting-card can be carried in them.

The coarse reddish and tawny sables that come from Hudson's Bay are less desirable than a black mink skin, while there is no fur more beautiful than the soft, black Russian sable, like those worn by the royal family of Russia.

Many colored-bordered handkerchiefs are again shown. Some of them are very attractive, but they are not as dainty as the plain white ones, edged with fine embroidery or narrow lace which have been popular for some years past.

The newest shape in fur wraps is the seal skin reefer. This is a jacket fitting to the figure at the back and loose and double-breasted in front. It is furnished with a notched lapel collar and is altogether a comfortable, stylish garment.

Report comes from Pingot, in Paris, that the small wrap is dressy and indeed quite the style, and the low polonaise-redingote of velvet will be more favored than ever. An example from this celebrated house is of plain, lead-tinted velvet, with silk guipure garniture and black velvet sleeves.

WORDS OF WISDOM.

A fool never apologizes to anybody.

A little worldly wise makes a little man.

The man who does his best, does as well as an angel can do.

To have to look at himself is the hottest fire a bad man can get into.

The hardest man to please is the one who never knows what he wants.

There is always plenty of room for the man whose life is governed by a fixed principle.

A cheerful disposition will do more for you than a pedigree running back to the Mayflower.

The bad man throws mud at the good man because he has to do it to keep from looking at himself.

The world needs people who have the courage to do right, a great deal more than it does soldiers.

Remarkable Feats of Engineering.

When the great brick quays guarding the Euphrates in Babylon were constructed—themselves representing one of the most astounding feats known to history—the Euphrates was naturally drained off for the time being into an artificial reservoir, 160 miles in circumference, outside of the city, and the bed of the stream was paved with bricks. Then the river was turned back into its course, the reservoir being thereafter maintained for purposes of irrigation. The streets running parallel across the city opened upon the Euphrates on each side by twenty-five gates of brass which were let fall at night like so many portcullises, no one being let through them after sunset save by the order of the governor or the king. In the daytime ferry boats plied across between the gates at each end of the intersecting streets. Canals flowed through Babylon in every direction as they do in Venice.

Though containing 2,000,000 inhabitants, Babylon was not closely built up like London or Paris, but the houses of the city were much scattered and parts of the town had a semi-suburban aspect. Great areas of pasture land also were included within the walls, so that the city could well-nigh support its inhabitants by the produce of its own rich acres. When Cyrus, King of Persia, laid siege to the city in the sixth century before Christ, Babylon was provisioned for twenty years, and could undoubtedly have held out for an indefinite period had it not been for the carelessness or treachery that gave the foe an entrance.—Washington Star.

Waterloo Bridge.

There are eighteen bridges over the Thames within the boundaries of London. A nineteenth bridge, the largest of all, and the only one with a draw, is approaching completion near the Tower.

Of the eighteen bridges the ugliest is Lambeth (some critics say it is the ugliest bridge ever built), and the most imposing is Waterloo. Of this bridge Canova said: "It is the noblest in the world. It is worth coming from Rome to London to see." Dupin, a celebrated French engineer, called it "a colossal monument, worthy of Sesostris and the Cæsars." The Czar Alexander I. of Russia declared it the finest work of masonry in the world."

Waterloo Bridge connects the Strand with the mid-Surrey bank of the Thames; it is 1380 feet along, or with its graded approaches, 2426 feet long. It is built of granite, yet its grace, as well as its strength, commends admiration. It consists of nine semi-elliptical arches, each of 120 feet span, and thirty-five feet high, supported on piers which are thirty feet thick at the foundations, diminishing to twenty feet at the springing of the arches. Each pier is eighty-seven feet in length, with Gothic cutwater points. The bridge was opened on the second anniversary of the battle of Waterloo, June 18, 1817.—Boston Herald.

An Engineer's Experience.

Engineer Kavenagh, of the Union Pacific, is by no means a superstitious man, and yet he believes that coming events often cast their shadow before them in the form of presentiments. He tells a curious but truthful story of his own experience. He was running on a road in Central Illinois and daily piloted his engine over a high bridge that spanned a stream flowing near Chatsworth, Ill., the scene of the horrible railroad disaster. The bridge was a mammoth structure eighty feet high, stone and capable of withstanding the most savage attacks of nature's artillery. Nevertheless, one night as his steam steed was approaching the bridge, Engineer Kavenagh had a premonition that all was not right. Why he should have thought so he could not and cannot tell. The day had been a bright one; the night was dark, to be sure, but not with tempestuous clouds. However, he could not shake off the strange warning that had seized him, and stopped his engine. Going before he peered over the edge of a deep cavern and the thunder of a thousand battling waves was borne to his ears. The bridge had been washed entirely away. There were 300 passengers on the train.—Denver Republican.

The Tasmanians Were Backward.

One of the least advanced races that have come down to modern times was the aboriginal race of Tasmania. There is now a Mrs. Fanny Corcoran Smith, aged fifty-seven, who claims to be the last survivor of the Tasmanian people; but she is pronounced by an investigator of their history to be a half-caste. The last unquestionable Tasmanian, a woman, Truganina, died in 1876. At the close of their existence the Tasmanians had reached a degree of development hardly equal to that of the flint workers of the stone age.—Chicago Herald.

Results of Advertising.

Never before has the theatrical firmament been so completely nonplussed as by the remarkable success in Boston of the Boston Theatre's current attraction, "The Soudan." Before its production Eugene Tompkins expended over $8,000 in advertising his attraction, the lithographs and other matter being distributed in every town and suburb within three hundred miles of Boston. Aside from the extraordinary merits of the spectacular drama itself, this extensive billing is said to account in no small way for the great success being won by the play.

SEVENTEEN States of the Union have medical colleges admitting women. There are at least ten colleges exclusively for women, and over thirty that admit both sexes.

Overcoming Prejudice.

Prejudice is a sad trait of human nature. A person whose mind is bent on bias does himself great injustice. Said a sick man, whose blood seemed on fire from the effects of blood poison. "I can't help my prejudice; I have tried a half a dozen remedies, and they did me no good. I believe all blood purifiers are humbugs." "Do you believe all physicians are humbugs, too?" asked the writer. "Yes, for I have tried three different doctors, and only grew worse under their treatment. I have made up my mind my case is incurable and death inevitable." However, the writer, who was a friend of the suffering individual, at last succeeded in overcoming his prejudice and persuaded him to give Dr. John Bull's Sarsaparilla a trial. He commenced its use with no faith at all, but good effects soon followed, and its continuance brought complete relief. Reader, go thou and do likewise.—Independence Press.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. Blessed be the Cow.

We have seen it stated that the preservation of the cow for man's service was due to the superstitious or religious veneration in which that animal was held by the Egyptians, for except for the fact that they regarded the cow as a holy beast, probably all would have been killed off in time of famine. We have reason to be glad that the cow has survived. It is estimated that it requires fifteen million cows to supply the demand for milk and its products in the United States. Fifty per cent. of the milk they give is made into cheese and butter. It takes twenty-seven pounds of milk to make one pound of butter, and about ten pounds of milk to make one pound of cheese. There is as much meaty food in eight and a half pounds of milk, as one pound of beef. It would require about 24,000,000 fat steers weighing 15,000 pounds each to provide us with the same amount of nutrition as we get in the annual milk product.

FARMERS' ALLIANCE NOTES.

NEWS OF THE ORDER AND ITS MEMBERS.

WHAT IS BEING DONE IN THE VARIOUS SECTIONS FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF THE GREAT ORGANIZATION.—ECHOES FROM THE REFORM PRESS.

THE DEMANDS AT OCALA.

On account of the continued and persistent misrepresentations by the press in regard to the action of the recent national meeting at Ocala, with reference to the sub-treasury plan, it is deemed best to give the plain facts in connection with that matter. During the evening of the sixth day the committee on demands made the following report, as shown by the official minutes:

Section 1. We demand the abolition of national banks, and that the government shall establish sub-treasuries, or depositories in the several States, which sub-treasuries shall loan money to the people on approved security at a low rate of interest, not to exceed two per cent. per annum: Provided, That real estate, non-perishable farm products shall be considered approved security; and that the circulating medium be increased to at least $50 per capita, keeping the volume equal to the demand.

For this the following substitute was adopted, to which Wade, of Tennessee, had his name withdrawn from this portion of the report:

a. We demand the abolition of national banks.

b. We demand that the government shall establish sub-treasuries or depositories in the several States, which shall loan money direct to the people at a low rate of interest, not to exceed two per cent per annum, on non-perishable farm products, and also upon real estate, with proper limitations upon the quantity of land and amount of money.

c. We demand that the amount of the circulating medium be speedily increased to not less than $50 per capita.

The vote by States on the first proposition was as follows:

	Yes.	No.
Alabama	4
Arkansas Alliance	2
Arkansas Union	2
Indian Territory	2
Virginia	4
West Virginia	2
New York	1
Kansas	8
Florida	3
North Dakota	2
South Dakota	3
Kentucky	4
Pennsylvania, not voting.
Michigan	3
Louisiana	4
Mississippi	2	1
Indiana	2
Illinois		2
Missouri	2	4
Georgia	7
North Carolina	4
South Carolina	4
Texas	4
Colorado, not voting.
Tennessee	1	3
Maryland	3
California	2
L. L. Polk, President	1
B. H. Clover, Vice-Pres.	1
J. H. Turner, Secretary	1
C. W. Macune, Chr. Ex.	1
Jones, Judiciary Com.	Absent.
A. Ward, Ill.	1

Tennessee, in voting 1 aye and 3 no, explained that they would have voted 4 aye on the section as it came from the committee before it was amended.

This would have made but seven votes against that portion of the report which contained the subtreasury clause. The balance of the demands were adopted unanimously, as follows:

3. That we demand that Congress shall pass such laws as shall effectually prevent the dealing in futures of all agricultural and mechanical productions; preserving a stringent system of procedure in trials as shall secure the prompt conviction, and imposing such penalties as shall secure the most perfect compliance with the law.

3. We condemn the silver bill recently passed by Congress, and demand in lieu thereof the free and unlimited coinage of silver.

4. We demand the passage of laws prohibiting alien ownership of land, and that Congress take prompt action to devise some plan to obtain all lands now owned by aliens and foreign syndicates; and that all lands now held by railroads and other corporations in excess of such as is actually used and needed by them be reclaimed by the government, and held for actual settlers only.

5. Believing in the doctrine of equal rights to all and special privileges to none, we demand that our national legislation shall be so framed in the future as not to build up one industry at the expense of another; and we further demand a removal of the existing heavy tariff tax from the necessities of life that the poor of our land must have; we further demand a just and equitable system of graduated tax on incomes; we believe that the money of the country should be kept as much as possible in the hands of the people, and hence we demand that all national and State revenues shall be limited to the necessary expenses of the government economically and honestly administered.

6. We demand the most rigid, honest and just State and national governmental control and supervision of the means of public communication and transportation, and if this control and supervision does not remove the abuse now existing, we demand the government ownership of such means of communication and transportation.

7. We demand that Congress of the United States submit an amendment to the constitution providing for the election of United States Senators by direct vote of the people of each State.

Immediately after the adoption of the above Mr. Davie, of Kentucky, introduced the following resolution, which was adopted by a rising vote with only four members voting against it.

Whereas, there is now a bill known as the sub-treasury bill in the hands of the ways and means committee of the house of representatives which should have been reported and acted upon at the last session, and which if enacted into law would bring the financial relief so much needed by all classes and industries: Therefore, be it,

Resolved, that this national convention of the Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union do most respectfully and earnestly ask that said bill be enacted into law as soon as possible, or some other measure that will carry out these principles and meet the necessities of the toiling masses.

After a whole year of ridicule, false argument and misrepresentation, in a convention representing twenty-nine States, but seven votes could be found against it and only one State, Illinois, voting solidly in opposition. Even one-third of the delegation from Missouri, the home of the most unfair, unjust and misleading opposition, voted for the proposition. It was a complete victory for the supporters of the subtreasury plan, and demonstrated that it or something better would be demanded and insisted upon by the intelligent farmers of this country.

EMMA ABBOTT DEAD.

THE GREAT SINGER DIES OF PNEUMONIA IN SALT LAKE CITY.

Emma Abbott, the great American prima donna, died at the Hotel Templeton, Salt Lake City, Utah, Monday morning at 7:40 o'clock, of pneumonia. She was taken ill on Wednesday night, but persisted on going on the stage and singing her part in "Ernani," notwithstanding her physicians advised her not to. On New Year's Day she was taken alarmingly ill, and a conference of physicians were ordered. From that time she has grown worse till this morning, when she died. The scene at her death bed was a pathetic one. The great singer was conscious almost to the last moment, despites that opiate had been administered, her last words were; "I am not afraid to die." There were present at her bedside: Alice Ellerton, Miss Nellie Franklin, Miss Vernon, Mr. Pruette, Mr. and Mrs. Micheleua, Miss Annandale of the company, Manager Pratt and wife, of the hotel, and Dr. Pinkerton. The body was embalmed and enclosed in a handsome casket, and will go from there to Denver, thence to Chicago, and thence to Gloucester, Mass., where her husband is buried. Her will provides for that disposition of her remains. Miss Abbott confidently expected to die, and told her physician on New Year's Day that her next song would be sung in heaven. A singular coincidence connected with the affair is that she died on the anniversary of her husband's death.

A THREATENING EDITORIAL

THE LONDON STANDARD ON THE BEHRING SEA DISPUTE.

The London Standard, commenting on recent phases of the Behring sea dispute says that the matter wears a very unpleasant aspect. Even the possibility of a rupture between England and the United States, the paper continues, "cannot be mentioned without a feeling of deep regret."

"The United States," says the Standard, "may count upon a continuance of that full measure of patience, courtesy and fairness which England has already displayed in the settlement of this vexed question."

The article then significantly adds:

"But Mr. Blaine would do well to bear in mind that firmness will be commensurate should the moment arrive for its exercise. With the patience and courtesy with which he has so far been treated he seems extravagantly anxious to put himself in the wrong."

The postal clerks have decided to go on a strike. The movement is to test the question whether or not working over time shall be voluntary or not, but virtually it is a protest against the increased employment of female clerks in London, England. Many have been dismissed and their places filled with women. They had been in the service twenty years.

The Australian colony of Queensland is building a rabbit proof fence along its border as a means of protection against the rabbit nuisance. Last year 233 miles of fence were built, 593 of the 658 required. The total cost, so far, is a little over $540,000. The fencing proves to be a complete protection against the quadrupeds, but not against evil minded persons who bring them in from infested localities.

The steamer State of Nevada, of the State line, which arrived in New York on Thursday, brought to port the officers and crew of the British steamer Pollux. The State of Nevada fell in with the Pollux on the 29th of December, in latitude 54.14, longitude 21.15, in a helpless condition, and took her officers and crew aboard at the request of Captain Whitson, of the Pollux. The Pollux was in a sinking condition, her rudder gone, and she was leaking so badly that it was only a question of a few hours before she would go down.

A fearful conflagration, which has rendered thirty families homeless and which may cause the loss of several lives, occurred at an early hour on Wednesday, at Paris, France. A few minutes after midnight, fire was discovered in the rear of a hatter's store, situated on the first floor of a crowded building on Rue Verrerie. The flames spread so rapidly that the panic stricken occupants of several floors had barely time to rush into the street in their night clothes. Several mothers, with their younger children clasped in their arms, joined in the rush of terrified people down the stairs of the burning building and were knocked down and, in many instances, seriously injured.

The Pacific mail steamship, Newport, arrived at New York Tuesday from Colon twenty-four hours late. Captain Lima, her commander, brings news of the terrible hardships experienced by the captain and the crew of the Nova Scotia bark, James H. Hamlin, which she fell in with on her last trip from this port. The James H. Hamlin, of Halifax, was bound from St. Lucia to Mobile. When found by the Newport the entire crew of the bark were ill with fever, wholly unable to work the ship. All hands were delirious and could not give the destination of the vessel. The Newport laid by the vessel and sent their surgeon on board with medicines and fresh provisions. Nothing has since been heard of the bark.

ESCAPED IN A TRUNK.

A SWINDLER ELUDES THE POLICE IN A NOVEL MANNER.

For several weeks the police of St. Louis have been searching for a man named Olunston, who was wanted upon a number of charges for swindling. He had been working the spurious diamond racket, selling paste gems to unsuspecting grangers at night, representing that he had stolen them and wanted to realize very quickly. His operations were so extensive that the police were instructed to make extraordinary efforts to catch him. Olunston, by some means, got wind of the orders. He was afraid to leave town by the ordinary way, as he knew depots and bridge were guarded. Being a very small man, he secured a large trunk, and then took a friend into his confidence. The next day the trunk, in which Olunston was snugly ensconsed, was checked to Indianapolis. Nothing was known of the fate of the lonely voyager until to-day, when his friend received information that Olunston had arrived safely.

A REVOLT QUELLED.

PRISONERS IN THE CHATTANOOGA, TENN., JAIL STARVED INTO SUBMISSION.

Twenty-seven of the worst prisoners in the county jail, who had revolted and refused to enter their cells from the corridor, have been starved into submission. At 11 o'clock Wednesday morning twelve submitted, and at 5 o'clock in the afternoon the other fifteen, hungry and cold, gave in. The janitor and assistants, armed with Winchesters, had been on duty in the meantime at commanding posts, but force or bloodshed was not needed. The gang was headed by Bud Gordon, in for the murder of Deputy Sheriff Gordon, and several of them would stop at nothing to gain their freedom.

GRAVE CHARGES.

A WORLD CORRESPONDENT MAKES A SERIOUS STATEMENT.

The World's Pine Ridge correspondent telegraphs his paper as follows: "The World should investigate the Indian Department at Washington. All the present trouble is caused by mismanagement there. The Indians are positively half starved. They get plenty of beeves, but little food. The country is almost a desert, and they cannot support themselves."

NEWS OF THE SOUTH

BRIEF NOTES OF AN INTERESTING NATURE.

PITHY ITEMS FROM ALL POINTS IN THE SOUTHERN STATES THAT WILL ENTERTAIN THE READER—ACCIDENTS, FIRES, FLOODS, ETC.

The president has nominated Laura H. Wilder, of Forsyth, Ga., as postmaster.

E. S. Peck, of Frankfort, Kansas, has been appointed receiver of the Farmers' and Merchants' bank of Clarkesville, Tenn.

The Brumfield-McCoy trouble, in West Virginia, has been renewed and in a fight at Hart's creek a few days ago, six men were killed.

The house of L. E. Wilds, of Winona, Miss., has been closed by an attachment made by a Memphis firm. Assets and liabilities not known.

W. S. Copeland, of Coweta county, has been appointed by President Livingston as State lecturer of the Farmers' Alliance of Georgia, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Rev. J. W. Beck.

Thursday morning at 1 o'clock a severe shock of earthquake was felt at Galveston, Texas. Many chimneys were shaken out of their plumb. The vibrations were from south to north, and lasted forty seconds.

Governor Taylor, of Tennessee on Wednesday, appointed Hon. John A. Moon, of Chattanooga judge of the forth judicial district of Tennessee, to fill the vacancy created by the death of Judge D. C. Trewhitt.

Captain George D. Wallace, who was killed by the Indians in the battle of Wounded Knee, was buried Wednesday morning in the cemetery at Yorkville, S. C., his old home. The services were very impressive.

Mayor Ellyson, of Richmond, has signed the ordinance which gives the Jeff Davis mansion to the Ladies' Confederate Literary Association for the purpose of making it a museum for the preservation of confederate relics.

The stockholders of the Bank of Opelika, Ala., have unanimously decided to increase the capital from $50,000 to $100,000 to meet the demands of its rapidly increasing business. The additional stock was immediately subscribed.

Several towns in Texas have quarantined against San Antonio on account of smallpox. At some stations shotguns have been used to force San Antonio passengers back to their trains. The disease is epidemic in some localities.

The following postmasters were appointed for Georgia by the president Wednesday: J. C. McCall, Bingen, Decatur county; M. C. Buffington, Bowdre, Hall county; R. D. Smith, Candler, Hall county; S. W. S. Patterson, Demorest, Habersham county; J. J. Hargroves, Millwood, Ware county.

A company was formed at Cordele, Ga., to buy out 2,000 acres of land at the junction of the Savannah, Americus and Montgomery and the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia railroads. The company commences business with a paid up capital stock of $100,000, and will commence business at once in the new town of Helena.

A fire broke out in the alliance warehouse at Opelika, Ala., Tuesday, and came very near resulting in a serious conflagration, as the warehouse contained over 1,000 bales of cotton and it caught in the center. The burning bales were quickly removed and the fire company promptly extinguished the fire. The damage was slight. The origin of the fire is unknown.

The old Yuengling brewery on the James river, just below Richmond, Va., was burned to-day with its contents. The building was the property of J. T. Betz, of Philadelphia, whose loss is $48,000, insured in the North. The Richmond Cedar works, which used the building as a storage warehouse, lost $10,000 in goods, fully insured in local companies.

The Eufaula Drug Company, at Eufaula, Ala., was completely burnt out Monday night. The fire broke out at about 2 o'clock in the morning, and the alarm was not given until 2:30 o'clock, when the alarm was promptly responded to, but too late to save anything. Their entire stock was completely destroyed, but the upper story was not burned at all. The loss was probably $20,000 with $17,000 insurance.

At a meeting of the stockholders of the Exchange bank of Macon, Ga., on Wednesday, it was decided to increase the capital stock from $400,000 to $500,000. The success of the Exchange bank has been phenomenal. Its deposits amount to nearly $1,500,000. The bank is erecting a handsome four-story building, into which it will soon move. The new building will represent an investment of about $100,000.

Hon. Paul C. Cameron died Wednesday at Hillsboro, N. C., aged eighty-three. He was the wealthiest citizen of the State. He had occupied many positions of trust, and had been president of the North Carolina railroad, director in several banks, railroads, etc., was a large planter in Alabama, Mississippi and North Carolina, and was the largest stockholder in the cotton mills at Augusta, N. G.

NOTHING STOPPED THEM.

THEY CLIMBED INTO WINDOWS, THROUGH SKYLIGHTS, AND BROKE INTO A SAFE.

Expert cracksmen entered Libby, McNeill & Libby's office at No. 854 South Water street, Chicago, the other day and rifled the safe. At the rear of the office a large vault is built in the hall. A hole had been bored into the heavy outer door of the safe close to the combination. But the burglars met with a serious difficulty when they found that within the vault was a burglar proof safe. They closed the outer door and attacked the safe with a sledge hammer, finally bursting it open. A cash drawer containing over $130 was carried away but the checks and notes were untouched. In their haste the burglars overlooked a locked drawer containing a large amount of gold and silver. Then they left without being seen. To obtain an entrance they forced their way into an empty warehouse half a block away and climbed through the skylight to the roof. They walked over the building until they reached Libby's, dropped through the skylight and reached the office.

SOUTHERN TEACHERS

WILL HAVE A LARGE GATHERING ON LOOKOUT MOUNTAIN IN JULY.

The Southern Educational Association, which was formed at Morehead City, N. C., last summer, has absorbed the association which was formed at Montgomery, Ala. J. H. Shinn, of Little Rock, Ark., becomes president, and Eugene Harrell, of Raleigh, N. C., secretary. The first meeting will be held at Lookout Mountain July 1st to 5th, and Secretary Harrell says that 4,000 to 5,000 southern teachers are expected to be present, with a large number of teachers from the north and west as their guests. This is a revival of the old Southern Educational Association, which was formed in 1857 and existed up to the outbreak of the war.

A TEXAS CYCLONE.

IT CARRIES DEATH AND DESTRUCTION IN ITS PATH.

At 3 o'clock Thursday afternoon a cyclone passed about three miles of this town, carrying death and destruction in its path. It was 100 yards in breadth, and demolished everything it struck. Several houses were blown down, and an infant was killed and four adults seriously, if not mortally, wounded: John Schmidt was blown over a barb wire fence. He seized the wire as he passed, and his hand was almost torn off. Household goods were scattered about for miles, and the loss is great. A further search may reveal many more dead bodies, but night coming on put an end to the quest of the rescuers.

UNFORTUNATE BROTHERS.

ONE FROZEN, ONE BURNED, AND THE OTHER KILLED BY A RUNAWAY.

John Rooney was burned to death in his barn a few miles north of Platisburg, N. Y., late the other night. It is thought that he went into the barn while smoking and, being under the influence of liquor lay down to sleep, and a spark from the pipe set fire to the hay. The barn was wholly destroyed, and Rooney's body was found in the ruins burned to crisp. A few years ago his father died leaving $14,000 to be divided between John and two brothers. One has since been frozen to death while intoxicated. Another one was killed in a runaway, while John met his fate as above stated.

DUEL WITH KNIVES.

A REPULSIVE AFFAIR, WITH WOMEN AS PRINCIPALS, IN WEST VIRGINIA.

A special from Wheeling, W. Va., says: Word comes from New Martinsville, W. Va., that two physicians have been summoned to go to Ten Mile, Tyler county, to attend two women who had fought a duel with butcher knives. The fight occurred without spectators in the kitchen of one of the combatants, named Wilson, and is described as a furious and desperate encounter. Mrs. Wilson was terribly cut about the face, neck and breast, and is fatally hurt. The other woman's name is not known as yet, nor the cause of the duel.

WASHINGTON NEWS.

SECOND SESSION OF THE FIFTY-FIRST CONGRESS.

THE LAW-MAKERS OF UNCLE SAM'S DOMAIN AGAIN AT WORK—ROUTINE OF THE HOUSE AND SENATE—EACH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS TERSELY TOLD.

In the house Tuesday, Mr. Spooner, of Rhode Island, from the committee on military affairs, reported the military academy appropriation bill, which was placed upon the calendar.

On motion of Mr. Farquhar, of New York, the bill was passed to limit and govern changing vessels' names; also the bill requiring vessels to display their names on both sides of their bows.

Mr. Hopkins, of Illinois, in the morning hour, called up the bill exempting American coastwise sailing vessels piloted by licensed masters or by United States pilots from the obligation to pay State pilots for services not rendered.

The house refused—yeas, 74; nays, 133—to consider the bill.

Mr. Dingley called up the bill repaling the law authorizing the president to suspend tonnage dues. After some debate the bill was passed.

In the Senate, on Wednesday, the financial bill was taken up on motion of Mr. Stewart, who suggested, at the same time, that an hour should be fixed for taking a vote on the bill and amendments. He proposed 4 o'clock Friday next. The proposition met with no particular opposition on either side. Mr. Daniel addressed the senate, declaring himself in favor of the absolute free and unlimited coinage of silver. He was followed by Messrs. Hiscock, Stewart and Edmunds. After a brief executive session, the senate adjourned.

In the house Thursday the house foreign affairs committee instructed the chairman, Representative Hitt, of Illinois, to report the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill. The bill carries an aggregate appropriation of $1,605,925, and is $39,890 less than the appropriation for the current year. No new consulates are provided for in the bill, and no salaries of ministers or consuls are increased. Sixteen consulates, which have heretofore been paid in fees, were made salaried offices. The aggregate fees of these sixteen consulates during the past year were $41,370, and the salaries provided for aggregate $84,000. Owing to the debate upon the subsidy bill, Mr. Fithian, of Illinois, opposed the measure, and inveighed against the system of subsidies. He then proceeded to argue in favor of free ship policy and the policy of abolishing restrictive navigation laws, as the best means of restoring the American flag to its proper place upon the sea. England had adopted that policy and the result was that she now commanded fifty-two per cent. of the tonnage of the world. Mr. Wheeler, of Michigan, spoke briefly in favor of the bill. Colonel Lester's bill for enlarging the Savannah public building passed the senate to-day. It had already passed the house. The appropriation is $400,000. An increase of $50,000 was made in the Charleston public building bill.

NOTES.

The entire day Wednesday was taken up in debate upon the subsidy shipping in the house bills.

The credentials of Mr. Conwell as senator from Idaho were presented, and Conwell took the oath of office.

The Torrey bankruptcy bill has been favorably reported by the judiciary committee of the senate. It passed the house on the 24th of July.

The credentials of Mr. Dubois as senator from Idaho, for the term commencing March 4th next were placed on file. The senate then went into executive session.

Representative Abner Taylor, of Illinois, recently introduced in the house a bill providing that the rate chargeable for registration of domestic mail matter shall be 5 cents for each piece in addition to the regular postage.

The silver bill is to be voted upon and passed by the senate on Wednesday next. Such an agreement was reached by the senate on Thursday. Senator Ingalls made a proposition for the vote on Wednesday. After a long debate, in which the democrats asked for full debate, while the republicans wanted to vote this week, Senator Ingalls' proposition was accepted by both sides without objection.

The house post office committee reported favorably the bill to give all towns whose gross postoffice receipts exceed $5,000, a free delivery service. This bill will pass. The Georgia towns that will have so free delivery, but will get it by this bill, are: Albany, Americus, Athens, Marietta and Thomasville. Two Alabama towns are Bessemer, Eufaula, Florence, Gadsden, Huntsville, Talladega and Tuscaloosa. The South Carolina towns are Spartanburg and Sumter.

AGRICULTURAL.

QUINCES.

Among the very profitable fruits to which too little attention is generally given is the quince. Quinces will always bring a good price in the market and often very extravagant figures are obtained for them. Usually the quinces brought to market are wormy, knotted and deformed, but if care is taken and large, fair fruit obtained, you will have only to name your price. They have often sold for $2.50 a hundred, and are now retailing at $4 and $5 per bushel.

The borers which infest quinces more than any other may be kept out by not allowing the bushes to branch out too near the ground, but should be pruned up like a tree so that one can easily get around them to cut out the borers, and to kill all grass and weeds that spring up. Quinces will not bear neglect, and if they cannot be attended to after being planted they had better not be started.

Good, clean land is needed in a high state of cultivation; strong, rich loam well drained; such land as is required for large pear and celery culture. Ground bone and wood ashes are an excellent dressing spread over the ground in the fall at the rate of 1000 pounds to the acre.

The trees should be planted about eight feet apart and the space between may be used for growing strawberries or low growing vegetables for the first year or two. Plenty of manure should be used on the ground yearly.—New York Herald.

FACTS ABOUT TOMATOES.

1. The tomato plant is quickly susceptible to careful selection.

2. As elsewhere in the vegetable kingdom, the character of the plant as a whole appears to have more hereditary influence than the character of the individual fruit.

3. Very heavy manuring does not lessen productiveness.

4. Neither nitrate of soda nor muriate of potash alone are profitable tomato manures upon thin soil.

5. Very early setting of stocky plants in the field, even in dark and raw weather, augmented earliness and productiveness this season.

6. Seedlings gave far better results than cuttings.

7. Trimming the plants lightly late in summer gave a greatly increased yield.

8. A double or monstrous flower upon a young plant is no indication that succeeding flowers upon the same plant will be double and produce irregular fruits. But varieties which habitually bear double flowers are also the ones which habitually bear irregular fruits.

9. Cool and dark weather in early fall and early fall frosts are the leading drawbacks to profitable tomato culture in the North. To avoid these dangers as much as possible plants must be started early and forced rapidly.

10. The essential general points in profitable tomato culture are these: Careful selection and breeding; early sowing; frequent, or at least occasional, transplanting to obtain stocky plants; rich soil, well prepared and well tilled.

11. There is evidence that varities of tomatoes run out, even under good culture.

12. The best market tomatoes appear from our tests to be Ignotum, Favorite, Bay State, Atlantic, and perhaps Ruby among the red varieties; Beauty, Mikado and possibly Potato Leaf among the pink or purple varieties; Golden Queen among the yellow sorts.

13. Among the novelties Rubin and Chemin Market are most promising.—Cornell University Agricultural Bulletin.

FARM AND GARDEN NOTES.

Mulch your strawberry beds with straw.

Use gravel on all your walks and keep out of the mud.

Buckwheat bran is more nourishing than wheat bran.

Where food is cooked for animals there is less waste.

Do not try to winter pigs unless you can provide them with a dry, warm shelter. It will not pay.

Hogs are good in their place, but do not go to an extreme and depend upon them alone for profit.

Too much feeding of corn to breeding hogs is inclined to make them feverish. It contains too much heat.

Lime added to the arsenites for the purpose of spraying fruit trees tends to prevent injury to the foliage.

One advantage in fattening reasonably early is that a better opportunity is afforded for providing a good ration.

If proper attention were paid to growing timber one-half the timber land might be kept to grow something else.

The pig will do his best to reach an early market. The trouble is, the owner does not know how to make this natural propensity work to its greatest capability. In Sweden 200 pound pigs take the cake.

It is an error to say that swine should be allowed to wallow in the mire. Swine are partial to a clean bed. If provided with it they should fatten faster than if they have to do without, or simply with mud.

During the winter every advantage should be taken to give the fowls plenty of fresh air and sunlight whenever the condition of the weather will permit. They will do better if confined in stormy weather, however.

Herbemont and Delaware grape vines need protection. Lay them down from the trellis and protect a little, adding more protection as the season advances and the cold increases. The ordinary soil will do in addition to straw.

Immature potatoes which have not been frozen so as to turn soft will ripen in the sunshine if picked from the vines. If under glass all the better. They will also make a good pickle if red pepper and onions are used in the combination.

Professor Henry, of the Wisconsin Agricultural College, fed two lots of pigs, one on corn exclusively, and the other on a ration of mixed grain, in which mill-stuffs largely predominated. When killed, the power required to break the bones was 435 pounds for the corn-fed pigs, and 1140 pounds for the others. This shows that pigs fed on corn alone are liable to have weak bones and often give out.

St. Peter's Church at Rome, Italy, has a seating capacity of 54,000.

HOUSEHOLD MATTERS.

BAKED CALVES' LIVER.

Baked calves' liver is a dish that needs only to be eaten to be appreciated. Wash the liver in cold water and wipe it dry. Cut a long deep hole in the side and fill it with a dressing made of bread crumbs, minced bacon and onion, salt to taste, small piece of butter and one well-beaten egg. Sew or tie the liver together, lard the top and bake in a moderate oven, basting frequently. Serve with the gravy and currant jelly.—New York World.

BREAKFAST DISHES.

Fish makes capital breakfast dishes flaked, tossed in a little white sauce of butter, seasoned and served piled on croutons of fried bread or made into cutlets, or steamed in little molds and served with anchovy sauce, or in omelets. Eggs again are excellent. The following makes a very pretty dish: Have ready some boiling hard and slip into it as many whole eggs as you require and let them fry, stirring the fat the whole time so as to keep up a circular motion. When cooked lift them out and serve on croutons of fried bread spread with either ham or anchovy butter or on a bed of spinach.—Brooklyn Citizen.

SQUASH PIE.

Peel a Hubbard squash, cut in pieces about two inches square, remove the seeds without taking away any of the substance of the squash and put it to steam in a colander closely covered in a pot of boiling water; or place it in a porcelain lined saucepan, without water, and set it over a gentle fire where it will soften slowly without burning, stirring it occasionally to prevent burning, or boil it until tender in sufficient water to cover it.

When the squash is tender drain it until it is quite free from water and rub it through a sieve or a fine colander with a wooden spoon or potato masher. Mix one quart of the squash so prepared with one quart of milk, four eggs well beaten, one tablespoonful of mixed ground cinnamon, mace and ginger, one teaspoonful of salt and one cupful of sugar, and use it to fill two large pie plates lined with a good plain pastry. Do not cover the pies with pastry, but grate a little nutmeg over the top or sprinkle over the grated yellow rind of a lemon.—Julia Corson, in Chicago News.

TOMATO BISQUE.

One can of tomatoes, or enough fresh ones to equal that amount; one pint of thin sweet cream, one-half teaspoonful of soda, one generous teaspoonful of sugar, one tablespoonful of minced onion, one tablespoonful of corn starch, one tablespoonful of butter, one-half pint of boiling water, two tablespoonsful of rolled crackers, pinch of cayenne pepper, and salt to taste. Stew the tomatoes with the water and onion for half an hour, then add sugar, salt and pepper. Heat the cream in a double boiler and add the soda. Rub butter and flour to a paste, thin with a little of the hot cream, and stir into the double boiler just as the cream reaches the boiling point. Cook for a few moments till well thickened. Press the tomatoes through a colander, add the thickened cream, stir in the rolled crackers and serve at once. If prepared according to the directions there is no danger of curdling, and the bisque is rich, and delicious. If served at lunch in cups, a teaspoonful of whipped cream on the top of each cup renders it more attractive.—Good Housekeeping.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

Well-ventilated bedrooms will prevent morning headaches and lassitude.

A pinch of soda beat to a foam in either molasses or honey will cut the phlegm from babies' throats.

Tacks taken from carpets should be well scalded before being used again as a precaution against the moth.

When acid of any kind gets on clothing, spirits of ammonia will kill it. Apply chloroform to restore the color.

If you set anything hot on oilcloth, and it burns white, drop on a little spirits of camphor; rub with a dry cloth.

The toughest fowl can be made eatable if put into cold water, plenty of it, and cooked very slowly from five to six hours.

Scalding hot water should never be poured into dishes which have held milk until it has been removed by cold water.

It is a mistake, affirms culinary authority, to cook corn as much as most persons do. Long boiling does not make it tender, but hardens it like an egg over-boiled.

Starch Polish—A piece of stearine, candle spermacetti or white wax as large as a robin's egg will give a nice gloss. A teaspoon of salt to each pint of starch prevents sticking.

To Revive Old Silk—When silk has lost its gloss and becomes limpy it may be restored by sponging with a solution of half an ounce of gum tragacanth in a pint of hot water.

Whole cloves are now used to exterminate the merciless and industrious moth. It is said they are more effectual as a destroying agent than either tobacco, camphor, or cedar shavings.

A good remedy for sore mouth is one teaspoonful each of powdered borax and alum, one-half teaspoonful of soda and one teacupful of sage tea. Mix well and rinse the mouth frequently.

If one wishes to cool a hot dish in a hurry, it will be found that if the dish be placed in a vessel full of cold, salty water it will cool far more rapidly than if stood in water free from salt.

Every housekeeper knows how important it is to keep the refrigerator clean. Wash the shelves and ice racks in soap, ammonia and water. Vinegar and water will remove every stain from the zinc.

VASSAR COLLEGE GIRLS.

Vassar College is twenty-five years old. In that time 867 have graduated and only fifty-one deaths are reported. Of the 815 Vassar survivors only thirty-six per cent. have married. The late Professor Maria Mitchell used to say: "Vassar graduates marry late in life but they marry well." Most of the Vassar women teach. Just now 305 are holding important positions in colleges or academies. Wellesley has two, Smith two, Terry Hall one, Massachusetts Institute of Technology one, and Barnard, Wells, Elmira and Wilson colleges have each had a special teacher from Vassar. Four are authors, four edit weekly papers, and one is a collector of poetry. In twenty-four years twenty-two M. Ds. have graduated from Vassar. Several of the physicians have taken degrees at foreign universities, in France, in Germany, and in Switzerland, and one Dr. Sutro-Merritt, '77, of California, is a Fellow of the American Academy of Medicine. No one meeting the gentle little lady, Mrs. Christine Ladd Franklin, '69, would dream from her speech or manner that she is a Fellow of Johns Hopkins University, has received the degree of LL. D., and is the author of papers on the "Pascal Hexegram," "Methods of Determining the Horoptor," etc., whose very names are enough to make the listener turn pale. Mrs. Richards, whose achievements are equally erudite, will be mentioned in the list of chemists. Others have distinguished themselves by biological or physiological investigations. Miss L. J. Martin, '80, is Fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.—New Orleans Picayune.

A STORY OF JEWELS.

There is a great lady in Paris whose life is being made miserable these days by an odious espionage. Whenever and wherever she appears abroad a vulgar looking man, though clad as a gentleman, is close in her train and follows her till she returns to her own door. If she enters a carriage the vulgar apparition is after her directly on a bicycle. There is no remedy because the rudeness of the "shadow" stops on the safe side of the law. Even in France a man may take the road when he chooses, though he be a detective.

Stranger still is the explanation of this curious case, furnished by an ingenious correspondent. The great lady, being in financial straits—as great ladies sometimes are—sold her jewels, the richest in France, to a wealthy baroness, but reserved in them a life estate. The baroness, though having secured her reversionary interest, feels sure of nothing else, not even human nature. She is haunted by the fear that when her purchase at length comes into her hands it will be found to have undergone the baleful alchemy of the pawnshop and been translated into paste. To prevent such bad faith on the part of the great lady she has impressed the service of a professional shadow.

Such fate befell the crown jewels of Great Britain during the reign of one of the Georges, in order that the necessities of the "First Gentleman of Europe" might be relieved. But that was more than a century ago. The story sounds oddly enough in this day and will, we trust, be a waring to Chicago millionaires who may contemplate taking over the treasures of impecunious European nobles on similar terms.—Chicago Herald.

FASHION NOTES.

Fans with folding handles are sometimes seen.

There is a craze among collectors for old tapestries.

It is going to be the fashion to wear small bonnets at concerts.

Velvet calf is exceedingly popular for ladies' hand bags and purses.

Styles are very picturesque and materials and trimmings very rich.

Tea gowns have become very simple garments since the designers have ceased to ring the changes on sleeves.

The best wearing silk for sleeves to woolen gowns is a heavy faille of bengaline, which is always ranked with silks.

Earrings with drops are beginning to be seen again, but the fancy for any species of this ornament is on the wane.

The newest cloaks for babies are in the form of a short pelisse of white fox fur. The cape is made entirely of the fur, while the under bodice is of cashmere.

Some of the new pocketbooks are without silver mountings. They are quite large and square in shape, so that the visiting-card can be carried in them.

The coarse reddish and tawny sables that come from Hudson's Bay are less desirable than a black mink skin, while there is no fur more beautiful than the soft, black Russian sable, like those worn by the royal family of Russia.

Many colored-bordered handkerchiefs are again shown. Some of them are very attractive, but they are not as dainty as the plain white ones, edged with fine embroidery or narrow lace which have been popular for some years past.

The newest shape in fur wraps is the seal skin reefer. This is a jacket fitting to the figure at the back and loose and double-breasted in front. It is furnished with a notched lapel collar and is altogether a comfortable, stylish garment.

Report comes from Piagot, in Paris, that the small wrap is dressy and indeed quite the style, and the low polonaise-redingote of velvet will be more favored than ever. An example from this celebrated house is of plain, lead-tinted velvet, with silk guipure garniture and black velvet sleeves.

WORDS OF WISDOM.

A fact never apologizes to anybody.

A little world always makes a little man.

The man who does his best, does as well as an angel can do.

To have to look at himself is the hottest fire a bad man can get into.

The hardest man to please is the one who never knows what he wants.

There is always plenty of room for the man whose life is governed by a fixed principle.

A cheerful disposition will do more for you than a pedigree running back to the Mayflower.

The bad man throws mud at the good man because he has to do it to keep from looking at himself.

The world needs people who have the courage to do right, a great deal more than it does soldiers.

Remarkable Feats of Engineering.

When the great brick quays guarding the Euphrates in Babylon were constructed—themselves representing one of the most astounding feats known to history—the Euphrates was naturally drained off for the time being into an artificial reservoir, 160 miles in circumference, outside of the city, and the bed of the stream was paved with bricks. Then the river was turned back into its course, the reservoir being thereafter maintained for purposes of irrigation. The streets running parallel across the city opened upon the Euphrates on each side by twenty-five gates of brass which were let fall at night like so many portcullises, no one being let through them after sunset save by the order of the governor or the king. In the daytime ferry boats plied across between the gates at each end of the intersecting streets. Canals flowed through Babylon in every direction as they do in Venice.

Though containing 2,000,000 inhabitants, Babylon was not closely built up like London or Paris, but the houses of the city were much scattered and parts of the town had a semi-suburban aspect. Great areas of pasture land also were included within the walls, so that the city could well-nigh support its inhabitants by the produce of its own rich acres. When Cyrus, King of Persia, laid siege to the city in the sixth century before Christ, Babylon was provisioned for twenty years, and could undoubtedly have held out for an indefinite period had it not been for the carelessness or treachery that gave the foe an entrance.—Washington Star.

Waterloo Bridge.

There are eighteen bridges over the Thames within the boundaries of London. A nineteenth bridge, the largest of all, and the only one with a draw, is approaching completion near the Tower.

Of the eighteen bridges the ugliest is Lambeth (some critics say it is the ugliest bridge ever built), and the most imposing is Waterloo. Of this bridge Canova said: "It is the noblest in the world. It is worth coming from Rome to London to see." Dupin, a celebrated French engineer, called it "a colossal monument, worthy of Sesostris and the Cæsars." The Czar Alexander I. of Russia declared it the finest work of masonry in the world."

Waterloo Bridge connects the Strand with the mid-Surrey bank of the Thames; it is 1380 feet along, or with its graded approaches, 2426 feet long. It is built of granite, yet its grace, as well as its strength, commends admiration. It consists of nine semi-elliptical arches, each of 120 feet span, and thirty-five feet high, supported on piers which are thirty feet thick at the foundations, diminishing to twenty feet at the springing of the arches. Each pier is eighty-seven feet in length, with Gothic cutwater points. The bridge was opened on the second anniversary of the battle of Waterloo, June 18, 1817.—Boston Herald.

An Engineer's Experience.

Engineer Kavenagh, of the Union Pacific, is by no means a superstitious man, and yet he believes that coming events often cast their shadow before them in the form of presentiments. He tells a curious but truthful story of his own experience. He was running on a road in Central Illinois and daily piloted his engine over a high bridge that spanned a stream flowing near Chatsworth, Ill., the scene of the horrible railroad disaster. The bridge was a mammoth structure eighty feet high, stone and capable of withstanding the most savage attacks of nature's artillery. Nevertheless, one night as his steam steed was approaching the bridge, Engineer Kavenagh had a premonition that all was not right. Why he should have thought so he could not and cannot tell. The day had been a bright one; the night was dark, to be sure, but not with tempestuous clouds. However, he could not shake off the strange warning that had seized him, and stopped his engine. Going before he peered over the edge of a deep cavern and the thunder of a thousand battling waves was borne to his ears. The bridge had been washed entirely away. There were 300 passengers on the train.—Denver Republican.

The Tasmanians Were Backward.

One of the least advanced races that have come down to modern times was the aboriginal race of Tasmania. There is now a Mrs. Fanny Corcoran Smith, aged fifty-seven, who claims to be the last survivor of the Tasmanian people; but she is pronounced by an investigator of their history to be a half-caste. The last unquestionable Tasmanian, a woman, Truganina, died in 1876. At the close of their existence the Tasmanians had reached a degree of development hardly equal to that of the flint workers of the stone age.—Chicago Herald.

Results of Advertising.

Never before has the theatrical firmament been so completely nonplussed as by the remarkable success in Boston of the Boston Theatre's current attraction, "The Soudan." Before its production Eugene Tompkins expended over $8,000 in advertising his attraction, the lithographs and other matter being distributed in every town and suburb within three hundred miles of Boston. Aside from the extraordinary merits of the spectacular drama itself, this extensive billing is said to account in no small way for the great success being won by the play.

SEVENTEEN States of the Union have medical colleges admitting women. There are at least ten colleges exclusively for women, and over thirty that admit both sexes.

Overcoming Prejudice.

Prejudice is a sad trait of human nature. A person whose mind is bent on bias does himself great injustice. Said a sick man, whose blood seemed on fire from the effects of blood poison. "I can't help my prejudice; I have tried a half a dozen remedies, and they did me no good. I believe all blood purifiers are humbugs." "Do you believe all physicians are humbugs, too?" asked the writer. "Yes, for I have tried three different doctors, and only grew worse under their treatment. I have made up my mind my case is incurable and death inevitable." However, the writer, who was a friend of the suffering individual, at last succeeded in overcoming his prejudice and persuaded him to give Dr. John Bull's Sarsaparilla a trial. He commenced its use with no faith at all, but good effects soon followed, and its continuance brought complete relief. Reader, go thou and do likewise.—Independence Press.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address

Blessed be the Cow.

We have seen it stated that the preservation of the cow for man's service was due to the superstitious or religious veneration in which that animal was held by the Egyptians, for except for the fact that they regarded the cow as a holy beast, probably all would have been killed off in time of famine. We have reason to be glad that the cow has survived. It is estimated that it requires fifteen million cows to supply the demand for milk and its products in the United States. Fifty per cent. of the milk they give is made into cheese and butter. It takes twenty-seven pounds of milk to make one pound of butter, and about ten pounds of milk to make one pound of cheese. There is as much meaty food in eight and a half pounds of milk, as one pound of beef. It would require about 24,000,000 fat steers weighing 15,000 pounds each to provide us with the same amount of nutrition as we get in the annual milk product.

FARMERS' ALLIANCE NOTES.

NEWS OF THE ORDER AND ITS MEMBERS.

WHAT IS BEING DONE IN THE VARIOUS SECTIONS FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF THE GREAT ORGANIZATION.—ECHOES FROM THE REFORM PRESS.

THE DEMANDS AT OCALA.

On account of the continued and persistent misrepresentations by the press in regard to the action of the recent national meeting at Ocala, with reference to the sub-treasury plan, it is deemed best to give the plain facts in connection with that matter. During the evening of the sixth day the committee on demands made the following report, as shown by the official minutes:

Section 1. We demand the abolition of national banks, and that the government shall establish sub-treasuries, or depositories in the several States, which sub-treasuries shall loan money to the people on approved security at a low rate of interest, not to exceed two per cent. per annum: Provided, That real estate, non-perishable farm products shall be considered approved security; and that the circulating medium be increased to at least $50 per capita, keeping the volume equal to the demand.

For this the following substitute was adopted, to which Wade, of Tennessee, had his name withdrawn from this portion of the report:

1st. We demand the abolition of national banks.

2. We demand that the government shall establish sub-treasuries or depositories in the several States, which shall loan money direct to the people at a low rate of interest, not to exceed two per cent per annum, on non-perishable farm products, and also upon real estate, with proper limitations upon the quantity of land and amount of money.

3. We demand that the amount of the circulating medium be speedily increased to not less than $50 per capita.

Tennessee, in voting 1 aye and 3 no, explained that they would have voted 4 aye on the section as it came from the committee before it was amended.

This would have made but seven votes against that portion of the report which contained the subtreasury clause. The balance of the demands were adopted unanimously, as follows:

2. That we demand that Congress shall pass such laws as shall effectually prevent the dealing in futures of all agricultural and mechanical productions; preserving a stringent system of procedure in trials as shall secure the prompt conviction, and imposing such penalties as shall secure the most perfect compliance with the law.

3. We condemn the silver bill recently passed by Congress, and demand in lieu thereof the free and unlimited coinage of silver.

4. We demand the passage of laws prohibiting alien ownership of land, and that Congress take prompt action to devise some plan to obtain all lands now owned by aliens and foreign syndicates; and that all lands now held by railroads and other corporations in excess of such as is actually used and needed by them be reclaimed by the government, and held for actual settlers only.

5. Believing in the doctrine of equal rights to all and special privileges to none, we demand that our national legislation shall be so framed in the future as not to build up one industry at the expense of another; and we further demand a removal of the existing heavy tariff tax from the necessities of life that the poor of our land must have; we further demand a just and equitable system of graduated tax on incomes; we believe that the money of the country should be kept as much as possible in the hands of the people, and hence we demand that all national and State revenues shall be limited to the necessary expenses of the government economically and honestly administered.

6. We demand the most rigid, honest and just State and national governmental control and supervision of the means of public communication and transportation, and if this control and supervision does not remove the abuse now existing, we demand the government ownership of such means of communication and transportation.

7. We demand that Congress of the United States submit an amendment to the constitution providing for the election of United States Senators by direct vote of the people of each State.

Immediately after the adoption of the above Mr. Davie, of Kentucky, introduced the following resolution, which was adopted by a rising vote with only four members voting against it.

Whereas, there is now a bill known as the sub-treasury bill in the hands of the ways and means committee of the house of representatives which should have been reported and acted upon at the last session, and which if enacted into law would bring the financial relief so much needed by all classes and industries; Therefore, be it,

Resolved, that this national convention of the Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union do most respectfully and earnestly ask that said bill be enacted into law as soon as possible, or some other measure that will carry out these principles and meet the necessities of the toiling masses.

After a whole year of ridicule, false argument and misrepresentation, in a convention representing twenty-nine States, but seven votes could be found against it and only one State, Illinois, voting solidly in opposition. Even one-third of the delegation from Missouri, the home of the most unfair, unjust and misleading opposition, voted for the proposition. It was a complete victory for the supporters of the sub-treasury plan, and demonstrated that it or something better would be demanded and insisted upon by the intelligent farmers of this country.

EMMA ABBOTT DEAD.

THE GREAT SINGER DIES OF PNEUMONIA IN SALT LAKE CITY.

Emma Abbott, the great American prima donna, died at the Hotel Templeton, Salt Lake City, Utah, Monday morning at 7:40 o'clock, of pneumonia. She was taken ill on Wednesday night, but persisted on going on the stage and singing her part in "Ernani," notwithstanding her physicians advised her not to. On New Year's Day she was taken alarmingly ill, and a conference of physicians were ordered. From that time she has grown worse till this morning, when she died. The scene at her death bed was a pathetic one. The great singer was conscious almost to the last moment, despites that opiate had been administered, her last words were; "I am not afraid to die." There were present at her bedside: Alice Ellerton, Miss Nellie Franklin, Miss Vernon, Mr. Pruette, Mr. and Mrs. Michelena, Miss Annandale of the company, Manager Pratt and wife, of the hotel, and Dr. Pinkerton. The body was embalmed and enclosed in a handsome casket, and will go from there to Denver, thence to Chicago, and thence to Gloucester, Mass., where her husband is buried. Her will provides for that disposition of her remains. Miss Abbott confidently expected to die, and told her physician on New Year's Day that her next song would be sung in heaven. A singular coincidence connected with the affair is that she died on the anniversary of her husband's death.

A THREATENING EDITORIAL

THE LONDON STANDARD ON THE BEHRING SEA DISPUTE.

The London Standard, commenting on recent phases of the Behring sea dispute says that the matter wears a very unpleasant aspect. Even the possibility of a rupture between England and the United States, the paper continues, "cannot be mentioned without a feeling of deep regret."

"The United States," says the Standard, "may count upon a continuance of that full measure of patience, courtesy and fairness which England has already displayed in the settlement of this vexed question."

The article then significantly adds:

"But Mr. Blaine would do well to bear in mind that firmness will be commensurate should the moment arrive for its exercise. With the patience and courtesy with which he has so far been treated he seems extravagantly anxious to put himself in the wrong."

The Australian colony of Queensland is building a rabbit proof fence along its border as a means of protection against the rabbit nuisance. Last year 233 miles of fence were built, 593 of the 658 required. The total cost, so far, is a little over $540,000. The fencing proves to be a complete protection against the quadrupeds, but not against evil minded persons who bring them in from infested localities.

The steamer State of Nevada, of the State line, which arrived in New York on Thursday, brought to port the officers and crew of the British steamer Pollux. The State of Nevada fell in with the Pollux on the 29th of December, in latitude 54.14, longitude 21.15, in a helpless condition, and took her officers and crew aboard at the request of Captain Whitson, of the Pollux. The Pollux was in a sinking condition, her rudder gone, and she was leaking so badly that it was only a question of a few hours before she would go down.

A fearful conflagration, which has rendered thirty families homeless and which may cause the loss of several lives, occurred at an early hour on Wednesday, at Paris, France. A few minutes after midnight, fire was discovered in the rear of a hatter's store, situated on the first floor of a crowded building on Rue Verrerie. The flames spread so rapidly that the panic stricken occupants of several floors had barely time to rush into the street in their night clothes. Several mothers, with their younger children clasped in their arms, joined in the rush of terrified people down the stairs of the burning building and were knocked down and, in many instances, seriously injured.

The Pacific mail steamship, Newport, arrived at New York Tuesday from Colon twenty-four hours late. Captain Lima, her commander, brings news of the terrible hardships experienced by the captain and the crew of the Nova Scotia bark, James H. Hamlin, which she fell in with on her last trip from this port. The James H. Hamlin, of Halifax, was bound from St. Lucia to Mobile. When found by the Newport the entire crew of the bark were ill with fever, wholly unable to work the ship. All hands were delirious and could not give the destination of the vessel. The Newport laid by the vessel and sent their surgeon on board with medicines and fresh provisions. Nothing has since been heard of the bark.

ESCAPED IN A TRUNK.

A SWINDLER ELUDES THE POLICE IN A NOVEL MANNER.

For several weeks the police of St. Louis have been searching for a man named Olunston, who was wanted upon a number of charges for swindling. He had been working the spurious diamond racket, selling paste gems to unsuspecting grangers at night, representing that he had stolen them and wanted to realize very quickly. His operations were so extensive that the police were instructed to make extraordinary efforts to catch him. Olunston, by some means, got wind of the orders. He was afraid to leave town by the ordinary way, as he knew depots and bridge were guarded. Being a very small man, he secured a large trunk, and then took a friend into his confidence. The next day the trunk, in which Olunston was snugly ensconsed, was checked to Indianapolis. Nothing was known of the fate of the lonely voyager until to-day, when his friend received information that Olunston had arrived safely.

A REVOLT QUELLED.

PRISONERS IN THE CHATTANOOGA, TENN., JAIL STARVED INTO SUBMISSION.

Twenty-seven of the worst prisoners in the county jail, who had revolted and refused to enter their cells from the corridor, have been starved into submission. At 11 o'clock Wednesday morning twelve submitted, and at 5 o'clock in the afternoon the other fifteen, hungry and cold, gave in. The janitor and assistants, armed with Winchesters, had been on duty in the meantime at commanding posts, but force or bloodshed was not needed. The gang was headed by Bud Gordon, in for the murder of Deputy Sheriff Gordon, and several of them would stop at nothing to gain their freedom.

GRAVE CHARGES.

A WORLD CORRESPONDENT MAKES A SERIOUS STATEMENT.

The World's Pine Ridge correspondent telegraphs his paper as follows: "The World should investigate the Indian Department at Washington. All the present trouble is caused by mismanagement there. The Brumfield-McCoy trouble, in West Virginia, has been renewed and in a fight at Hart's creek a few days ago, six men were killed.

The house of L. E. Wilds, of Winona, Miss., has been closed by an attachment made by a Memphis firm. Assets and liabilities not known.

W. S. Copeland, of Cowets county, has been appointed by President Livingston as State lecturer of the Farmers' Alliance of Georgia, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Rev. J. W. Leck.

Thursday morning at 1 o'clock a severe shock of earthquake was felt at Galveston, Texas. Many chimneys were shaken out of their plumb. The vibrations were from south to north, and lasted forty seconds.

Governor Taylor, of Tennessee on Wednesday, appointed Hon. John A. Moon, of Chattanooga judge of the forth judicial district of Tennessee, to fill the vacancy created by the death of Judge D. C. Trewhitt.

Captain George D. Wallace, who was killed by the Indians in the battle of Wounded Knee, was buried Wednesday morning in the cemetery at Yorkville, S. C., his old home. The services were very impressive.

Mayor Ellyson, of Richmond, has signed the ordinance which gives the Jeff Davis mansion to the Ladies' Confederate Literary Association for the purpose of making it a museum for the preservation of confederate relics.

The stockholders of the Bank of Opelika, Ala., have unanimously decided to increase the capital from $50,000 to $100,000 to meet the demands of its rapidly increasing business. The additional stock was immediately subscribed.

Several towns in Texas have quarantined against San Antonio on account of smallpox. At some stations shotguns have been used to force San Antonio passengers back to their trains. The disease is epidemic in some localities.

The following postmasters were appointed for Georgia by the president Wednesday: J. C. McCall, Bingen, Decatur county; M. C. Buffington, Bowdre, Hall county; R. D. Smith, Candler, Hall county; S. W. S. Patterson, Demorest, Habersham county; J. J. Hargroves, Millwood, Ware county.

A company was formed at Cordele, Ga., to buy out 2,000 acres of land at the junction of the Savannah, Americus and Montgomery and the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia railroads. The company commences business with a paid up capital stock of $100,000, and will commence business at once in the new town of Helena.

A fire broke out in the alliance warehouse at Opelika, Ala., Tuesday, and came very near resulting in a serious conflagration, as the warehouse contained over 1,000 bales of cotton and it caught in the center. The burning bales were quickly removed and the fire company promptly extinguished the fire. The damage was slight. The origin of the fire is unknown.

The old Yuengling brewery on the James river, just below Richmond, Va., was burned to-day with its contents. The building was the property of J. T. Betz, of Philadelphia, whose loss is $48,000, insured in the North. The Richmond Cedar works, which used the building as a storage warehouse, lost $10,000 in goods, fully insured in local companies.

The Eufaula Drug Company, at Eufaula, Ala., was completely burnt out Monday night. The fire broke out at about 2 o'clock in the morning, and the alarm was not given until 2:30 o'clock, when the alarm was promptly responded to, but too late to save anything. Their entire stock was completely destroyed, but the upper story was not burned at all. The loss was probably $20,000 with $17,000 insurance.

At a meeting of the stockholders of the Exchange bank of Macon, Ga., on Wednesday, it was decided to increase the capital stock from $400,000 to $500,000. The success of the Exchange bank has been phenomenal. Its deposits amount to nearly $1,500,000. The bank is erecting a handsome four-story building, into which it will soon move. The new building will represent an investment of about $100,000.

Hon. Paul C. Cameron died Wednesday at Hillsboro, N. C., aged eighty-three. He was the wealthiest citizen of the State. He had occupied many positions of trust, and had been president of the North Carolina railroad, director in several banks, railroads, etc., was a large planter in Alabama, Mississippi and North Carolina, and was the largest stockholder in the cotton mills at Augusta, N. C.

NOTHING STOPPED THEM.

THEY CLIMBED INTO WINDOWS, THROUGH SKYLIGHTS, AND BROKE INTO A SAFE.

Expert cracksmen entered Libby, McNeill & Libby's office at No. 854 South Water street, Chicago, the other day and rifled the safe. At the rear of the office a large vault is built in the hall. A hole had been bored into the heavy outer door of the safe close to the combination. But the burglars met with a serious difficulty when they found that within the vault was a burglar proof safe. They closed the outer door and attacked the safe with a sledge hammer, finally bursting it open. A cash drawer containing over $130 was carried away but the checks and notes were untouched. In their haste the burglars overlooked a locked drawer containing a large amount of gold and silver. Then they left without being seen. To obtain an entrance they forced their way into an empty warehouse half a block away and climbed through the skylight to the roof. They walked over the buildings until they reached Libbey's, dropped through the skylight and reached the office.

WILL HAVE A LARGE GATHERING ON LOOKOUT MOUNTAIN IN JULY.

The Southern Educational Association, which was formed at Morehead City, N. C., last summer, has absorbed the association which was formed at Montgomery, Ala. J. H. Shinn, of Little Rock, Ark., becomes president, and Eugene Harrell, of Raleigh, N. C., secretary. The first meeting will be held at Lookout Mountain July 1st to 5th, and Secretary Harrell says that 4,000 to 5,000 southern teachers are expected to be present, with a large number of teachers from the north and west as their guests. This is a revival of the old Southern Educational Association, which was formed in 1857 and existed up to the outbreak of the war.

A TEXAS CYCLONE.

IT CARRIES DEATH AND DESTRUCTION IN ITS PATH.

At 3 o'clock Thursday afternoon a cyclone passed about three miles of this town, carrying death and destruction in its path. It was 100 yards in breadth, and demolished everything it struck. Several houses were blown down, and an infant was killed and four adults seriously, if not mortally, wounded. John Schmidt was blown over a barb wire fence. He seized the wire as he passed, and his hand was almost torn off. Household goods were scattered about for miles, and the loss is great. A further search may reveal many more dead bodies, but night coming on put an end to the quest of the rescuers.

UNFORTUNATE BROTHERS.

ONE FROZEN, ONE BURNED, AND THE OTHER KILLED BY A RUNAWAY.

John Rooney was burned to death in his barn a few miles north of Plattsburg, N. Y., late the other night. It is thought that he went into the barn while smoking and, being under the influence of liquor lay down to sleep, and a spark from the pipe set fire to the hay. The barn was wholly destroyed, and Rooney's body was found in the ruins burned to crisp. A few years ago his father died leaving $14,000 to be divided between John and two brothers. One has since been frozen to death while intoxicated. Another one was killed in a runaway, while John met his fate as above stated.

DUEL WITH KNIVES.

A REPULSIVE AFFAIR, WITH WOMEN AS PRINCIPALS, IN WEST VIRGINIA.

A special from Wheeling, W. Va., says: Word comes from New Martinsville, W. Va., that two physicians have been summoned to go to Ten Mile, Tyler county, to attend two women who had fought a duel with butcher knives. The fight occurred without spectators in the kitchen of one of the combatants, named Wilson, and is described as a furious and desperate encounter. Mrs. Wilson was terribly cut about the face, neck and breast, and is fatally hurt. The other woman's name is not known as yet, nor the cause of the duel.

WASHINGTON NEWS.

SECOND SESSION OF THE FIFTY-FIRST CONGRESS.

THE LAW-MAKERS OF UNCLE SAM'S DOMAIN AGAIN AT WORK—ROUTINE OF THE HOUSE AND SENATE—EACH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS TERSELY TOLD.

In the house Tuesday, Mr. Spooner, of Rhode Island, from the committee on military affairs, reported the military academy appropriation bill, which was placed upon the calender.

On motion of Mr. Farquhar, of New York, the bill was passed to limit and govern changing vessels' names; also the bill requiring vessels to display their names on both sides of their bows.

Mr. Hopkins, of Illinois, in the morning hour, called up the bill exempting American coastwise sailing vessels piloted by licensed masters or by United States pilots from the obligation to pay State pilots for services not rendered.

The house refused—yeas, 74; nays, 123—to consider the bill.

Mr. Dingley called up the bill repealing the law authorizing the president to suspend tonnage dues. After some debate the bill was passed.

In the Senate, on Wednesday, the financial bill was taken up on motion of Mr. Stewart, who suggested, at the same time, that an hour should be fixed for taking a vote on the bill and amendments. He proposed 4 o'clock Friday next. The proposition met with no particular opposition on either side. Mr. Daniel addressed the senate, declaring himself in favor of the absolute free and unlimited coinage of silver. He was followed by Messrs. Hiscock, Stewart and Edmunds. After a brief executive session, the senate adjourned.

In the house Thursday the house foreign affairs committee instructed the chairman, Representative Hitt, of Illinois, to report the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill. The bill carries an aggregate appropriation of $1,665,925, and is $39,890 less than the appropriation for the current year. No new consulates are provided for in the bill, and no salaries of ministers or consuls are increased. Sixteen consulates, which have heretofore been paid in fees, were made salaried offices. The aggregate fees of these sixteen consulates during the past year were $41,870, and the salaries provided for aggregate $34,000. Owing to the debate upon the subsidy bill, Mr. Fithian, of Illinois, opposed the measure, and inveighed against the system of subsidies. He then proceeded to argue in favor of free ship policy and the policy of abolishing restrictive navigation laws, as the best means of restoring the American flag to its proper place upon the sea. England had adopted that policy and the result was that she now commanded fifty-two per cent. of the tonnage of the world. Mr. Wheeler, of Mississippi, spoke briefly in favor of the bill.

Colonel Lester's bill for enlarging the Savannah public building passed the senate to-day. It had already passed the house. The appropriation is $400,000. An increase of $50,000 was made in the Charleston public building item.

NOTES.

The entire day Wednesday was taken up in debate upon the subsidy shipping in the house bills.

The credentials of Mr. Gowell as senator from Idaho were presented, and Gowell took the oath of office.

The Torrey bankruptcy bill has been favorably reported by the judiciary committee of the senate. It passed the house on the 24th of July.

The credentials of Mr. Dubois as senator from Idaho, for the term commencing March 4th next were placed on file. The senate then went into executive session.

Representative Abner Taylor, of Illinois, recently introduced in the house a bill providing that the rate chargeable for registration of domestic mail matter shall be 5 cents for each piece in addition to the regular postage.

The silver bill is to be voted upon and passed by the senate on Wednesday next. Such an agreement was reached by the senate on Thursday. Senator Ingalls made a proposition for the vote on next Wednesday. After a long debate, in which the democrats asked for full debate, while the republicans wanted to vote this week, Senator Ingalls' proposition was accepted by both sides without objection.

The house post office committee reported favorably the bill to give all towns whose gross postoffice receipts exceed $5,000 a free delivery service. The bill will pass. The Georgia towns that will have no free delivery, but will get it by this bill, are: Albany, Americus, Athens, Marietta and Thomasville. The Alabama towns are Eufaula, Eufaula, Florence, Gadsden, Huntsville, Talladega, Tuscaloosa. The South Carolina towns are Spartanburg and Sumter.

The Whig says there's not a single prisoner in jail at Eutaw. Greene is a prohibition county.

The Bibb Blade asks why it did not receive one of our calendars. Well friend, you will have to ask "Uncle Sam" about that. We did our part.

The man who gets mad at what the newspapers say about him, should return thanks three times a day for what the newspapers know about him, but keep in the dark back-ground.—Ex.

The New York Times, 21st inst., says. A survial of the devotion of southern women to their lost cause is found in the United States coast survey steamer Endeavor, commanded now by Lieut. L. R. Reynolds. The vessel was built for the confederate navy by the women of Norfolk, who sold their jewels to accomplish it. The vessel never fulfilled the destiny of the builders, for when nearly ready for launching it was partially burned on the stocks. After the war it was restored and completed by the government, so that it has always floated the stars and stripes.

The auditor has issued Circular No. 30, addressed to the probate judges, of the State, calling the attention of these officials to the act passed by the general assembly in reference to changes in licenses charged peddlers, which fixes the licenses as follows:

For peddlers in a wagon drawn by one horse, or other beast, $40; in a wagon drawn by two horses or other beast, $50; on a horse or other beast, $15; on foot, $15; when accompanied by singers or musical instruments, $100, but for peddlers of tinware only and peddlers of stone or clay hollow-ware only, and tanners who manufacture leather goods and peddle these only, shall not be required to procure license. A peddler's license shall entitle him to peddle only in the county where it is taken out.

The bill for re-apportionment favorably reported by the census committee of the house of Representatives, provides for 356 members of the house. Not a single state loses a member. Seventeen states gain representatives, viz: Alabama, California, Georgia, Indiana, Kentucky, Maryland, Massachusetts, Oregon, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, South Dakota, Texas, Vermont, Virginia, and Wisconsin. The ratio is fixed at 173,901, and every state that has 86,950, after the allowance of the ratio, is entitled to an additional representative. The republicans gain nine and the Democrats eight. If the bill passes neither party will be hurt. The solid South with New York, Indiana and New Jersey can elect a Democratic president in 1892 and it will be done.

Amend The Constitution.

We heartily agree with the Alabama Mirror in the following. It says:

An amendment to the constitution of the United States has been suggested by the press of the country providing that each congress expire by limitation one month prior to the election of its successor, so that the spectacle of legislation by a repudiated congress, which will soon be seen in Washington shall be seen no more. The Congress elected in November should take their seats in December and the constitution be so amended.

War in Wilcox.

The last Sabbath of 1890 witnessed a disgraceful riot at the little town of Catherine, on the Mobile & Birmingham railroad in Wilcox county. The trouble originated in a personal difficulty between two merchants of the place, one a native of Marengo county, this State, and the other a gentleman from Ohio who had recently located in Wilcox, and who chanced to be a Republican in politics.

From the most impartial account of the trouble given by the Camden New Era, a Democratic paper, it was purely a case of persecution of the Republican merchant, who was fired upon by a crowd of enraged friends of the man with whom he had a difficulty, and he was finally driven from the town and an attempt made to burn his store. The New Era states that he left town fighting and at last accounts had not received as much harm himself as he had inflicted upon his persecutors.

The difficulty will be forgotten in a few weeks and the Republican merchant may return to his business. But it is well to bear in mind that it will be revived for a special purpose less than two years from to-day. Such treatment of a citizen from political prejudice will be made to come down on the entire State of Alabama like a thousand of brick in 1892.

And it was all probably due to too much Christmas whiskey.

Judge W. J. Wood.

The Age-Herald has the following mention of Judge W. J. Wood, the new Vice-President of the L. & N. railroad. Judge Wood is a former Tuskaloosian, and was for some years Probate Judge of Lauderdale county, being at the time the youngest Probate Judge in Alabama. We are glad to note his advancement, and knowing his history, we are sure that his promotion is well deserved. The A.-H. says:

"It is to such men as Judge Wood that the great Louisville & Nashville owes its commanding position amongst the railroad systems of the United States. Its management has been liberal and progressive, and probably no road in America is more popular with the people it serves than this same Louisville and Nashville. It has been, and continues to be, one of the greatest factors in the wonderful development of Alabama.

The people of Alabama will always be glad to see Judge Wood, for he is one of us, and we all of us feel a personal interest in his success."

City vs. Country.

In its last issue the American Agriculturist exhibits some rather startling facts, and utters some most reasonable advice. The growth of American cities, compared with the rural population, is marvelous.

The Agriculturist shows that in the last thirty years urban population has increased 251 per cent., or from about five millions to nearly thirteen millions in number while the rural populations have gained less than one third as rapidly, or about 70 per cent.

The magazine "places no faith in the new doctrine that under our modern civilization an urban population can be trusted to insure the nation's permanency. The United States must not ignore the greatest and most enduring lessons of history,—that nations depend upon a thrifty yeomanry,

The way out lies to some extent in permanent financial co-operation conducted on a modification of the Rochdale system. It compares enormous profits made by English working men under this form of co-operation with the proposed plan of relieving American agriculture that is "based on government mortgages of not only our farmers' freehold property but even the very produce of their land!"

The Agriculturist concludes:

Let unjust laws be repealed, special privileges abolished and equality insured for all. Here is the work for the government. Then in the details of our own business let us help ourselves. Co-operation furnishes a means for the sturdy American farmer to secure his best estate through self help."

Alabama's Progress.

In its review of the progress of the Southern States during the past year the Manufactures' Record gives Alabama the following figures in the various departments:

Five National banks were organized with a capital of of $350,000. In this respect Alabama is only surpassed by Texas, Louisiana and Tennessee.

There are twenty-six National Banks in the State with a total capital of $4,314,080. Texas, Tennessee, Georgia and Kentucky, show larger figures.

The net earnings of the National Banks in Alabama for 1890, amount to $588,916.85. The ratio of these earnings to the capital is 11.73 per cent.

The value of exports from the port of Mobile for eleven months is $2,970,570.

The population of Alabama is 1,513,017, or an increase of 19.84 per cent. in the decade.

The assessed value of property is $258,979,575, or an increase over 1889 of $16,000,000.

Alabama's receipts on account of internal revenue were $117,639.98; expenditures, $19,045.30.

In new industries formed during the year Alabama comes forward with 358.

The production of iron for the first half of 1890 was 403,551 tons and for the second half, in spite of the strike, 470,000 tons approximated. In this industry Alabama leads all the other Southern States.

Owning a Paper.

Many are the ways of making a mark in this world. An advertiser in the Journalist asks: "Do you want a paper of your own?"

I should say not. I have had a paper of my own several times, and in each instance the paper had me before I knew it. In the early morning of life it is a beautiful thing to dream over what you would do with a paper of your own; how red-hot editorials on the burning questions of the day would follow each other in bewildering confusion from the point of your facile pen. Oh, yes, it is just lovely to imagine how, enthroned on the editorial chair or tripod, you dispense hope or despair upon the literary aspirants that hang upon your nod. The pretty girl with a poem is beamed upon benignantly; the tattered wretch with a joke is frowned upon darkly. In the realms of imagination it is glory—almost too much for one mortal to bear—to wield the destinies of a paper. But get a paper, and you can get one mighty cheap; you will be surprised to find how many first-class papers there are that can be had for a song, if you sing it well; then one by one that great iconoclast, experience, will shatter the statuary in your mind's art gallery. You will find that printers are mercenary and terribly prosaic; though they handle the best thoughts of the country, they will insist on pecuniary remuneration, sometimes as often as five times per month. Then the paper man, hard as adamant, refuses to exchange his white paper for any thing but currency, and last of all, the world at large, in which you had such faith, that great unconfined sea of popular sentiment which you expected to agitate and to set in a seething turmoil, refuses to seethe over your best efforts. The largest, most powerful of your shafts sinks beneath the surface and, not a ripple marks its fall. This is bad, to say the least, but perhaps you think you have not struck the right chord, and you try some other—but it's no use. You thought you had the whole world by the coat-tails, and could pull it in whenever you so desired, but the first yank left you with a handful of straw. In the meantime you have become estranged from your family, not having had time to keep up acquaintance with your wife and children; your digestion is ruined, and you have no temper worth speaking of. In the race for the elusive dollar you find that you are distanced. Then you learn that somehow or other the boot is changed and the paper has you. A few, when they have reached this point, see the situation, and are contented to lead prosaic lives of hard work; others, who cannot accept the situation; settle through the sheriff and retire.

No, not to-day, thank you; I don't wish a paper of my own. It is the scorched rodent that shuns the conflagration.

Lay Judges.

The Farmer's Alliance people of Kansas having elected a man to be Judge who is not a lawyer, the fact is treated in many newspapers as a grotesque blunder. But is it? The thing is neither new or absurd. Neither reason or experience suggests that a technical familiarity with the law is a necessary equipment for the successful administration of justice.

On the contrary, when men really desire justice and not technical advantage, they are apt to resort to arbitration rather than the law courts and to choose men not lawyers for arbitrators. So far as the general principles of law are concerned, every intelligent citizen is familiar with them. Indeed, the law itself exacts that every citizen shall know the law, and it will not excuse any violation of it upon the plea of ignorance. Why, then should not a man of high intelligence and integrity who is not a lawyer render justice as well as another.

A $15,000,000 mortgage given by the E. T. V. & Ga. railroad Co. to a N. Y. Trust Co., was recorded in the Probate office of Chilton last week.

For 1890 the South shows an increase of $570,000,000 in assessed value of property and in exports of $24,000,000, nearly five times as much as the increase at all other ports. Patriotism would foster this progress, but the "scurvy politicians" are straining every nerve to retard it.—N. Y. World.

A New York editor who wrote an obituary notice of a man of some celebrity said, "He began life as a legal practitioner, but was diverted from it by a love of letters." He did not see the printer's proof, and was confronted the next morning with this—"He began life as a legal politician but he was diverted from it by a love of bitters."

W. C. Coup's Great Show on Wheels.

A Magnificent Museum Starts for a Trip through the South.

This enterprise has been in course of preparation for more than a year and is certainly the most novel and ingenious affair ever gotten up. It was built for Mr. Coup by New York and Chicago capitalists. It is a complete museum and in addition to innumerable groups of the finest historically arranged wax figures, the Show contains interesting animal and aquarium exhibits. The Sea Horse, Octopus or devil fish, Temple Stone from King Salomon's Temple, Vesuvius, Mount Blanc, Cliff Dwellers, Aztecs, C. D. Hicks, the ossified man; this wonderful creature, who is fast turning to bone, has a good appetite and is cheerful and contented. One cage contains the bird of paradise, the priests, nuns, archangels, and Chinese owls, and hundreds of birds of the most beautiful plumage. Another cage contains the Chimpanzee, the "Nigger Baby," the only monkey of its species in America. Then there is the Automaton that speaks and harangues the audience, the figure of dying Custer, the child that cries "Ma, Ma," the old lady knitting as natural as alive and the magician. Then there is the living talking dog, who says yes and no as plainly as a human being. There is a colony of Japanese as they appear in their own native village, illustrating their national industries. There is an Electric Orchestrion, 60 feet long, made by Prof. Jukes; it is in 6 sections, plays separately or together. Taken all together, it is a wonderful exhibition and is unlike anything ever seen. The whole is lighted by 600 colored electric lights, inside and outside.

OF THE UNITED STATES.

In selecting a company in which to insure, why not take the best instead of being persuaded by the eloquence of representatives of weaker companies to take what is less advantageous? It is the company, not the agent, with whom the assured must deal after the policy is once taken. It is the company, not the agent that pays the dividends and meets claims when they mature. It costs no more to assure in the best and strongest company than any other established on a sound business basis; therefore, we again ask, WHY NOT TAKE THE BEST?

The Equitable Life Assurance Society
Does a Larger Business,
Holds a Larger Surplus,

LOCAL LACONICS.

Lagrippe seems to be taking in our town.

Mr. and Mrs. L. C. Day are visiting relatives here.

The latest general news can be found on our first page as usual.

Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Crosswell have been visiting relatives here.

Mr. Tom Cook, of Pine Level, visited his parents in Clanton last week.

Miss Minnie Phillips opened the free school Monday with twelve pupils.

Maj. and Mrs. Harrell, of Birmingham have been visiting relatives here.

Mr. B. H. Chesnutt has taken charge of the Clanton post office and Mr. Tom Phillips is his deputy.

Mr. W. H. Merritt and family arrived here last Thursday and we welcome them in our community.

J. P. Allen can give you bargains in dry goods, groceries, hardware, or almost anything you want to buy.

Mrs. L. A. Thornton will leave next week for Tampa, Fla., where she will spend the remainder of the winter.

Miss Rosa Thornton has resigned as teacher of the public school, and her place will be filled by Miss Minnie Phillips.

Clanton has a treat in store in the W. C. Coup railroad museum which will exhibit here next Thursday night.

Rev. Geo. W. Mills, a Baptist minister well known in Chilton where he did much good work, died at his home at Planterville, Ala., on the 6th inst. He was an elder brother of Mr. W. H. Mills, of Kinsey.

From the large quantity of new goods daily being received at Clanton it seems that our merchants are looking for a heavy spring trade. We believe their expectations are well founded. Business agencies predict a good spring trade for the Southern States.

Mr. J. F. Maull has sold his property at Strasburg to Mr. J. Bice. Mr. Maull will locate at Elmore to which place he will move his family. He has not entirely withdrawn from our county as he still owns a controlling interest in the Clear Creek Lumber Co.

Alliancemen and others who desire to keep up with the doings of the Alliance will find the "Alliance Notes" which regularly appear on our first page very interesting. The matter is obtained directly from Alliance sources and is authentic.

W. L. SAMPEY

Dr. H. T. Caffey, of Jemison, gave Clanton a brief business visit Tuesday.

There have been so many real estate transfers here recently that we have been unable to meet the demand for warranty deeds. This is evidence that real estate is in active demand, and that there is money in the country, and that the purchasers are hopeful of good investments.

Rev. R. M. Hunter the new Baptist pastor filled his first appointment at this place on Sunday morning. Beginning with February his appointments will be on the first and third Sundays and Rev. A. J. Briggs appointments at the M. E. Church will be on the second and fourth Sundays.

Mr. Edmund Lowe, died Sunday night at the residence of his sister, Mrs. Carroll. The deceased was over seventy years of age. He was a man of excellent memory and a thoroughly posted student of history and biography, to which his tastes had directed him, and withal he was a good citizen and friend. Peace to his dust.

Messrs. W. H. Merritt & Co. expect to open their new stock of goods this week, and promise to tell the people of Chilton of the great bargains they will offer in our next issue. This is an enterprising firm and we bespeak for them a large patronage. They intend to boom the trade of our town, and they are the men to do it.

The answer to the question; how much can you lift? depends on what you lift with. Archimedes said 'Give me a fulcrum on which to rest and I will move the earth." 'Many a business has enough capital and energy, and yet barely holds its own, or fails altogether because these forces are not wisely utilized. If you would move the world of trade try the fulcrum of newspaper advertising.

Death of Col. R. M. Williamson.

Col. R. M. Williamson, died at his residence in Clanton on Tuesday, the 13th inst., at 11, a. m., of pneumonia. His family came up from Montgomery and were with him in his last hours. The remains were carried to Montgomery, his former home, for interment.

Mr. R. E. Brison of Hayneville, a son-in-law, was also in attendance upon the deceased during his last illness.

He Sets a Good Example.

Mr. Redding E. Jones, who resides five or six miles east of Clanton, is a model farmer in his way and a good example to other tillers of the soil. He tells us that he pays cash for all that he buys, and never buys much. He has raised all the corn, meat, syrup, potatoes, and other food crops that he will need for his family during the present year, and will only have to buy his sugar, coffee and dry goods. He says he knows that he looks like a rusty old backwoodsman, but that he doesn't owe a dollar, and he is not going to spend money for better clothes, because he can't do good work when his clothes are too good to stand farm work. When he comes to town he has money enough to pay for what he buys, and therefore gets it at a low cash price. We believe all that he tells us because for the past nine years he has come into the VIEW office regularly during the month of January to pay cash in advance for his paper, and he has always kept his subscription paid a year ahead. He says he takes several other papers but the VIEW is the best one for him as long as he lives in Chilton. The greatest thing about it all is that one rarely meets as cheerful and happy a mortal as is old man Redding Jones. Suppose you try his pay as you go plan and be happy and cheerful too.

Mapesville Dots.

Our thriving town is in its quiet routine of business as before the holidays.

Mr. Turpin Ashurst, Mr. Garner and Miss Bobbie Glover have all returned from spending some delightful holidays.

Hugh Foshee and J. Smitherman have been visiting Mrs. Noah Foshee.

Mr. Leonard Gullahorn has had a most delightful visit here.

Mr. Tom Foshee has returned from his northern trip delighted.

Mr. Crumptop's family have had a most delightful trip to friends down the country.

Mr. Williams a highly respectable farmer has moved in.

Mr. James Griffin's storehouse occupied by Wallace Gullahorn caught on fire from the stove flue, but was luckily put out before much damage was done.

OUR $1 A WEEK Club System while as convenient to the buyer as any instalment system, is a wholesale spot cash system to us. The co-operation of the club members sells us 28 watches in each $28 Watch Club, and we get cash from the Club for each watch before it goes out, though each member only pays $1 a week. This is why we give you more for your money than any one else and why we are doing the largest watch business in the world. We sell only first quality goods, but our prices are about what others get for second quality. Our $10 Silver Watch is a substantial Silver (not imitation of any kind) Stem-Wind American Lever Watch—either hunting case or open. Our $25.00 Watch is a Stem-wind Open Face, first quality, stiffened Gold American Lever Watch, guaranteed to wear 20 years. It is fully equal to any watch sold for $35 by others. We find a first-class Stiffened Gold Case much more satisfactory and serviceable than any Solid Gold Case that can be sold at less than double the money, as cheap solid cases are invariably thin, weak, of low quality, and worthless after short use. Our $30 Watch contains numerous important patented improvements, of vital importance to accurate timing—Patent Dustproof, Patent Stem Wind, &c., which we control exclusively. It is fully equal for accuracy, appearance, durability and service, to any $75 Watch, either Open Face or Hunting. Our $42.50 Railroad Watch is especially constructed for the most exacting use, and is the finest Railroad Watch made, Open Face or Hunting. All these prices are either all cash or instalments $1.00 a week. An Alaska Watch Accident given free with each Watch.

AGRICULTURAL.

UNLEACHED WOOD ASHES.

Canada unleached wood ashes are usually guaranteed to contain six per cent. of potash. As stated by the chemist of the New Jersey experiment station in a bulletin recently issued, the average composition of eleven samples of ashes previously analyzed is: Phosphoric acid, 1.75 per cent.; potash, 5.58 per cent, and lime, 33.60 per cent. That ashes are not a uniform product is evident from the variations shown in six other samples by an analysis that is given. The selling price of five of these samples as stated in the bulletin at $18, $13.50, $13, $14 and $13.50 per ton, respectively. But two of the samples were as good as the average, nor is the highest selling price attached to the best sample.

The amount of plant food elements contained in an average sample of ashes, according to the bulletin referred to, can be bought for about $9 per ton. It is the general experience, however, that in certain soils the agricultural effect of the phosphoric acid, potash and lime is greater in wood ashes than in a proportionate mixture of the same elements in other forms. This is believed to be due to the special form of combination of the ingredients in ashes, which, in addition to their direct benefit, exert a favorable mechanical effect upon the soil. —New York World.

HOW TO CUT UP A HOG.

With a sharp ax and a sharp butcher's knife at hand, lay the hog on the chopping bench, side down. With the knife make a cut near the ear clear across the neck and down to the bone. With a dexterous stroke of the ax sever the head from the body. Lay the carcass on the back, a boy holding it upright and keeping the forelegs well apart. With the ax proceed to take out the chine or backbone. If it is desired to put as much of the hog into neat meat as possible, trim to the chine very close, taking out none of the skim or outside fat without it. Otherwise the cutter need not be particular how much meat comes away with the bone. What does not go with the neat meat will be in the offal or sausage, and nothing will be lost. Lay the chine aside, and with the knife finish separating the two divisions of the hog. Next strip off with the hands the leaves or flakes of fat from the middles to the hams. Seize the hock of the ham with the left hand, and with the knife in the other proceed to round out the ham, giving it a neat oval shape. Be very particular in shaping the ham. If it is spoiled in the first cutting, no subsequent trimming will put it into a form to suit exactly the fastidious public eye. Trim off the surplus lean and fat and projecting pieces of bone. Cut off the foot just above the hock joint. The piece, when finished, should have nearly the form of a regular oval, with its projecting handle or hock.

With the ax cut the shoulder from the middling, making the cut straight across near the elbow joint. Take off the end ribs or "spare bone" from the shoulder, as well as the other pieces, very closely, taking off all of both lean and fat that can be spared. If care was taken to cut away the head near the ear, the shoulder will be at first about as wide as long, having a good deal of the neck attached. If the meat is intended for sale, and the largest quantity of bacon is the primary object, let the piece remain so. But if it is preferred to have plenty of lard and sausage, cut a smart strip from off the neck side of the shoulder, and make the piece assume the form of a parallelogram, with the hock attached to one end. Trim a slice of fat from the back of the middling, take off the "short ribs," and, if preferred, remove the long ribs from the whole piece. The latter, however, is not often done by the farmers. Put the middling in nice shape by trimming it wherever needed, which, when finished, will be very much like a square in form, perhaps a little longer than broad, with a small circular piece cut out from the end next the ham.

The six pieces of neat meat are now ready for the salter. The head is next cut open longitudinally from side to side, separating the jowl from the top or "head," so-called. The jawbone of the jowl is cut at the angle or tip, and the "swallow," which is the larynx or upper part of the windpipe, is taken out. The head piece is next cut open vertically, and the lobe of the brain is taken out, and the ears and nose are removed.

The bone of the chine is cut at several places for the convenience of the cook, and the task of the cutter is finished. Besides the six pieces of neat meat, there are the chine, souse, jowl, head, fat, sausage, two spare and two short ribs, and various other small bits derived from from each hog. A good cutter, with an assistant to carry away the pieces and help otherwise, can cut from fifty to sixty hogs in a day.—American Agriculturist.

FARM AND GARDEN NOTES.

A fattening pen can be made profitable.

Watch the market and ship accordingly.

Fowls that we use to fatten are usually very hardy.

Do not try to grow a crop on soil not adapted to it.

The man who keeps his stables, sheds and yards the cleanest is the man who has the best-looking and healthiest stock.

Somebody makes the sensible suggestion that "the best way to keep a boy on the farm is to send him off it occasionally."

It is suggested that every farmers' institute should display a good collection of the best grasses and forage plants, roots and all.

Use plenty of straw in bedding animals. It will pay in the additional manure and in the comfort and cleanliness of the stock.

Shippers of farm produce should always send an invoice of each consignment by mail immediately after the goods are shipped. This is a very important matter to both shippers and receivers, and should never be overlooked.

You cannot afford to let the cows shrink their meas because the pasture gives out, any more than you can afford to go without fire in winter because the fuel is exhausted. There is no profit in the one and no comfort in the other.

WORDS OF WISDOM.

No man can live wrong and die happy.

People who think are the ones who act.

No man works well who does not work gladly.

If the heart is rotten how can the life be pure?

The really good man is the strongest man in the world.

You can never become contented without being thankful.

We are never so weak as when we think we are very strong.

Every time a man gets the smallpox the more likely it is to kill him.

No man can do his best for a cause in whose justice he does not believe.

The man who is disloyal to his convictions will not be loyal to anything.

If our principles are not worth living and dying for, what are they good for?

If we had no suffering in this life nobody could understand what love meant.

It is never hard to do the right thing. It is in deciding to do it where the tug comes in.

The only way by which men can become pure is to become filled with a love for purity.

When a man finds out that he needs knowlege he has his hand on the gate leading to it.

No man ever amounts to much who hasn't got confidence enough in himself to make an effort.

Instead of "putting off the old man" some people try to dress him up and make him look nice.

People who are always too poor to take a good newspaper, never have any trouble in raising money to go to a circus.—Indianapolis (Ind.) Ram's Horn.

The Land of Pluck.

Far over the sea is a famous little country generally known as Holland; but that name, even if it meant Hollow land, or How land? does not describe it half so well as this—The Funny Land of Pluck.

Verily, a queerer bit of earth was never shone upon by the sun nor washed by the tide. It is the oddest, funniest country that ever raised its head from the waves (and, between ourselves, it does not quite do that), the most topsy-turvy landscape, the most amphibious spot in the universe,—as the Man in the Moon can't deny—the chosen butt of the elements, and good-naturedly the laughing stock of mankind. Its people are the queerest and drollest of all the nations; and yet so plucky, so wise and resolute and strong, that "beating the Dutch" has become a bye-word for expressing the limits of mortal performance.

As for the country, for centuries it was not exactly anywhere; at least it objected to staying long just the same, in any one place. It may be said to have lain around loose on the waters of a certain portion of Europe, playing peek-a-boo with its inhabitants; now coming to the surface here and there to attend to matters, then taking a dive for change of scene and a most disastrous dive it often proved.

Rip Van Winkle himself changed less between his great sleeping and waking than Holland has altered many a time, between sunset and dawn. All its permanence and resoluteness seems to have been soaked out of it, or rather to have filtered from the land into the people. Every field hesitates whether to turn into a pond or not, and the ponds are always trying to leave the country by the shortest cut. One would suppose that under this condition of things the only untroubled creatures would be turtles and ducks; but no, strangest and most mysterious of all, every living thing in Holland appears to be throughly placid and content. The Dutch mind, so to speak, is at once anti-dry and waterproof. Little children run about in fields where once their grandfathers sailed over the billows; and youths and maidens row their pleasure-boats where their ancestors played "tag" among the haystacks. When the tide sweeps unceremoniously over Mynheer's garden, he lights his pipe, takes his fishing-rod, and sits down on his back porch to try his luck. If his pet pond breaks loose and slips away, he whistles, puts up a dam so that it cannot come back, and decides what crop shall be raised in its vacant place. None but the Dutch could live so tranquilly in Holland; though, for that matter, if it had not been for the Dutch, we may be sure there would have been, by this time, no Holland at all.

And yet this very Holland, besides holding its own place, has managed to gain a foothold in almost every quarter of the globe. An account of its colonies is a history in itself. In the East Indies alone it commands twenty-four millions of persons.—St. Nicholas.

Sight in Creeping Plants.

"My husband has broached a theory that I cannot remember to have met with before—namely, that creeping plants can see, or at any rate have some faculty equaling sight. He was sitting in the veranda with one foot up against a large pillar, near to which grows a kind of convolvulus. Its tendrils were leaning over into the veranda, and to Robert's surprise he presently noticed that they were visibly turning toward his leg. He remained in the same position, and in less than an hour the tendrils had laid themselves over his leg.

"This was in the early morning, and when at breakfast he told me of his discovery, we determined to make further experiments. When we went out into the veranda the tendrils had turned their heads back to the railing in disgust. We got a pole and leaned it up against the pillar, quite twelve inches from the nearest sprays of convolvulus.

"In ten minutes they had begun to curve themselves in that direction, and acted exactly as you might fancy a very slow snake would do if he wished to reach anything. The upper tendrils bent down and the side ones curved themselves until they touched the pole, and in a few hours were twisted quite round it.

"It was on the side away from the light, and excepting the faculty of sight we can think of no other means by which the tendrils could be aware that the pole had been placed there. They had to turn away from the light to reach it, and they set themselves in motion visibly within a few minutes of the pole's being there."—Mrs. Hunt's Book on India.

WOMAN'S WORLD.

PLEASANT LITERATURE FOR FEMININE READERS.

TALLEST AND WEALTHIEST PRINCESS.

Among the visitors of Mme. Carnot at the Elysee Palace were the Crown Prince and Crown Princess of Denmark, the latter famous for being the tallest and wealthiest Princess in Europe. Her stature is absolutely gigantic being over six feet two, and, so far as her fortune is concerned, she inherited $15,000,000 from her maternal grandfather, Prince Frederick of the Netherlands, beside the entire wealth of her father, the late King Charles of Sweden. She is extremely fond of Paris, a fact which is perhaps attributable to the existence of French blood in her veins, her father's father having been the famous French General Bernadotte, who was adopted as heir to the Swedish throne by the childless King Charles XIII. in 1802. Her grandmother, who died in 1860 as Queen of Sweden and Norway, was Mlle. Desiree Clary, the daughter of a Marseilles stockbroker, who jilted Napoleon Bonaparte, afterward first Emperor of the French, in order to marry his comrade and classmate, Bernadotte. Bernadotte was far from a model husband. During his lifetime he subjected her to neglect and even to downright cruelty. Oblivious of his own humble origin, he was everlastingly taunting her with her bourgeois birth. A strange history, indeed, might be written of the misfortunes which have befallen every one of the women who have been raised from the ranks of the people to seats on the thrones of Europe. Josephine de Beauharnais, her daughter Queen Hortense, Eugenie de Montijo and Nathalie de Ketchko have each in turn contributed sad chapters to the history of the heroines of royal romance, and have paid dearly for their greatness. —Chicago Herald.

"WOMEN IN MINIATURE."

The women of the middle class in Japan —the woman of the shop and factory—are seen everywhere so freely, and their intimacy is won so soon, that, without understanding them to their very souls, one can attempt to say a little more about them. Of these thousands of little persons met with everywhere—in the tea-houses, the theatres, the pagodas—the impression that remains is a besolutely deficient of seriousness. Whenever I think of them I involuntarily smile.

Astonishing figurines, that I see once more agitated, assiduous, a little similesque, running about with continual courtesies addressed to everybody, among their infinitesimal doll's baubles, in apartments as big as the hand, whose paper walls would fall in at the least blow. Women in miniature, both childish and aged, whose excessive grace, so mannered and mincing is it, turns to grimaces; whose everlasting laughter, contagious without gayety, is as irresistible as a titillation, and brings on at length the same irritating lassitude. They laugh from excess of amiability or from acquired habit; they laugh in the gravest circumstances of life; they laugh in the temples and at funerals.

Very small creatures, living in the midst of trifles as artifical and light as themselves. Their household utensils, in fine porcelain or thin metal, look like children's toys; their cups, their teakettles, are Liliputian, and their everlasting pipes are filled to overflowing with half a pinch of very fine tobacco, taken with the tips of their elegant little fingers.

Never seated, but crouching all day on mats of immaculate whiteness, they accomplish in that invariable posture almost all of the acts of their life. It is on the floor that they take their doll's dinners, served in microscopic crockery, and eaten delicately with the aid of chopsticks. It is on the floor, behind frail screens that barely conceal them, and surrounded with a confusion of queer little instruments—of little powder boxes, of little pots—that they proceed to their toilet, before mock mirrors that make one laugh. It is on the floor that they work, sew, embroider, play on their long-handled guitars, dream of imperceptible things, or address to their incomprehensible gods the long prayers of morning and evening.—Harper's Magazine.

FASHION NOTES.

Velvet calf is exceedingly popular for ladies' hand bags and purses.

Earrings with drops are beginning to be seen again, but the fancy for any species of this ornament is on the wane.

It is surmised that fur of which some shoulder capes are made comes from animals not yet mentioned in natural history.

Street dresses are from one to two inches on the ground, which shows how fashions repeat themselves in skirts as in everything else.

Colored glass beads are sewed as embroidery on the front of evening dresses and at the sides. Gaslight is supposed to enhance the effect.

You will find a short, white India silk or mousseline de sole gown useful for affairs to which you do not care to wear a train. These dresses are dainty when trimmed with knots of flowers.

The dressmaker's skill or art is shown to-day in the way she fits a princess gown, and when one is able to hide all evidences of the way to get into such a frock she feels that the acme of success is attained.

An odd and novel street dress is made of striped camel's hair, with a broad lace flounce on the bottom. It is finished with velvet to match at the top of the sleeves, and set in at the neck. The trimming is passementerie of cat's eyes.

Dress collars are not so high as they have been, and are rounded away in front, and may have a puff of mousseline, like a widow's ruche, above it, or else a lace ruffle of its own width gathered inside the top and falling low upon it.

Decidedly the most stylish among feather trimmings for evening dresses and opera cloaks are ostrich combined with marabout. The white ecru trimmings are exquisitely perfect, so soft and fluffy, but with stronger characteristics than marabout.

Feather stitching, light embroidery wrought on the silk, or insertions of filmy lace, either black or white, do not add to bulk or weight, and the entire absence of weight is one of the greatest recommendations of the petticoat of today, which some persons are declaring is going its last days.

HOUSEHOLD MATTERS.

TO REMOVE TOBACCO SMOKE.

Tobacco smoke has a way of clinging to a room and giving it a peculiar odor that sometimes cannot be removed by airing. One who has suffered recommends that a pail of water in which a handful of a hay is soaking be left in the room for an hour or so. At the end of that time the smell will have entirely disappeared. As all evidence of the cigar or pipe can be removed so readily the men can smoke in whatever room they please, provided they will place the pail of water in position when they are leaving.

CARE OF MATTRESSES.

A great deal of attention should be given to the proper airing of the mattress every morning; and at least once a week a stiff brush should remove the dust which will accumulate, even in the best ordered house, and under the tufts of cotton, or the bits of leather, or whatever is used to tack the mattress with. Attention should also be directed to the edge of the mattresses, when the braid is sewed on, for dust sifts under that. Where the bedroom is also the dressing-room dust cannot be avoided, but it may be at least changed, and it need not be allowed to accumulate.—New York Journal.

TO CLEAN BRASSES AND BRONZES.

The brass articles that are fashionable just now require careful attention to keep them clean and bright. If not lacquered, rub sweet oil on the flannel, then rub them over with rotten stone, using a second piece of flannel; finally polish with a chamois. If lacquered, wash with a soft brush in warm water and soap, wipe well and set before the fire until perfectly dry.

Bronzes are cleaned with sweet oil rubbed on with a brush, then rub off with a second brush and polish with a chamois. Another plan is to plunge them into boiling water until very hot, then wash with flannel and yellow soap, drying carefully with soft rags. If soap and water prove ineffectual try beeswax dissolved in turpentine, rubbed on and off with clean, soft rags.—Brooklyn Citizen.

INFANT'S BANDS.

Better bands than those made of flannel, which can be worn until the child is five or six weeks old, are those knit on four needles. One skein of three-thread Saxony will make two. Cast on sixty stitches on three needles and fasten as for a stocking. Knit three and purl one all around. Knit a piece in this manner six inches long, then bind all off except sixteen stitches, which keep on one needle. Knit back and forth like a garter until this piece is one inch long, then narrow one at each end until you have only six stitches, then bind off.

These can be worn with benefit until the child is past two years old. This saves the child from suffering with heat about the neck and shoulders, as it would if a flannel shirt of any kind were worn, while it would be very likely to creep away. They can be used without shrinking if they are washed in lukewarm water and borax, taking care to pull them the long way when drying. They are best rolled tightly in a towel and left to dry. —Ladies' Home Companion.

RECIPES.

Cabbage Catsup—Chop two large heads of cabbage, twenty-five cucumbers, two heads of cauliflower and six onions, sprinkle with salt and let stand over night. Drain, spice and pour over hot vinegar; seal.

Ginger Snaps—One cup of New Orleans molasses, one cup of sugar, three-fourths cup of butter; boil together two minutes. When cool add a heaping teaspoonful of soda dissolved in hot water, half a teaspoonful of cinnamon, a little ginger and enough flour to make a soft dough. Roll thin and bake in a quick oven.

Baked Apple Dumpling—Pare and core eight or ten apples. Roll out pieces of puff paste the size of a saucer. Put an apple in each piece and close the edges of the paste around the fruit. Lay the dumplings in a large flat dish. Pour over them a sauce made of one cup butter and three cups sugar well creamed together, and seasoned with nutmeg, and bake one hour. Peach dumplings are made in the same way.

Chicken Pates—Chop meat of cold chicken fine, and season with salt. Make a large cupful of rich brown butter, and, while on the fire, add two hard-boiled eggs minced fine, a little chopped parsley, and the meat of the chicken. Let this mixture almost boil. Have ready some pate pans of good rich paste, remove the covers with the edge of a knife, fill in with the mixture and arrange on a hot plater. In baking the crust it is a good plan to fill in with a square of stale bread, which is easily removed as soon as it comes from the oven. This keeps the crust from falling as it would otherwise do without the chicken mixture.

Indian-meal Mush—To each teacupful corn-meal add a teaspoonful of salt, and a half teacupful of cold water; next, add five teacupfuls of boiling water, stirring steadily. Place over the fire in a smooth iron kettle; stir steadily until it begins to bubble, cover tightly, place on back of stove to bubble steadily for an hour. This is a great improvement upon the tedious process of sifting the meal through the fingers, forming a few lumps with greater ease. Besides, there is no danger of using too much more meal for the quantity of water, which, of course, prevents a full expansion of the granules, resulting in a raw, unpleasant flavor.

Brown Thickening for Soup—Melt half a pound of butter, and if it separates at all skim and pour the oily portions carefully from the sediment. Into this liquid stir carefully half a pound of sifted flour. Stir, watching very closely as it bubbles until the color changes; when deep enough, that is, a decided brownish shade, but not dark, take it from the fire and put away in a little jar. It keeps for months in a cool place if properly made. The great secret is to cook it very thoroughly, and to a rich golden brown without the slightest taint of scorching. White thickening is made the same way, but with less heat, so as to cook the flour without changing color.

Women are longer lived than men. A woman of twenty may expect forty-two years more of life, a man of the same age only thirty-nine years.

The past season was in the main favorable for the hay crop.

Monopoly-Cursed.

The United States to-day is the worst monopoly-cursed nation on the face of the earth. They have made more millionaires in twenty years than all Europe and England have made in 500 years. Rheumatism.

Is of two kinds, acute and chronic. The former is accompanied by high fever, and in the swollen joints there is intense pain, which often suddenly changes from one part of the body to another. Chronic rheumatism is without fever and not so severe, but more continuous, and liable to come on at every storm or after slight exposure. Rheumatism is known to be a disease of the blood and Hood's Sarsaparilla has had great success in curing it. This medicine possesses qualities which neutralize acidity and purify, enrich and vitalize the blood.

Castle Garden Changes Hands.

At noon last Wednesday Comptroller Myers, acting under instructions from the sinking fund commission representing the city of New York, received from the state board of emigration the keys of Castle Garden, and that historic pile of bricks and masonry, with its many annexes, became city property. The old garden will not wholly lapse into obscurity. The property will be turned over to the park commission. It was built for a fortress in 1807. It was intended to guard the outlets of both North and East rivers, but it was never equipped as a place of defence.

About the year 1850 it was fitted up with seats and converted into a concert hall. In '52, when P. T. Barnum brought Jenny Lind to this country, he secured Castle Garden in which to introduce her to the American public, because of its proximity to the elite quarters of the metropolis.

In the year '47 the legislature of New York, established May 5th, the state board of emigration. It was in '54 that Castle Garden was secured as a general landing place for emigrants. During the time the Garden was used as a landing bureau the names of 9,720,667 immigrants were recorded upon its books. Of these people 3,000,000 were Irish, 3,000,000 Germans and the remainder divided among all other nationalities.

Making Amends.

Never be ashamed to apologize when you have done wrong in domestic affairs. Let that be a law of your life. The best thing I ever heard of my grandfather, whom I never saw, was this: That once having unrighteously rebuked one of his children, he himself having lost his patience and perhaps having been misinformed of the child's doings, found out his mistake, and in the evening of the same day gathered all his family together and said: "Now I have one explanation to make, and one thing to say. Thomas, this morning I rebuked you in the presence of the family, and now I ask your forgiveness in their presence." It must have taken some courage to do that. It was right. Never be ashamed to apologize.—Talmage.

The Battle of Life.

The true hero will endeavor to make the most of life, and to this end the first consideration is a robust constitution. Like a good general on the battle plain, who, when expecting an attack from the enemy, will entrench himself in fortifications, so he, when disease is in the atmosphere or hovering in ambush amid climatic changes, will fortify his system against every encroachment the grim monster may seek to make. Many a grand life has ended for want of timely precaution in the hour of need. When fever and influenza are abroad, when the damp chilly days touch the marrow bones, when effluvia and malaria, walk hand in hand, then it is that the system should be fortified by a use of that superb strengthening tonic alterative of Dr. John Bull's Sarsaparilla, which keeps the blood pure and the functions regulated, so that disease cannot enter the citadel of life.

There are now 7,000 millionaires in the United States, where, in 1800, there were only two.

LADIES needing a tonic, or children who want building up, should take Brown's Iron Bitters. It is pleasant to take, cures Malaria, Indigestion, Biliousness and Liver Complaints, makes the blood rich and pure.

YOUR MONEY, OR YOUR LIFE?

This question is a "pert" one, but we mean it. Will you sacrifice a few paltry dollars, and save your life? or will you allow your blood to become tainted, and your system run-down, until, finally, you are laid away in the grave? Better be in time, and "hold up" your hands for Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, a guaranteed remedy for all scrofulous and other blood-taints, from whatever cause arising. It cures all Skin and Scalp Diseases, Ulcers, Sores, Swellings and kindred ailments. It is powerfully tonic as well as alterative, or blood-cleansing, in its effects, hence it strengthens the system and restores vitality, thereby dispelling all those languid, "tired feelings" experienced by the debilitated. Especially has it manifested its potency in curing Tetter, Salt-rheum, Eczema, Erysipelas, Boils, Carbuncles, Sore Eyes, Goitre, or Thick Neck, and Enlarged Glands. JOE DUBUQUE'S ESCAPE.

Joe Dubuque was a daring thief, but he was in jail at last. He was charged with a robbery of considerable moment—$11,000—and this and his standing as a thief were such as to insure him a long term if convicted. Money was wasted like water in his defense. The best legal talent was brought to his succor. A great trial took place, some lies were told and the affair was conducted with all the accessories of a highpriced legal tableau.

Dubuque was convicted and sentenced to ten years in the penitentiary. The case went to the Supreme Court on appeal, bail being fixed at $25,000. The bail would have been furnished in cash, but it was decided to try other means.

The renowned "Mollie Matches," whose face adorns Inspector Byrnes's collection in New York, was Dubuque's staunch friend. There was also Dubuque's wife. She was pretty, brave and hopeful. Dubuque was a good prisoner and behaved well. The officers liked him, and he was granted many liberties. They watched him narrowly, however, and when he took his exercise each day his cell was searched.

It was decided to release Dubuque by breaking into the jail from the outside. No effort was made to supply Dubuque with tools or weapons, as he knew his cell was daily ransacked, and so informed them. So the outside scheme was evolved and set in execution.

The Sheriff became vaguely impressed with a sense of danger. He resolved to take Dubuque to the penitentiary to await the high Court's finding. He did not even tell his deputies or turnkeys. He would start the next afternoon at 2 o'clock. When Dubuque's pretty wife came to see him on the day before the proposed start for the State prison the Sheriff, who was kindly and felt some degree of sympathy for the faithful creature, asked her whether she meant to visit Dubuque the next day.

"Certainly," she said.

The officer reflected a moment while the girl watched him. She knew in an instant some move was afoot. At last he said:

"Come as early as 11.45 and take dinner with Joe. I'm going to give him a good dinner tomorrow."

"Very well, I'll come," said the girl, and went in to Dubuque and straightway told him the whole conversation.

"Wants you to be here to dinner?" said Dubuque, reflectively. "You generally come at 3 in the afternoon."

Then the rascal knitted his brows and thought hard while the girl waited.

"The sheriff is onto something," said Dubuque at last, "and is going to make me safe somewhere. Let me look at this paper a minute," and he picked up one of the several with which his cell was furnished.

"That's it," he said after a moment's reading. "He's planning to take me to the Pen. The train starts at 2 p. m."

"I think so, too," said the girl. "Now what shall we do? Shall I notify Matches and the men?"

"No," said Dubuque, "I have never attempted anything so far and just let the boys work; but I've been thinking all the time and I've got a plan I believe will work. I know a way out of this jail and a place to hide within fifty yards of it. That is, I think I do; it won't cost much to test it anyhow."

His plans were very simple and were to be acted upon at once. That afternoon she made a second visit to Dubuque and gave him a thin cloth cap without being detected and also a round bar of India rubber about a foot long and an inch and a half in diameter.

"I could knock a cow down with that," said Dubuque, "and never leave a mark. It's better than a sandbag."

The girl also proffered him a pistol.

"Kill them, Joe, if they try to stop you," and her eyes lighted with anticipated slaughter.

"No," said Dubuque, drawing back. "I don't mind a tap or two with a billy or a sand-bag, but I won't murder. I never killed a man and I never will. I'll keep that sin off my hands," and Dubuque crossed himself devoutly.

The girl went away. At 4.30 that afternoon a turnkey came with supper. Ordinarily he did not open the cell door, but passed the food through a little window. When he came to Dubuque's door the prisoner was seated at his little table, apparently drawing on a paper.

"What's that, Dubuke, a plan of the jail?" he asked.

"No, sir."

"Pass it out and let me see it."

But Dubuke sat down on the edge of his bunk with a sullen air, and folding his arms, said never a word.

"Well, then," said the turnkey, "I'll come and get it," and he began to unlock the door.

Dubuke never moved. The turnkey entered and started for the table. Just as he passed the captive, a swift blow fell on his head and he sank to the floor. It was the rubber billy. A prisoner in the next cell heard the noise and at once divined the trouble going on. He at once began to howl "Rock of Ages" at the top of his voice, to cover Dubuke's work.

"That song will be worth money and friends to him when I am out," thought Dubuque, as he bound and gagged the smitten turnkey. Then he put on the man's hat and coat and taking his keys stepped out and locked the door. The senseless turnkey was locked in. Dubuque went at once to the cage at the door and, unlocking it, let himself in and locked the door behind. Then he tapped three times with his key on the outer wicket, which was the turnkey's sign to the doorkeeper to unlock and let him out. Dubuque expected to pass undetected. The turnkey's hat was a big slouch, which, as he kept his face half turned from the guard at the door, protected his features from view. There were several offices to go through after this, but Dubuque was hopeful he might manage it. It was growing dark at the close of a winter afternoon. This would help.

But just as Dubuque rapped at the outer door to get out an unforeseen thing happened. The vocalist was still bawling "Rock of Ages" and waiting for his supper, when "bang!" came the report of a pistol inside the jail. It was the turnkey who, though tightly bound and gagged, on recovering his wits managed to fire his pistol without taking it from his belt.

"I should have taken away his revolver," reflected Dubuque hastily, as he heard the noise. But he was equal to the occasion. In an instant he turned back and began unlocking the inner door again which led to the cells. The outside guard was tearing open the outer door, while half a dozen deputies, already arrived, were waiting to get in. Dubuque got his door open at the same time the outer door swung wide. In an instant the mob of deputies rushed inside to the cells without regarding Dubuque. This alert yet thoughtful individual waited until all were in, closed and locked the door, and then started through the just deserted offices to the world beyond.

In the last door he met the Sheriff, who was to banquet him the next day. He did not recognize Dubuque, and asked hastily what was the matter in the jail. For reply Dubuque smote his would-be entertainer to the floor with his billy. Then he ran into the open air.

He knew pursuit would be hot on his heels in less than five minutes. Ten rods from the jail he turned up a stairway to a lawyer's office. In the stairway he changed to the cloth cap, hiding the big slouch of the turnkey in the coal-box which stood in the hall.

"Is Mr. Jameson in?" he asked as he came into the office."

"No," said the clerk, a very young man. "Mr. Woodward went out on Woodland avenue with a lady to see a man who was sick and who wanted to employ him in the Joe Dubuque case."

"I'll wait a while," said Dubuque, and taking a chair he sat looking out the window at the darkening street. He had sent his girl to take this lawyer away from his office so that he might use it to hide in. The lawyer knew him by sight, so it would not do to have him there.

"That's what I call one way to employ a lawyer," said Matches, when he heard of it. While Dubuque waited in the lawyer's office, pursuit ran up and down the sidewalk beneath its windows. The pursued took a thoughtful pleasure in watching it. At last, a detective who was called in got one of the customary cues and led the entire chase to a distant part of the city. Dubuque was safe.

"I never feel absolutely removed from danger," said Dubuque, "until a detective is chasing me. Then I know I'm safe."

While Dubuque sat by the window a carriage drove up and stopped across the street. Dubuque lighted a cigar the clerk gave him to comfort him while waiting, and watched the carriage narrowly. He must make no mistake. Presently a little hand holding a white handkerchief was placed in the opening in the door. It was Dubuque's carriage. But he smoked on and was in no hurry. Let it get a little darker. The carriage waited and Dubuque waited. At last it was quite dark.

"I will see Mr. Jameson later," said Dubuque to the clerk. "Or tell him I'll write to him."

Then he went across to the carriage. The door was opened and he stepped in. The pretty girl was waiting.

"Through thick and thin," he said as he took her in his arms and kissed her. As they passed the jail a few feet further on, Dubuque said, half aloud: "I must look after that 'Rock of Ages' man."

Then he kissed the pretty girl again.

Joe Dubuque had escaped.—[Kansas City Times.

How a Man Paralysed His Arm.

C. Hagerman, a resident of Morrisville, has lost the use of his right hand in a singular manner. He went to bed as usual one night a week ago and fell asleep with his right hand under his head. On awakening in the morning he could not raise his arm. It was paralysed, and all efforts thus far to put the blood in circulation have failed. It is thought it will be months before he will be able to use the hand again.—[Philadelphia Record.

ALLIANCE NOTES.

NEWS OF THE ORDER FROM ALL SECTIONS.

Items of Interest to Alliancemen Everywhere.

The Gwinnett County Alliance met a few weeks ago and began the ground work of a $15,000 guano factory.

***

The Alliancemen of Texas are pushing ahead in the matter of a new cotton bagging factory. It has been located at Marble Falls.

***

***

An Alliance co-operative store is to be opened at Ocala, Fla., as soon as $15,000, the needed capital stock, is fully subscribed. One-third of the amount is already in hand.

***

Out in Kansas and some other of the western states, the Alliances are confident that singing campaign Alliance songs, had no little to do with the great victories won by the farmers.

***

Buncombe County Alliance has arranged a schedule of prices with the tobacco warehousemen of Asheville, N. C., and the warehouse committee make an earnest appeal to the members of the order to recognize this action as binding upon them until the experiment has been fully tried, and not to be drawn away by "oily-tongued drummers for other markets."

***

The Alliance is all right in principle, says the Gold Leaf, of North Carolina; the only danger in sight is in its being led into wrong paths of designing men who have only self-interest at heart. There is no crime in combining for self-protection, and in doing this the farmers do not necessarily prove that they are antagonistic to the rights of any other honest man. The trouble with them is that they have not been more self-assertive in the past.

***

The success of the Farmers' Alliance is in the education of the masses of the people. This education will lead them into a desire for more independence of life; and that desire will force them to demand a change in the condition of the government, which has brought them to their present depressed and oppressed condition. The education of the people will be the death of class legislation, and the birth of equal rights to all.

***

Shall the Alliancemen of America—free citizens of what ought to be a free country, assert their rights and obtain justice. Will they stand like true men, and do their duty, demanding equal rights, equal laws and justice? Shall they demand a new civilization and a new system of finance, and equality of laws, which guarantees the high character of citizenship, which they deserve; or shall they degenerate into the conditions of tenants and serfs.

***

The following telegram from London to the New York Herald is important, showing what the London Times thinks of the Farmers' Alliance and the third party movement in America:

"The Times, commenting on M. Leon Say's criticism of American finances and the programme of the Farmers' Alliance, says:

"'It is probable that old party ties in America will for some time to come prevent the distinct emergence of a third party with a programme such as that of the Farmers' Alliance. But the new party will make its influence felt in both the older organizations. It would be a mistake to underrate the significance of the movement.'

***

It is reported that an auxiliary to the Farmers' Alliance has been organized in southwestern Kansas, the object of which is mutual protection from loan and investment companies. There has been a growing inclination to have something done among the alliance members to prevent the foreclosure of mortgages and subsequent sale of farms on account of the non-payment of interest, and this feeling has become so intense that it has at last resulted in the formation of this organization, the members of which are bound by oath to go to the assistance of any member who is in danger of losing his property through the action of parties holding mortgages. Already this movement has extended over the entire southwestern part of the state, and members have twice signalized their readiness to aid a distressed brother.

***

Brethren of the Farmers' Alliance, suppose we make this a year of practical progress in Alliance matters. We cannot stand still on a slippery hillside, and if we do not go forward we will certainly slip back. There are no matters of politics that need interfere with us this year, and we may keep perfectly cool, trusting to the wisdom of the next congress to give the country such relief as we seek. In the meantime let us make our homes more home-like and our farms more farm-like. We will never get any relief by growling, but we must help ourselves and try to put in every hour advantageously. Keep the social and agricultural features of the order prominently before the people. Let us encourage our lame brethren who are dragging along behind, and let us begin by enthusing ourselves. We really have much to be thankful for. * * —TOM SAWYER in Florida Farmers' Alliance.

THE TROUBLE IN KANSAS.

A Topeka, Kansas, dispatch of Monday says: The war which was begun on Frank McGrath, president of the Farmers' Alliance, as soon as the Turner letter had been published, has broken out anew and threatens to play havoc with all caucus agreements. The judiciary committee which investigated McGrath's alleged connection with the Turner letter, has, after more than a week's deliberation, decided to request the president's resignation, and the president has fully decided that he will stay till he is forced out. There is no provision in the Alliance constitution by which he can be ousted, and the president declares that he will not resign unless the Alliance at large demands it, and he wants to know what the judiciary committee is going to do about it. The resignation of McGrath will be requested at once by the executive council of that body. President McGrath was requested to bring before the committee an affidavit from Congressman Turner, Senator Berry and Congressman Perkins, exonerating him from any collusion with the Republican leaders. The president either had not attempted to secure this or has been unable to do so. A detective was then employed to investigate his record for the last three months, and it was his report to the committee which has resulted in the alliance president's temporary disgrace. He is charged with having had frequent consultations with Republican leaders, and having made expenditures from the alliance funds which were not in the line of his duties as president.

ELIGIBILITY IN THE ALLIANCE.

President Livingiton, in a long letter to the sub-Alliances and Alliancemen, regarding the eligibility question, among other things, says:

"It was made my duty at Macon by the State Alliance to bring to your notice that there were members in the order who were not eligible when received. The same convention required of me in the event that such members were not dismissed, to suspend the Alliance to which they are attached. Please find here the eligibility clause as amended by the last State and National convention held in August and December, 1890: 'No person shall be admitted as a member of this order, except a white person over sixteen years of age, who is a believer in the existence of a Supreme Being, and has resided in the state more than six months, and is either: 1st, a farmer or farm laborer; 2d, a country mechanic; 3d, a country preacher; 4th, a country school teacher; 5th, a country doctor; 6th, an editor or editors of a paper who support all national demands and the demands of the State Alliance under whose jurisdiction he may live, provided that no sub-Alliance shall initiate an editor until the County President and secretary shall indorse and the State President approve application. Provided further, the State President may suspend any editor from membership for using or permitting his paper to be used against the Alliance until the next meeting of the State Alliance, when said Alliance may re-instate or expel him from the order again. "If any one shall apply for membership under section one, and it shall be known to the committee of investigation that he has other interests, that do not harmonize with the objects of the order, it shall be the duty of the committee to report adversely to his admission; and it shall further be the duty of the sub-Alliance to reject his application."

ALLIANCE LECTURERS FOR GEORGIA.

The leaders of the Farmers' Alliance in Georgia are determined to make their organization as perfect as possible, and to this end alliance lecturers have been appointed to visit each congressional district. These officers are to be instructed by the state lecturer and their duties even defined by a resolution. The following is the official record of the action of the committee:

The executive committee of the State Alliance with the president have arranged for lectures for the state as follows:

First congressional district, W. A. Wilson and Wimberly.

Fourth congressional district, B. Williams and W. C. Wilson.

Fifth congressional district, W. S. Copeland, A. P. Farrow and Palmer.

And by prompt action they will begin their work about the 6th of February. These lecturers will receive their instructions from the state lecturer in Atlanta on a day named by him as agreed upon by the president and executive committee. The state has been parceled out so as to give the brotherhood in every section of the state the advantage of an early opportunity to hear their lectures. The president and Hon. M. V. Calvin will assist these lecturers whenever necessary or when called for by the brethren. The president and executive committee earnestly request the brethren to attend the appointments in their counties and determine to do their full duty in the future, remembering that our effort is to build up the order in Georgia and establish the members, well grounded in the necessity, objects, principles and platforms of the order. Let us begin the new year with increased zeal and knowledge and every brother performing his duty and thereby retain our fair name as a State organization. If they accept their appointments, the lecturers named above will meet the State lecturer in the secretary's office, Atlanta, Ga., on January 27th, to get their outfit necessary for their work. Each appointee will receive as compensation the per diem fixed by the last State Alliance for the State lecturer.

DELUDED NEGROES.

The Liberia Colonization Scheme Declared a Swindle.

The excitement among the negroes over the Liberia colonization scheme, which is being engineered by the United States and the Congo National Emigration Steamship company, does not abate. It is estimated that two thousand negroes have been rendezvousing in Atlanta, having come from Texas and Mississippi to wait for the promised ship to take them, as they expect, from Savannah to Africa, and the cold weather of the past few days has found them in such destitution that the city has in many instances been compelled to aid them. THE CONSTITUTION has had the Congo company investigated and disclosures in that paper have created no little excitement among homeless negroes who have put their money into the scheme. There is some talk among those who have contributed of bringing the matter before the courts, but as each has paid so little it is not probable that such action will be taken.

AGAINST LABOR AGENTS.

A Law That Will Stop Their Work in North Carolina.

An important bill passed the North Carolina house of representatives, Wednesday. It is the Georgia law regarding labor agents, requiring them to pay an annual license tax before they can conduct that business. This law was so altered that the license will cost $1,000 for each county in which agents operate. The purpose of the law, as plainly expressed, is to stop the work of the labor agents, who, it was alleged, unsettled labor, injure the farming interests and deceive the negroes. The penalty for violation of the law is very severe.

A Raleigh dispatch says: The bill for the protection of the state's oyster interest was ratified at 1 o'clock Wednesday, and an hour and a quarter afterwards a company of troops embarked at Elizabeth City to carry out the law and break up the oyster piracy.

The firm of Johnson & Murdock, at Nashville, made an assignment Wednesday. The failure was brought about by the financial troubles of one of the members of the firm. The assets consist of a very large stock of china and queensware, fancy pottery, etc., and is valued at over $35,000. The liabilities are $17,981.

The Southern Passenger Association has made a reduction on second-class tickets from Dalton, Ga., Rome, Ga., Chattanooga and Atlanta to Memphis, Tenn., the feeder for all points in Texas. This reduction goes into effect on February 1st, and was made to meet a reduction by the Memphis and Charleston road between Chattanooga and Memphis, which also takes effect on the 1st.

When the remaining indictments against ex-Treasurer Hemingway, for embezzlement, were called in the circuit court at Jackson, Miss., Wednesday, his counsel pleaded that his former conviction and sentence to five years in the penitentiary was a bar to further prosecution, and, notwithstanding the objection of the district attorney, the court held all other charges against the ex-treasurer dismissed.

FATAL EXPLOSION.

A Hotel Blown Up by Natural Gas.

The first great disaster that Findlay, Ohio, has ever experienced from the use of natural gas occurred shortly before 2 o'clock Sunday afternoon, in the Hotel Marvin. The force of the explosion was so great that it blew out a flame of ignited gas and no fire followed the awful ruin which the shock caused. The city was rocked as if in an earthquake by the concussion and all the windows on the square were demolished, while the wreck of the hotel building was all but complete. Three waiter girls were killed outright, and about a dozen other persons injured, some of whom will probably die.

Fashions in House Painting.

There are regular fashions in house painting which change as regularly, though not as often, as those of feminine dress. Just now the fashionable color is yellow, and if you go to any suburban neighborhood you will find more than half of the new houses painted to resemble the canary's wing. The Lowly.

"I wear no laurel wreath," she said,
"No listening world hangs on my word,
No flattering train by me is led,
No nations by my deeds are stirred.
I'm neither dazzling, rich or grand;
Among the lowly ranks I stand.

"My nod can turn no empire's fate,
Nor do men battle for my smile;
No serf upon my mandates wait,
I cannot even set a style;
The welkin rings not with my name,
I am a stranger unto fame.

"And yet my heart sings all the day,
My fireside joys are dear to me;
I gladly go my humble way;
This I have heard a truth to be—
That bitter sweet is fame at best,
The lowly are the happiest."

JOE DUBUQUE'S ESCAPE.

Joe Dubuque was a daring thief, but he was in jail at last. He was charged with a robbery of considerable moment—$11,000—and this and his standing as a thief were such as to insure him a long term if convicted. Money was wasted like water in his defense. The best legal talent was brought to his succor. A great trial took place, some lies were told and the affair was conducted with all the accessories of a highpriced legal tableau.

Dubuque was convicted and sentenced to ten years in the penitentiary. The case went to the Supreme Court on appeal, bail being fixed at $25,000. The bail would have been furnished in cash, but it was decided to try other means.

The renowned "Mollie Matches," whose face adorns Inspector Byrnes's collection in New York, was Dubuque's staunch friend. There was also Dubuque's wife. She was pretty, brave and hopeful. Dubuque was a good prisoner and behaved well. The officers liked him, and he was granted many liberties. They watched him narrowly, however, and when he took his exercise each day his cell was searched.

It was decided to release Dubuque by breaking into the jail from the outside. No effort was made to supply Dubuque with tools or weapons, as he knew his cell was daily ransacked, and so informed them. So the outside scheme was evolved and set in execution.

The Sheriff became vaguely impressed with a sense of danger. He resolved to take Dubuque to the penitentiary to await the high Court's finding. He did not even tell his deputies or turnkeys. He would start the next afternoon at 2 o'clock. When Dubuque's pretty wife came to see him on the day before the proposed start for the State prison the Sheriff, who was kindly and felt some degree of sympathy for the faithful creature, asked her whether she meant to visit Dubuque the next day.

"Certainly," she said.

The officer reflected a moment while the girl watched him. She knew in an instant some move was afoot. At last he said:

"Come as early as 11.45 and take dinner with Joe. I'm going to give him a good dinner tomorrow."

"Very well, I'll come," said the girl, and went in to Dubuque and straightway told him the whole conversation.

"Wants you to be here to dinner?" said Dubuque, reflectively. "You generally come at 3 in the afternoon."

Then the rascal knitted his brows and thought hard while the girl waited.

"The sheriff is onto something," said Dubuque at last, "and is going to make me safe somewhere. Let me look at this paper a minute," and he picked up one of the several with which his cell was furnished.

"That's it," he said after a moment's reading. "He's planning to take me to the Pen. The train starts at 2 p. m."

"I think so, too," said the girl. "Now what shall we do? Shall I notify Matches and the men?"

"No," said Dubuque, "I have never attempted anything so far and just let the boys work; but I've been thinking all the time and I've got a plan I believe will work. I know a way out of this jail and a place to hide within fifty yards of it. That is, I think I do; it won't cost much to test it anyhow."

His plans were very simple and were to be acted upon at once. That afternoon she made a second visit to Dubuque and gave him a thin cloth cap without being detected and also a round bar of India rubber about a foot long and an inch and a half in diameter.

"I could knock a cow down with that," said Dubuque, "and never leave a mark. It's better than a sandbag."

The girl also proffered him a pistol.

"Kill them, Joe, if they try to stop you," and her eyes lighted with anticipated slaughter.

"No," said Dubuque, drawing back. "I don't mind a tap or two with a billy or a sand-bag, but I won't murder. I never killed a man and I never will. I'll keep that sin off my hands," and Dubuque crossed himself devoutly.

The girl went away. At 4.30 that afternoon a turnkey came with supper. Ordinarily he did not open the cell door, but passed the food through a little window. When he came to Dubuque's door the prisoner was seated at his little table, apparently drawing on a paper.

"What's that, Dubuke, a plan of the jail?" he asked.

"No, sir."

"Pass it out and let me see it."

But Dubuke sat down on the edge of his bunk with a sullen air, and folding his arms, said never a word.

"Well, then," said the turnkey, "I'll come and get it," and he began to unlock the door.

Dubuke never moved. The turnkey entered and started for the table. Just as he passed the captive, a swift blow fell on his head and he sank to the floor. It was the rubber billy. A prisoner in the next cell heard the noise and at once divined the trouble going on. He at once began to howl "Rock of Ages" at the top of his voice, to cover Dubuke's work.

"That song will be worth money and friends to him when I am out," thought Dubuque, as he bound and gagged the smitten turnkey. Then he put on the man's hat and coat and taking his keys stepped out and locked the door. The senseless turnkey was locked in. Dubuque went at once to the cage at the door and, unlocking it, let himself in and locked the door behind. Then he tapped three times with his key on the outer wicket, which was the turnkey's sign to the doorkeeper to unlock and let him out. Dubuque expected to pass undetected. The turnkey's hat was a big slouch which, as he kept his face half turned from the guard at the door, protected his features from view. There were several offices to go through after this, but Dubuque was hopeful he might manage it. It was growing dark at the close of a winter afternoon. This would help.

But just as Dubuque rapped at the outer door to get out an unforeseen thing happened. The vocalist was still bawling "Rock of Ages" and waiting for his supper, when "bang!" came the report of a pistol inside the jail. It was the turnkey who, though tightly bound and gagged, on recovering his wits managed to fire his pistol without taking it from his belt.

"I should have taken away his revolver," reflected Dubuque hastily, as he heard the noise. But he was equal to the occasion. In an instant he turned back and began unlocking the inner door again which led to the cells. The outside guard was tearing open the outer door, while half a dozen deputies, already arrived, were waiting to get in. Dubuque got his door open at the same time the outer door swung wide. In an instant the mob of deputies rushed inside to the cells without regarding Dubuque. This alert yet thoughtful individual waited until all were in, closed and locked the door, and then started through the just deserted offices to the world beyond.

In the last door he met the Sheriff, who was to banquet him the next day. He did not recognize Dubuque, and asked hastily what was the matter in the jail. For reply Dubuque smote his would-be entertainer to the floor with his billy. Then he ran into the open air.

He knew pursuit would be hot on his heels in less than five minutes. Ten rods from the jail he turned up a stairway to a lawyer's office. In the stairway he changed to the cloth cap, hiding the big slouch of the turnkey in the coal-box which stood in the hall.

"Is Mr. Jameson in?" he asked as he came into the office."

"No," said the clerk, a very young man. "Mr. Woodward went out on Woodland avenue with a lady to see a man who was sick and who wanted to employ him in the Joe Dubuque case."

"I'll wait a while," said Dubuque, and taking a chair he sat looking out the window at the darkening street. He had sent his girl to take this lawyer away from his office so that he might use it to hide in. The lawyer knew him by sight, so it would not do to have him there.

"That's what I call one way to employ a lawyer," said Matches, when he heard of it. While Dubuque waited in the lawyer's office, pursuit ran up and down the sidewalk beneath its windows. The pursued took a thoughtful pleasure in watching it. At last, a detective who was called in got one of the customary cues and led the entire chase to a distant part of the city. Dubuque was safe.

"I never feel absolutely removed from danger," said Dubuque, "until a detective is chasing me. Then I know I'm safe."

While Dubuque sat by the window a carriage drove up and stopped across the street. Dubuque lighted a cigar the clerk gave him to comfort him while waiting, and watched the carriage narrowly. He must make no mistake. Presently a little hand holding a white handkerchief was placed in the opening in the door. It was Dubuque's carriage. But he smoked on and was in no hurry. Let it get a little darker. The carriage waited and Dubuque waited. At last it was quite dark.

"I will see Mr. Jameson later," said Dubuque to the clerk. "Or tell him I'll write to him."

Then he went across to the carriage. The door was opened and he stepped in. The pretty girl was waiting.

"Through thick and thin," he said as he took her in his arms and kissed her. As they passed the jail a few feet further on, Dubuque said, half aloud: "I must look after that 'Rock of Ages' man."

Then he kissed the pretty girl again.

It is thought it will be months before he will be able to use the hand again.—[Philadelphia Record.

ALLIANCE NOTES.

NEWS OF THE ORDER FROM ALL SECTIONS.

Items of Interest to Alliancemen Everywhere.

The Gwinnett County Alliance met a few weeks ago and began the ground work of a $15,000 guano factory.

***

The Alliancemen of Texas are pushing ahead in the matter of a new cotton bagging factory. It has been located at Marble Falls.

***

***

An Alliance co-operative store is to be opened at Ocala, Fla., as soon as $15,000, the needed capital stock, is fully subscribed. One-third of the amount is already in hand.

***

Out in Kansas and some other of the western states, the Alliances are confident that singing campaign Alliance songs, had no little to do with the great victories won by the farmers.

***

Buncombe County Alliance has arranged a schedule of prices with the tobacco warehousemen of Asheville, N. C., and the warehouse committee make an earnest appeal to the members of the order to recognize this action as binding upon them until the experiment has been fully tried, and not to be drawn away by "oily-tongued drummers for other markets."

***

The Alliance is all right in principle, says the Gold Leaf, of North Carolina; the only danger in sight is in its being led into wrong paths of designing men who have only self-interest at heart. There is no crime in combining for self-protection, and in doing this the farmers do not necessarily prove that they are antagonistic to the rights of any other honest man. The trouble with them is that they have not been more self-assertive in the past.

***

The success of the Farmers' Alliance is in the education of the masses of the people. This education will lead them into a desire for more independence of life; and that desire will force them to demand a change in the condition of the government, which has brought them to their present depressed and oppressed condition. The education of the people will be the death of class legislation, and the birth of equal rights to all.

***

Shall the Alliancemen of America—free citizens of what ought to be a free country, assert their rights and obtain justice. Will they stand like true men, and do their duty, demanding equal rights, equal laws and justice? Shall they demand a new civilization, and a new system of finance, and equality of laws, which guarantee the high character of citizenship, which they deserve; or shall they degenerate into the conditions of tenants and serfs.

***

The following telegram from London to the New York Herald is important, showing what the London Times thinks of the Farmers' Alliance and the third party movement in America:

"The Times, commenting on M. Leon Say's criticism of American finances and the programme of the Farmers' Alliance, says:

"'It is probable that old party ties in America will for some time to come prevent the distinct emergence of a third party with a programme such as that of the Farmers' Alliance. But the new party will make its influence felt in both the older organizations. It would be a mistake to underrate the significance of the movement."

***

It is reported that an auxiliary to the Farmers' Alliance has been organized in southwestern Kansas, the object of which is mutual protection from loan and investment companies. There has been a growing inclination to have something done among the alliance members to prevent the foreclosure of mortgages and subsequent sale of farms on account of the non-payment of interest, and this feeling has become so intense that it has at last resulted in the formation of this organization, the members of which are bound by oath to go to the assistance of any member who is in danger of losing his property through the action of parties holding mortgages. Already this movement has extended over the entire southwestern part of the state, and members have twice signalized their readiness to aid a distressed brother.

***

Brethren of the Farmers' Alliance, suppose we make this a year of practical progress in Alliance matters. We cannot stand still on a slippery hillside, and if we do not go forward we will certainly slip back. There are no matters of politics that need interfere with us this year, and we may keep perfectly cool, trusting to the wisdom of the next congress to give the country such relief as we seek. In the meantime let us make our homes more home-like and our farms more farm-like. We will never get any relief by growling, but we must help ourselves and try to put in every hour advantageously. Keep the social and agricultural features of the order prominently before the people. Let us encourage our lame brethren who are dragging along behind, and let us begin by enthusing ourselves. We really have much to be thankful for. * * —TOM SAWYER in Florida Farmers' Alliance.

THE TROUBLE IN KANSAS.

A Topeka, Kansas, dispatch of Monday says: The war which was begun on Frank McGrath, president of the Farmers' Alliance, as soon as the Turner letter had been published, has broken out anew and threatens to play havoc with all caucus agreements. The judiciary committee which investigated McGrath's alleged connection with the Turner letter, has, after more than a week's deliberation, decided to request the president's resignation, and the president has fully decided that he will stay till he is forced out. There is no provision in the Alliance constitution by which he can be ousted, and the president declares that he will not resign unless the Alliance at large demands it, and he wants to know what the judiciary committee is going to do about it. The resignation of McGrath will be requested at once by the executive council of that body. President McGrath was requested to bring before the committee an affidavit from Congressman Turner, Senator Berry and Congressman Perkins, exonerating him from any collusion with the Republican leaders. The president either had not attempted to secure this or has been unable to do so. A detective was then employed to investigate his record for the last three months, and it was his report to the committee which has resulted in the alliance president's temporary disgrace. He is charged with having had frequent consultations with Republican leaders, and having made expenditures from the alliance funds which were not in the line of his duties as president.

ELIGIBILITY IN THE ALLIANCE.

President Livingiton, in a long letter to the sub-Alliances and Alliancemen, regarding the eligibility question, among other things, says:

"It was made my duty at Macon by the State Alliance to bring to your notice that there were members in the order who were not eligible when received. The same convention required of me in the event that such members were not dismissed, to suspend the Alliance to which they are attached. Please find here the eligibility clause as amended by the last State and National convention held in August and December, 1890: 'No person shall be admitted as a member of this order, except a white person over sixteen years of age, who is a believer in the existence of a Supreme Being, and has resided in the state more than six months, and is either: 1st, a farmer or farm laborer; 2d, a country mechanic; 3d, a country preacher; 4th, a country school teacher; 5th, a country doctor; 6th, an editor or editors of a paper who support all national demands and the demands of the State Alliance under whose jurisdiction he may live, provided that no sub-Alliance shall initiate an editor until the County President and secretary shall indorse and the State President approve application. Provided further, the State President may suspend any editor from membership for using or permitting his paper to be used against the Alliance until the next meeting of the State Alliance, when said Alliance may re-instate or expel him from the order again. "If any one shall apply for membership under section one, and it shall be known to the committee of investigation that he has other interests, that do not harmonize with the objects of the order, it shall be the duty of the committee to report adversely to his admission; and it shall further be the duty of the sub-Alliance to reject his application."

ALLIANCE LECTURERS FOR GEORGIA.

The leaders of the Farmers' Alliance in Georgia are determined to make their organization as perfect as possible, and to this end alliance lecturers have been appointed to visit each congressional district. These officers are to be instructed by the state lecturer and their duties even defined by a resolution. The following is the official record of the action of the committee:

The executive committee of the State Alliance with the president have arranged for lecturers for the state as follows:

First congressional district, W. A. Wilson and Wimberly.

Fourth congressional district, B. Williams and W. C. Wilson.

Fifth congressional district, W. S. Copeland, A. P. Farrow and Palmer.

Sixth congressional district, W. S. Copeland, A. P. Farrow and Palmer.

Seventh congressional district, W. S. Copeland, A. P. Farrow and Palmer.

Eighth congressional district, C. E. Ellington and W. E. Shackelford.

Tenth congressional district, C. E. Ellington and W. E. Shackelford.

And by prompt action they will begin their work about the 6th of February. These lecturers will receive their instructions from the state lecturer in Atlanta on a day named by him as agreed upon by the president and executive committee. The state has been parceled out so as to give the brotherhood in every section of the state the advantage of an early opportunity to hear their lectures. The president and Hon. M. V. The Seventh Day Adventists are going to build, somewhere in the south, a great school. The location will be decided now very soon. Adventists of Atlanta are making a strong pull and a pull altogether to have the school built there.

Damage suits amounting to $275,000 have been filed against the Cumberland Gap Construction Company, at Knoxville, Tenn. The suits are the result of the memorable Flat Creek wreck in 1889, in which six of Knoxville's leading citizens were killed.

A Raleigh dispatch says: The bill for the protection of the state's oyster interest was ratified at 1 o'clock Wednesday, and an hour and a quarter afterwards a company of troops embarked at Elizabeth City to carry out the law and break up the oyster piracy.

The firm of Johnson & Murdock, at Nashville, made an assignment Wednesday. The failure was brought about by the financial troubles of one of the members of the firm. The assets consist of a very large stock of china and queensware, fancy pottery, etc., and is valued at over $35,000. The liabilities are $17,981.

The Southern Passenger Association has made a reduction on second-class tickets from Dalton, Ga., Rome, Ga., Chattanooga and Atlanta to Memphis, Tenn., the feeder for all points in Texas. This reduction goes into effect on February 1st, and was made to meet a reduction by the Memphis and Charleston road between Chattanooga and Memphis, which also takes effect on the 1st.

When the remaining indictments against ex-Treasurer Hemingway, for embezzlement, were called in the circuit court at Jackson, Miss., Wednesday, his counsel pleaded that his former conviction and sentence to five years in the penitentiary was a bar to further prosecution, and, notwithstanding the objection of the district attorney, the court held all other charges against the ex-treasurer dismissed.

FATAL EXPLOSION.

A Hotel Blown Up by Natural Gas.

The first great disaster that Findlay, Ohio, has ever experienced from the use of natural gas occurred shortly before 3 o'clock Sunday afternoon, in the Hotel Marvin. The force of the explosion was so great that it blew out a flame of ignited gas and no fire followed the awful ruin which the shock caused. The city was rocked as if in an earthquake by the concussion and all the windows on the square were demolished, while the wreck of the hotel building was all but complete. Three waiter girls were killed outright, and about a dozen other persons injured, some of whom will probably die.

Fashions in House Painting.

There are regular fashions in house painting which change as regularly, though not as often, as those of feminine dress. Just now the fashionable color is yellow, and if you go to any suburban neighborhood you will find more than half of the new houses painted to match the canary's wing. The prevailing style seems to be to paint the whole frame, cornices and gables in one shade of canary or orange, and then [illegible] given, [illegible]

The State Legislature seems to be doing little more than killing time.

Don't be inquisitive about the affairs of even your most intimate friend.

If Senator Hoar had fifty thousand dollars in a cotton plantation in South Carolina would he work night and day for a force bill that might break him all up and sink his investment out of sight?

Not if that Yankee statesman knows himself.—N. Y. Herald.

It is significant when so cautious and careful a paper as the New York Herald speaks as follows in regard to the force bill: "The party which can seriously push such a policy to a conclusion deserves nothing better than utter and complete annihilation, a measure of punishment it will receive in '92."

A good story is told of a Sumter county justice of the peace. Having performed the marriage ceremony for two darkeys as black as "Egyptian darkness," he told the groom to salute his bride. The coon inquired "What dat, boss?" "Kiss her" said the justice; "Oh, I 'lows fo' you to do dat fuss," replied the accommodating darkey who did not wish to rob the justice of the perquisites of his position.—[Sumter Sun.

"Julien," the Age-Herald staff correspondent at Montgomery says: Seventy-six members of the house were to day polled as to their presidential preferences. Of these, sixty-eight were for Mr. Cleveland, one for Mr. Hill, one for Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, and six "against Cleveland" their preferences not being stated. So twenty-nine Senators and Sixty-eight members are known to be for Cleveland for president. The views of four senators and twenty-four members have not been ascertained.

The Advertiser of the 18th says: "One of the biggest railroad schemes now on foot is the proposed new outlet for the Plant system to the West. Already the Savannah, Florida, and Western Railroad controls the Alabama Midland Railroad from Bainbridge, Ga., to Montgomery, and by the Montgomery, Tuskaloosa and Memphis Railroad the Plant System will have an air line route to the West and Northwest. It is understood that negotiations are now on foot for the rapid extension of the road from Tuskaloosa to the Northwest.

The difference in the amount of taxes Jefferson county pays into the State treasury now and the amount it paid ten years ago, would more than pay for the proposed appropriation for an exhibit at the World's fair. The prosperity that enabled Jefferson county so increase its taxable values came mainly, if not altogether, of a judicious advertising of the State's resources. That advertising ought to be kept up. The State has never had such an opportunity for advertising as the World's fair will afford. It can't afford to miss this opportunity—no matter whether the Force bill passes or not.—Age-Herald.

Senators Grant, of Calhoun, and Wiley, of Montgomery had a spat in the State Senate last week, over the bill making a $10,000 appropriation for a geological survey. A certain great daily alluded to the Montgomery Senator with this heading: "Frantic Conduct of a Farmer-loving Senator." The aforesaid g. d. was only a short time since applauding Wiley, for wire-pulling against Herbert, but it just now happens that the bill which Senator Wiley opposed was one in which Jefferson county and north Alabama are especially interested and the g. d. throws at him the big head line, "He Tore his Shirt." What will become of all us and the rest of the world when demagogues fall out like this? It all reminds us of how a great daily in Montgomery patted Henry McCall on the back and called him "a good boy" but three months after when he had an opposition paper in Montgomery, it didn't take a rest in its denunciation until McCall was in the care of the Sheriff. Such is politics.

The South and the Force Bill.

New York Herald.

The industrial progress of the south during the year just ended is something marvelous. The assessed value of property down yonder for 1890 is more than $500,000,000 above the assessment for 1889.

Northern capital is finding safe and profitable investment in every field of southern enterprise. The bond of unity between the two sections is being strengthened; old animosities and prejudices are dying out. Mutual interest in manufactures, cotton, iron mines, smelting works brings us into closer relationship. We understand each other better than ever before and respect each other more.

For many years the south struggled with unparalleled adversities. It had all the natural means of wealth, but no money with which to develop its resources. To the last degree plucky, borrowing hope from a future which was sure to repay their efforts, its young men went to work with a will. There were fortunes to be had, and they determined to get them. What had been done in sturdy New England and in the majestice west they were bound to do in the south. Success so far crowned their endeavor that the wonder and surprise of the north changed to admiration. We found them close on our heels in the race, and soon learned that we must strike a stronger gait or they would forge ahead.

Then came the force bill, the last rancorous relic of ancient hatred. It is a coarse, brutal insult to a people who are doing all that could be expected with a race problem so serious and grave that we may well thank God that we are not ourselves called upon to handle the matter. Under the plea of fair elections it hides an inordinate greed of party, which would endanger the republic for the sake of another lease of power.

If the bill is passed through the senate the republicans may gain a small advantage, but the country will suffer incalculable loss. Bitterness will return, the gulf of seperation will be widened, business will be injured—for capital is shy in the presence of uncertainty—and the hands on the clock of progress will be set back.

That bill represents a malignant purpose and its enactment would be little short of a crime. The common sense of the country is against it. It is urged by surly, frantic, frenzied, demagogues, who would imperil the government rather than lose a personal advantage.

In spite of their efforts, the bill, we believe, will be killed. If not, then the republican party as its author and sponsor, should be buried out of sight at the next presidential election.

The New Move.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—The action of the Legislatures of several States in passing resolutions withholding the proposed large appropriations to be made for the purpose of State representation at the Chicago World's Fair, until there is some assurance that the elections bill is not to become a law, is attracting some attention among Republican Senators.

The leading advocates of the bill generally denounce the action as a "bluff."

When the action of the Illinois Legislature was brought to the attention of Senator Cullom this morning he said that while the matter was pending in the Legislature he did not care to express an opinion.

If the resolution which passed the House was also passed by the State Senate and sent to him, of course he would present it to the United States Senate, but he did not approve of this method of trying to influence his personal convictions and was not prepared to surrender them just now.

The Southerners claim, is of course, that the passage of the force bill will paralyze southern industries, prevent the influx of capital into States where negro rule is likely to prevail, making it necessary for the Legislatures to be economical in their appropriation.

Senator Berry, of Arkansas, said that he entirely endorsed the action of the Legislature of his State for the reason that an exhibit at the World's Fair would fail of its purpose of attracting immigration to the State if the Force bill passed; for the effect of the latter measure would be to keep capital and immigration at a distance. "Our people," he said, "were quite enthusiastic over the Fair, believing that it would result in great good to us, and knowing that we had the resources to make an exhibit gratifying to our State pride, we feel that with the Force bill a law, it would be useless for us to do anything in the hope of attracting settlers to a country where citizens have been deprived of their rights."

"It is entirely too strong a matter," said representative Butterworth, Secretary of the Exposition, "to discuss off-hand. It would be unfortunate, very unfortunate if twelve or fifteen States should refrain from representation at the fair, but of course we can understand the feelings which actuate the Southern people. I have positive views which I do not care to discuss now, on the wisdom and policy of the election bill at the present time, and I can only express the hope that when the Fair opens all the States will be found represented."

What Free Coinage Means.

The National Democrat in reply to an inquiry gives the following definition of the term "free coinage."

Free coinage, by which is meant the right of any private person to have bullion coined at the legal rates. If the Government reserves to itself this right, there would not be free coinage. Free coinage, however, is to be destinguished from the absence in the act of "seinorage." Seinorage is a charge exacted from persons for coining their bullion into coin at the mint.

If you can take a pound of silver to the mint and get a pound of silver dollars, whether with or without a slight deduction for the cost of minting you have "free coinage."

This might create the impression that only those who had the silver bullion would be benefitted by a free coinage law. On the contrary the people generally are benefitted very materially in the fact that free coinage begets circulation for the reason that the money sharks find silver too bulky to hoard or even transport to foreign countries in exchange for gold. There is necessarily greater circulation because of the troublesome nature of a few thousand silver dollars in bulk. The country generally is benefitted by this greater circulation, and the poor man especially.

COMING TO THE SOUTH.

"They are coming from the desert of the dim and dusky East, where to raise a stunted turnip, is the prospect of a feast, where the farms are made of gravel, and they plow with dynamite, where the festive chattle mortgage sings its dirges day and night; they are coming in their wagons; they are coming on the trains, they are coming from the region where they struggled long in vain; they are coming from the cabin, they are coming from the hall, they are coming to the Southland where there's plenty for them all. They are coming from the sunset, they are coming from the north, from the valleys and the mountains, they, in droves are coming forth. They are coming with their husbands, they are coming with their wives, they are coming with their hammers, with their needles and their knives, with their barrows and their planters, and their pencils and their guns, they are coming with their fathers and their mothers and their sons. They are coming stout and slender, they are coming, short and tall, they are coming to the Southland where there is plenty for them all; where you needn't dig potatoes with a sabre or a dirk; where when rain is badly needed, then the rain gets in its work; where the rivers mourn and murmur, on their journey to the sea; where the breezes tackle corn stalks, as fence posts on the lea, where the Yankee lately wandered in the search of human hair, while his horse and howling war cry floated on the summer air, where a world of soldiers answered to the chieftain's battle call, they are coming to the Southland, where there's plenty for them all. Where the savages use to wander yearning for a crop of hair, now the farmer takes his porkers to the nearest country fair, and the corn is growing where the stately forest stood; the people who are coming to this pleasantest of climes, show a happy knack of keeping up with the progress of the times; they will find a country beaming from the spring time to the fall, when they land in the Southland where there's plenty for them all."

ALABAMA'S POPULATION.

The Whites have Increased twice as fast as the Negroes.

A telegram in the Age-Herald of yesterday announced that the official count showed Alabama's white population to be 830,796 and her colored population 681,431.

Ten years ago the whites numbered 662,185 and the negroes 600,103.

That was a majority of 62,182.

Now the majority of whites is 149,365.

In the ten years the whites have gained 168,611 or over 25 per cent.

The whites have gained more than twice as many in absolute numbers and have increased more than twice as fast.

Mrs. B. J. Carr, who resides a few miles above Clanton, died Monday night after lingering a long time with consumption. Her remains were interred in the Clanton cemetery.

Don't try to be anything else but a gentlewoman—and that means a woman who has consideration for the Golden Rule, "Do unto others as you would be done by."

Our young friend, J. N. Thornton, of Shieffield, has complimented the VIEW with an invitation to the first annual ball to be given by the Sheffield Federation of Trades on Mardi Gras night.

The editor and his entire family have had the "grippe" and any deficiencies in the make up of our paper can be attributed to that fact. As it is probable that the majority of our patrons have been likewise afflicted we feel sure of their sympathy.

Track-laying to Begin.

The Tuskaloosa Gazette is authority for the statement that work has been suspended on the line of the M. T. & M. railroad between Maplesville and Tuskaloosa, and says that the work of track-laying between Montgomery and Maplesville will begin at once and for the present all work will be directed to the completion of that division. This is good news to the people along the line of the Maplesville division.

Jemison.

The Alliance men were out in full force to-day, distributing guano and making arrangements for another big crop of cotton. That's what's the matter. How would it do for every farmer to try his hand on corn. Let us have a big corn crop just one time and see how it feels. Our farmers, who are boarding in the northwest and raising ten cent cotton for 8 cents a pound, look a little blue. Maybe they will learn after awhile.

Our old friend, J. P. Allen who has been sick is now convalescing and we hope to see him out in a few days.

When you come this way at night just follow Paul's lantern, and that will guide you to the Jemison House, where you will be well entertained. H. P.

while as convenient to the buyer as any instalment system, is a wholesale spot cash system to us. The co-operation of the club members sells us 38 watches in each $38 Watch Club, and we get cash from the Club for each watch before it goes out, though each member only pays $1 a week. This is why we give you more for your money than any one else and why we are doing the largest watch business in the world. We sell only first quality goods, but our prices are about what others get for second quality. Our $10 Silver Watch is a substantial Silver (not limited as to any kind) Stem-Wind American Lever Watch—either hunting case or open. Our $33.00 Watch is a Stem-Wind Open Face, first quality, stiffened Gold American Lever Watch guaranteed to wear 20 years. It is fully equal to any watch sold for $38 by others. We find a first-class Stiffened Gold Case much more satisfactory and serviceable than any Solid Gold Case that can be sold at less than double the money, as cheap solid cases are invariably thin, weak, of low quality, and worthless after short use. Our $38 Watch contains numerous important patented improvements, of vital importance to accurate timing—Patent Dustproof, Patent Stem-Wind, &c., which we control exclusively. It is fully equal for accuracy, appearance, durability and service, to any $75 Watch, either Open Face or Hunting. Our $43.00 Railroad Watch is especially constructed for the most exacting use, and is the best Railroad Watch made, Open Face or Hunting. All these prices are either all cash or include $1.00 a week. The State Legislature seems to be doing little more than killing time.

Don't be inquisitive about the affairs of even your most intimate friend.

If Senator Hoar had fifty thousand dollars in a cotton plantation in South Carolina would he work night and day for a force bill that might break him all up and sink his investment out of sight?

Not if that Yankee statesman knows himself.—N. Y. Herald.

It is significant when so cautious and careful a paper as the New York Herald speaks as follows in regard to the force bill: "The party which can seriously push such a policy to a conclusion deserves nothing better than utter and complete annihilation, a measure of punishment it will receive in '92."

A good story is told of a Sumter county justice of the peace. Having performed the marriage ceremony for two darkeys as black as "Egyptian darkness," he told the groom to salute his bride. The coon inquired "What dat, boss?" "Kiss her" said the justice; "Oh, I 'lows fo' you to do dat fuss," replied the accommodating darkey who did not wish to rob the justice of the perquisites of his position.—[Sumter Sun.

"Julien," the Age-Herald staff correspondent at Montgomery says:

Seventy-six members of the house were to day polled as to their presidential preferences. Of these, sixty-eight were for Mr. Cleveland, one for Mr. Hill, one for Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, and six "against Cleveland" their preferences not being stated. So twenty-nine Senators and Sixty-eight members are known to be for Cleveland for president. The views of four senators and twenty-four members have not been ascertained.

The Advertiser of the 18th says: One of the biggest railroad schemes now on foot is the proposed new outlet for the Plant system to the West. Already the Savannah, Florida, and Western Railroad controls the Alabama Midland Railroad from Bainbridge, Ga., to Montgomery, and by the Montgomery, Tuskaloosa and Memphis Railroad the Plant System will have an air line route to the West and Northwest. It is understood that negotiations are now on foot for the rapid extension of the road from Tuskaloosa to the Northwest.

The difference in the amount of taxes Jefferson county pays into the State treasury now and the amount it paid ten years ago, would more than pay for the proposed appropriation for an exhibit at the World's fair. The prosperity that enabled Jefferson county to increase its taxable values came mainly, if not altogether, of a judicious advertising of the State's resources. That advertising ought to be kept up. The State has never had such an opportunity for advertising as the World's fair will afford. It can't afford to miss this opportunity—no matter whether the Force bill passes or not.—Age-Herald.

Senators Grant, of Calhoun, and Wiley, of Montgomery had a spat in the State Senate last week, over the bill making a $10,000 appropriation for a geological survey. A certain great daily alluded to the Montgomery Senator with this heading: "Frantic Conduct of a Farmer-loving Senator." The aforesaid g. d. was only a short time since applauding Wiley, for wire-pulling against Herbert, but it just now happens that the bill which Senator Wiley opposed was one in which Jefferson county and north Alabama are especially interested and the g. d. throws at him the big head line, "He Tore his Shirt." What will become of all us and the rest of the world, when demagogues fall out like this? It all reminds us of how a great daily in Montgomery patted Henry McCall on the back and called him "a good boy" but three months after when he had an opposition paper in Montgomery, it didn't take a rest in its denunciation until McCall was in the care of the Sheriff. Such is politics.

The South and the Force Bill.

New York Herald.

The industrial progress of the south during the year just ended is something marvelous. The assessed value of property down yonder for 1890 is more than $500,000,000 above the assessment for 1889.

Northern capital is finding safe and profitable investment in every field of southern enterprise. The bond of unity between the two sections is being strengthened; old animosities and prejudices are dying out. Mutual interest in manufactures, cotton, iron mines, smelting works brings us into closer relationship. We understand each other better than ever before and respect each other more.

For many years the south struggled with unparalleled adversities. It had all the natural means of wealth, but no money with which to develop its resources. To the last degree plucky, borrowing hope from a future which was sure to repay their efforts, its young men went to work with a will. There were fortunes to be had, and they determined to get them. What had been done in sturdy New England and in the majestice west they were bound to do in the south. Success so far crowned their endeavor that the wonder and surprise of the north changed to admiration. We found them close on our heels in the race, and soon learned that we must strike a stronger gait or they would forge ahead.

Then came the force bill, the last rancorous relic of ancient hatred. It is a coarse, brutal insult to a people who are doing all that could be expected with a race problem so serious and grave that we may well thank God that we are not ourselves called upon to handle the matter. Under the plea of fair elections it hides an inordinate greed of party, which would endanger the republic for the sake of another lease of power.

If the bill is passed through the senate the republicans may gain a small advantage, but the country will suffer incalculable loss. Bitterness will return, the gulf of seperation will be widened, business will be injured—for capital is shy in the presence of uncertainty—and the hands on the clock of progress will be set back.

That bill represents a malignant purpose and its enactment would be little short of a crime. The common sense of the country is against it. It is urged by surly, frantic, frenzied, demagogues, who would imperil the government rather than lose a personal advantage.

In spite of their efforts, the bill, we believe, will be killed. If not, then the republican party as its author and sponsor, should be buried out of sight at the next presidential election.

The New Move.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—The action of the Legislatures of several States in passing resolutions withholding the proposed large appropriations to be made for the purpose of State representation at the Chicago World's Fair, until there is some assurance that the elections bill is not to become a law, is attracting some attention among Republican Senators.

When the action of the Illinois Legislature was brought to the attention of Senator Cullom this morning he said that while the matter was pending in the Legislature he did not care to express an opinion.

If the resolution which passed the House was also passed by the State Senate and sent to him, of course he would present it to the United States Senate, but he did not approve of this method of trying to influence his personal convictions and was not prepared to surrender them just now.

The Southerners claim, is of course, that the passage of the force bill will paralyze southern industries, prevent the influx of capital into States where negro rule is likely to prevail, making it necessary for the Legislatures to be economical in their appropriation.

Senator Berry, of Arkansas, said that he entirely endorsed the action of the Legislature of his State for the reason that an exhibit at the World's Fair would fail of its purpose of attracting immigration to the State if the Force bill passed; for the effect of the latter measure would be to keep capital and immigration at a distance. "Our people," he said, "were quite enthusiastic over the Fair, believing that it would result in great good to us, and knowing that we had the resources to make an exhibit gratifying to our State pride, we feel that with the Force bill a law, it would be useless for us to do anything in the hope of attracting settlers to a country where citizens have been deprived of their rights."

"It is entirely too strong a matter," said representative Butterworth, Secretary of the Exposition, "to discuss off-hand. It would be unfortunate, very unfortunate if twelve or fifteen States should refrain from representation at the fair, but of course we can understand the feelings which actuate the Southern people. I have positive views which I do not care to discuss now, on the wisdom and policy of the election bill at the present time, and I can only express the hope that when the Fair opens all the States will be found represented."

What Free Coinage Means.

The National Democrat in reply to an inquiry gives the following definition of the term. "free coinage."

Free coinage, by which is meant the right of any private person to have bullion coined at the legal rates. If the Government reserves to itself this right, there would not be free coinage. Free coinage, however, is to be destinguished from the absence in the act of "seinorage." Seinorage is a charge exacted from persons for coining their bullion into coin at the mint.

If you can take a pound of silver to the mint and get a pound of silver dollars, whether with or without a slight deduction for the cost of minting you have "free coinage."

This might create the impression that only those who had the silver bullion would be benefitted by a free coinage law. On the contrary the people generally are benefitted very materially in the fact that free coinage begets circulation for the reason that the money sharks find silver too bulky to hoard or even transport to foreign countries in exchange for gold. There is necessarily greater circulation because of the troublesome nature of a few thousand silver dollars in bulk. The country generally is benefitted by this greater circulation, and the poor man especially.

COMING TO THE SOUTH.

"They are coming from the desert of the dim and dusky East, where to raise a stunted turnip, is the prospect of a feast, where the farms are made of gravel, and they plow with dynamite, where the festive chattle mortgage sings its dirges day and night; they are coming in their wagons; they are coming on the trains, they are coming from the region where they struggled long in vain; they are coming from the cabin, they are coming from the hall, they are coming to the Southland where there's plenty for them all. They are coming from the sunset, they are coming from the north, from the valleys and the mountains, they, in droves are coming forth. They are coming with their husbands, they are coming with their wives, they are coming with their hammers, with their needles and their knives, with their barrows and their planters, and their pencils and their guns, they are coming with their fathers and their mothers and their sons. They are coming stout and slender, they are coming, short and tall, they are coming to the Southland where there is plenty for them all; where you needn't dig potatoes with a sabre or a dirk; where when rain is badly needed, then the rain gets in its work; where the rivers mourn and murmur, on their journey to the sea; where the breezes tackle corn stalks, as fence posts on the lea, where the Yankee lately wandered in the search of human hair, while his horse and howling war cry floated on the summer air, where a world of soldiers answered to the chieftain's battle call, they are coming to the Southland, where there's plenty for them all. Where the savages use to wander yearning for a crop of hair, now the farmer takes his porkers to the nearest country fair, and the corn is growing where the stately forest stood; the people who are coming to this pleasantest of climes, show a happy knack of keeping up with the progress of the times; they will find a country beaming from the spring time to the fall, when they land in the Southland where there's plenty for them all."

ALABAMA'S POPULATION.

The Whites have Increased twice as fast as the Negroes.

A telegram in the Age-Herald of yesterday announced that the official count showed Alabama's white population to be 830,796 and her colored population 681,431.

Ten years ago the whites numbered 662,185 and the negroes 600,103.

That was a majority of 62,182.

Now the majority of whites is 149,365.

In the ten years the whites have gained 168,611 or over 25 per cent.

The whites have gained more than twice as many in absolute numbers and have increased more than twice as fast.

The Equitable Life Assurance Society
OF THE UNITED STATES.

In selecting a company in which to insure, why not take the best instead of being persuaded by the eloquence of representatives of weaker companies to take what is less advantageous? It is the company, not the agent, with whom the assured must deal after the policy is once taken. It is the company, not the agent that pays the dividends and meets claims when they mature. It costs no more to assure in the best and strongest company than any other established on a sound business basis; therefore, we again ask, WHY NOT TAKE THE BEST?

Track-laying to Begin.

The Tuskaloosa Gazette is authority for the statement that work has been suspended on the line of the M. T. & M. railroad between Maplesville and Tuskaloosa, and says that the work of track-laying between Montgomery and Maplesville will begin at once and for the present all work will be directed to the completion of that division. This is good news to the people along the line of the Maplesville division.

Jemison.

The Alliance men were out in full force to-day, distributing guano and making arrangements for another big crop of cotton. That's what's the matter. How would it do for every farmer to try his hand on corn. Let us have a big corn crop just one time and see how it feels. Our farmers, who are boarding in the northwest and raising ten cent cotton for 8 cents a pound, look a little blue. Maybe they will learn after awhile.

Our old friend, J. P. Allen who has been sick is now convalescing and we hope to see him out in a few days.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

NEWS NOTES AND ITEMS FROM THE NATIONAL CAPITAL.

Proceedings of the Second Session of the 51st Congress.

SENATE.

The big fight over the cloture rule, expected in the senate, Tuesday, was prevented and another day was claimed by the democratic opposition. The first skirmish of the day opened at 2 o'clock. Mr. Aldrich had just called up the cloture rule without objection. Senator Harris of Tennessee, was making a point of order against it, that the proper advance notice had not been given of a motion or resolution to change the rules, when the hour of 2 o'clock arrived. Then, under the rules, it was the duty of the vice president to lay the election bill before the senate, and according to the republican programme, Mr. Aldrich moved that the cloture rule be retained before the senate until disposed of. At the same moment, however, Senator George, of Mississippi, claimed that he had the right of the floor to conclude his remarks on the force bill, begun a week ago and resumed Monday. Mr. George refused to yield to anyone, and as the vice-president had no power to take him off the floor, he held it until nearly 6 o'clock, discussing the Mississippi constitution. Mr. George was then completely exhausted, and, at the request of Mr. Gorman, finally dropped into his seat, being barely able to stand. He had spoken continuously for four hours. Then Senator Aldrich moved to take up the cloture rule. Senator Gorman made no objection, and the rule was apparently taken up by unanimous consent. Having gotten it before the senate, Messrs. Hoar and Aldrich moved to adjourn, and the cloture rule was made the order for Wednesday, instead of the force bill. Indeed, the cloture rule resolution displaced the force bill.

When Mr. Aldrich moved to take up the cloture rule Tuesday evening, the Democrats making no apparent objections, Vice-President Morton, neglected to announce the motion carried, but simply had the clerk read the resolution. The secretary of the senate filled in Mr. Morton's neglect to announce the vote carried, and entered the motion upon the journal as carried, and had it read that the chair so announced. Perhaps Mr. Gorman's failure to object was due to a perception on his part of the omission of the vice-president. At any rate the first thing he did Wednesday morning, was to object to the approval of the journal without amendment, and he at once proceeded to give his reasons for the same. Vice-President Morton acknowledged his error and further reversed his ruling of Tuesday night that one senator had no right to yield the floor to another. When Mr. Gorman had finished, the republicans made no objections to amending the journal, and called for a vote. Mr. Gorman, however, stated that the question was of too great importance not to be discussed fully, and one after another, the democrats spoke on it all day. Senator Vest secured the floor and spoke continuously from 4 o'clock to 10 o'clock, when the point of no quorum was made by a democrat. After that time the sergeant-at-arms was out in search of absent senators. The senate was idle from 10 o'clock till 12 o'clock. Senator Vest, however, still held the floor to continue his speech should a quorum appear. A roll call was had at midnight and developed the fact that no quorum could be gotten, and Messrs. Aldrich and Hoar moved adjournment.

Thursday the fight was renewed. Aldrich consumed the morning hour in a speech severely criticising the democrats for their non-action, and precisely at the expiration of the hour moved to take up his cloture rule. Upon this Mr. Harris raised the question of consideration, claiming that the unapproved journal was the order. This question was debated at some length, but the motion finally prevailed, and the senate agreed to take up the cloture rule by a vote of 36 to 32. Teller and Wolcott, of Colorado, and Jones and Stewart, of Nevada, stood with the democrats.

HOUSE.

A scene of intense excitement occurred in the house Tuesday morning. The democrats have been obstructing the business of the body for several days, until action on the force bill was had. Under the leadership of Mills, an attack was made on the journal, and when it had been read, roll calls and all, the speaker declared that McKinley had demanded the previous question on its approval. Mills was instantly on his feet, and a scene of wild disorder ensued. The clerk commenced calling the roll, but his voice was drowned in the shouts, groans and hisses that issued from all parts of the chamber. Mills made an angry, excited speech, charging the speaker and his satellites with fraud and usurpation. His wild gestures could be seen, but his voice was drowned in the roar and tumult that obtained on all sides. A hundred excited men were on their feet, ready to fight, when the sergeant-at-arms, with his ponderous mace, appeared on the floor and with difficulty quelled the disorder. The call on the approval of the journal, then proceeded without interruption.

There was another sensation in the house Wednesday, and, indeed, the entire session demonstrated that the bad feeling aroused during Tuesday's riot will not be eliminated for some time. The previous question had been ordered on approving Tuesday's journal, when Mr. Rogers, of Arkansas, took the floor and made a rather savage attack upon Speaker Reed. Rogers reminded the speaker, in his most condescending and sarcastic manner, that he was occupying the third highest office in the gift of the American people, and it was, therefore, incumbent on him to "tote fair" with the representatives of the people, something he had not been doing. In reply the Speaker announced from the chair that he had administered the rules of the house as he understood them, and the house had always sustained his decisions. He was satisfied for the country to judge of his fairness. Throughout the entire day the house seemed on the verge of another row. Every member on both sides was apparently in bad humor. The committee on rules brought in the expected rule to put through the District of Columbia appropriation bill. The resolution provided for the previous question at 5 o'clock Wednesday afternoon. Of course, there was a fight on it, but at 5 o'clock it was rushed through, and the house went into a committee, where another partisan discussion arose, and when practically nothing was accomplished. At 5 o'clock the democrats renewed their policy of delay by demanding reports on all amendments, and then enough of them left to break a quorum. Thus the house had to adjourn. The democrats will continue their tactics until the force bill is laid aside in the senate.

NOTES.

The president ordered all the flags on public buildings in Washington to be placed at half-mast on the day of Historian Bancroft's funeral.

The secretary of the navy has asked the house that an appropriation of $300,000 be made in addition to the amount already appropriated for the construction of a dry dock at Port Royal, S. C.

Senator Teller is reported as saying that at least ten republican senators would vote with the democrats against a gag rule, and further, that there is no possible chance of the force bill passing the senate.

Messrs. Livingston, Elliott and Winn, Alliance members-elect to the next house, occupied seats in the senate press gallery during the session Wednesday night, and up to a late hour intently watched the proceedings.

Representative Langston, on Wednesday, introduced a bill appropriating $1,000,000 for the establishment of a university, in any state of the union where unappropriated public lands may be found, for the education of the colored youth of the country. A board of commissioners is to be appointed by the president to select the site for the proposed university and have erected the necessary buildings.

President Harrison has received a package from United States Minister Phelps, containing five vials of Dr. Koch's lymph, and the president has distributed them as follows: Two vials to Surgeon General Hamilton and the marine hospital service in Washington; and one vial each to the Polyclinic hospital, of Chicago; the Charity hospital, of New Orleans; the City hospital of Indianapolis.

The Washington Star of Tuesday says the announcement in an Atlanta telegram concerning the observance of Lee's birthday that "the postoffice kept regular holiday hours," has attracted considerable attention at the postoffice department, and inquiry developed the fact that no request had been received from the Atlanta postmaster for permission to close his office on that day. Consequently Postmaster Lewis will probably be called upon to explain.

ALABAMA'S NEW BISHOP.

Consecration of Assistant Bishop Jackson at Selma.

All Selma, besides visitors from far and near, crowded St. Paul's Episcopal church to its utmost capacity Wednesday morning, the occasion being the consecration of Assistant Bishop Henry Melville Jackson. Promptly at 10:30 o'clock Bishops Peterkin, of West Virginia; Howe, of South Carolina; Thompson, of Mississippi; Randolph of Virginia; Wilmer, of Alabama, heading the procession, entered the church in solemn tread to the strains of a slow march. They were followed by the clergy of the diocese, who were preceded by Bishop-elect Jackson. As they moved in slow motion down the aisle, all attired in cassocks and surplices, it was a scene imposing in the extreme. Bishop Wilmer presided. The laying on of hands was the most impressive part of the service. Everything passed off with precision. The exercises lasted two and a half hours. Bishop Jackson was elected assistant bishop last October by a special session of the council held in Selma.

IN COURT.

The Behring Sea Dispute To Be Judicially Determined.

The Behring sea sealeries controversy came up in the United States supreme court at Washington, on Monday on a motion which has in view the judicial determination of the dispute between the United States and Great Britain over the seal fisheries. Joseph H. Choate, in behalf of Thomas Henry Cooper, owner and claimant of the British schooner W. P. Sayward, which was seized in the waters of the Behring sea by the revenue cutter Rush, petitioned the court for leave to file a petition for a writ of prohibition to be directed to the judge of the district court of the United States in and for the territory of Alaska, restraining him from proceeding with the condemnation and sale of the vessel. The object is to have the court take up and pass upon the question of the jurisdiction of these waters.

M'GRATH EXONERATED.

The Outcome of Charges Against an Alliance President.

A later dispatch from Topeka, Kansas, says: The executive committee of the Farmers' Alliance, investigating the connection of President McGrath with the noted Turner letter, made its report Tuesday night, immediately after adjournment of the Alliance caucus. The report contained the signature of all the committee and completely exonerated McGrath from any improper connection with the letter. Van B. Prather, state lecturer, made the report public. In giving it out to the newspaper men, he grew eloquent and said:

"I acted as prosecuting attorney in the matter, and conducted the case against Mr. McGrath. We found not one iota of evidence against him, but, on the contrary, his official character has proved to be as white as snow and as unsullied as the ether of heaven. His vindication is full and complete."

NEWS AND NOTES

CONDENSED FROM TELEGRAPH AND CABLE.

Epitome of Incidents that Happen from Day to Day.

Several severe shocks of earthquake were felt in Austria Wednesday.

The Bank of Downs, at Downs, Mitchell county, Kas., closed its doors Tuesday.

On Wednesday the Cawker City bank, at Atchison, Kas., failed and is in the hands of a receiver.

Parnell has published in The Freeman's Journal, the usual summons to the Irish members of parliament, asking them to attend the re-opening of parliament.

The directors of the world's fair have postponed the threatened abandonment of the lake front side, pending negotiations now in progress and supposed to be final.

Wednesday's dispatches say: The railroad strikes in Scotland are about at an end. The officials state that all the places of strikers have been filled with new men.

Dispatches of Tuesday from London say: Thanks to thaw, which now appears to have come to stay, the thousands of unemployed people of London are resuming work which was interrupted by the cold weather.

By a decision of the Missouri supreme court the ordinance ceding twenty square miles to Kansas City has been declared null and void, and this will cause great trouble to the city, as all votes cast, all taxes paid, etc., are illegal.

A Boston, Mass., dispatch says: Faneuil hall, floor and gallery was packed at noon Tuesday with substantial business men of Boston, gathered at the call of Mayor Matthews, to formally protest against the free coinage of silver.

Dispatches of Wednesday say: Affairs in Chili are far from improving. There is considerable discussion among the Chilian troops and the feeling is rapidly spreading. A number of government troops have joined the insurgents.

The Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railway Company's freight depot, at Montclair, N. J., burned Tuesday morning. Four Pullman and two passenger coaches, seven freight cars and a considerable quantity of freight were destroyed.

O. F. Bonseer, of Santa Clara, N. D., was in Mason City, Ia., Wednesday, soliciting aid. His people are destitute, and want clothing, provisions and grain. He says with another failure of the crops Dakota is doomed. The need of help is quite general throughout the state.

The Cowles Electric Smelting and Aluminum company at Cleveland, O., held its annual meeting Wednesday. A half ton of pure aluminum manufactured at their works in Lockport, was displayed to the shareholders. Under the new process employed by this company, pure aluminum is now sold at retail at $1.25 per pound, the cheapest price in the world.

An indication of the strength the Farmers' Alliance has in the state legislature in Ohio was given Wednesday. The Alliance sent a telegram during the morning to the general assembly asking a repeal of the law exempting manufactured products from taxation for one year after production. Before the house adjourned in the evening the bill was passed with but few dissenting votes.

A San Francisco dispatch says: The body of the late King Kalakaua was embalmed Wednesday night, and placed in a metallic casket, hermetically sealed and conveyed to the mortuary chapel of Trinity church, where they were guarded by a detail from the United States army forces. The remains will be sent to Honolulu in charge of Rear Admiral Brown, of the flagship Charleston.

The funeral of George Bancroft, the eminent historian, author and diplomat, took place at St. John's Episcopal church at Washington Tuesday. President Harrison and a large number of distinguished men of letters, senators, representatives and friends were present. The remains were taken to Bancroft's home, in Worcester, where they were interred beside the grave of his wife.

The directors of the Richmond and Danville Piedmont Air-Line system of railroad, have decided to make a change in the management, to take effect upon the 1st of February. Major Peyton Randolph, who is now general manager, has been made third vice president of the Richmond and Danville, and Mr. William H. Green, now superintendent, is to be general manager. The Georgia Pacific will also be under Mr. Green's management.

A Chicago dispatch of Wednesday says: Reports concerning the strike of dispatchers and conductors on the Chicago and Erie railroad are conflicting. The strikers assert that the road is practically tied up from Chicago to Salamanca, N.Y. On the other hand, General Manager Tucker states that no serious trouble has resulted from the strike, and that the first accounts of the affair were greatly exaggerated; that only five dispatchers and fifteen conductors are out, and their places are already filled, and the business of the road uninterrupted at present.

A cablegram of Wednesday from Cork, Ireland, says: Laborers employed upon the works at Hare Island and Skibbereen, commenced by the government for the relief of distress existing among the poor classes of those neighborhoods, have struck for an increase of wages. It is said that this action on the part of the laborers will probably cause the government to stop the work mentioned, on the ground that as the works were started for a charitable object alone, and as the people employed cannot afford to work for wages the government is paying, distress cannot be so great as represented, and the works are unnecessary.

IT IS YOUNG NOW

But Expects to Do Great Things in the Future.

Charleston is to have an oil refinery, which may in time compete with the great trust. The organization has been perfected and officers elected. The capital stock of the company, which for the present is to be $25,000, will be taken by twenty-four smaller cotton seed oil mills in the state. It is expected that next year several of the smaller oil mills of Georgia will join the company which is to be known as the Mutual Oil Refinery Company.

BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

Dun & Co.'s Report for Past Week.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says: How far the situation and prospect may be changed by the free coinage bill by the senate is as yet mainly a matter of conjecture. Reports of the state of trade at different points reflect mainly on the situation prior to that vote, and show an improvement in the volume of business, easier money markets and a more cheering outlook.

The railway situation is better, and prospects brighter, Europe does not now appear to be selling American securities to a large extent.

INCREASED EXPORTS.

Exports of merchandise heavily exceed imports in value. At New York, for January, thus far the increase in exports over last year had been $1,400,000, or about 12 per cent, while imports here show a decline of $3,900,000, or about 15 per cent. Preliminary reports of exports of cotton, breadstuffs, provisions, cattle and petroleum in December, show an aggregate of $74,184,449, against precedent. Hence it appears that the excess of exports in December was very large in spite of the decline in the movement of breadstuffs, which higher prices tend to prolong.

FLUCTUATIONS IN PRICES.

For the past week, with wheat 1 per cent. higher, corn and oats practically unchanged and cotton three-sixteenths higher, the exports of wheat have been only about half of last year's; of flour less than a quarter and of corn only one-eighth, while the exports of cotton show a decrease for the week, in spite of the considerable increase in receipts. Pork has not changed, but lard and hogs are lower. Oil is ¼ cent lower, and the speculative markets are generally rather weak outside of those above mentioned. Silver bullion has acted curiously. Having risen to 48¼ pence before the passage of the silver bill, it fell to 48¼ on Friday after the vote, and shows a weakness similar to that observed in the stock market.

REPORTS FROM THE CITIES.

Reports from other cities show that, until Friday, the situation and outlook had been improving and a feeling of greater confidence prevailed. Trade is improving at Louisville, Memphis and Jacksonville, only fair at New Orleans, but increasingly active at Baltimore, where the value of the manufactured products in 1890 was about $150,000,000. The money markets have grown easier and banks are able to help customers more liberally, but at the east the difficulty of making commercial loans has not entirely ceased, though money on call is very abundant. At the west and south, all money markets are easier, though rates are not lower, and caution in regard to the character of loans is more frequently noted.

Failures during the week number 360; for a corresponding period of last year the figures were 305.

SENATORS SELECTED.

The Different State Legislatures Name Their Men.

At Albany, N. Y., both branches of the legislature voted for United States senator at noon Tuesday. The ballot resulted: Hill, 65; Evarts, 58. In the senate the vote stood: Hill, 13; Evarts, 19.

At Denver, Col., the democrats in caucus, Tuesday, agreed to the nomination of Judge Caldwell Yeamon for United States senator.

The democratic majority in the Indianapolis legislature, in caucus Tuesday, night, nominated Daniel W. Voorhees to succeed himself as United States senator. The nomination was by acclamation.

At the caucus of the republicans at Olympia, Wash., Tuesday night, Squire was nominated for United States senator.

Arkansas—Legislature voting separately; total vote, Jones 106, others 17.

Illinois—Separate voting; senate, Palmer 24, Oglesby, 27. House, Palmer 77, Oglesby 73, Streeter 3. As no one candidate received a majority in both houses, there was no election.

Connecticut—Republicans in both branches voted for Platt; the Democrats scattered. A Democratic caucus was held at night to select a candidate.

Pennsylvania—Voting separately; Cameron 144, Black 92, scattering 8; and three Democrats absent not voting.

In the North Carolina legislature Tuesday Mr. Lucas, of the senate, nominated Z. B. Vance, and Mr. Waiser, of Davidson, nominated, on behalf of the Republicans, Jeter C. Pritchard. The result of the ballot was: Vance 40; Pritchard 7. In the house Vance was nominated by Mr. Grier of Mecklenberg. Mr. Hendricks nominated Mr. Pritchard. The vote was: Vance 86, Pritchard 19.

HEAVY BONDS

Required of Ex-Senator Wallace's Assignees.

Another dispatch of Sunday from Clearfield, Pa., says: The bond of the assignees of ex-Senator Wallace, approved Saturday by Judge Furst and ordered filed, is for the sum of $1,655,000. The inventory shows an aggregate of $990,000. From this are to be deducted recorded liens and pledged assets, which are about $655,000, leaving $385,000 free assets. This is probably three fold the amount of unsecured debts. The personal debts of Wallace are about $400,000, including debts secured and unsecured. The appraised value of real estate to be sold January 30th is $324,200, upon which are liens and claims for about $200,000. His other property is appraised at about $518,000. This includes his interest, about seven-eigths, in 5,200 acres of coal land conveyed to the Clearfield Creek Coal Company, upon which there are four mines in operation and others opening.

BLAINE AFTER THEM.

Our Premier Demands Satisfaction from Spain.

Considerable excitement has been aroused in Madrid by the news of Secretary Blaine's demand for satisfaction for the destruction of the American missionary property in the Caroline islands. The government is deeply concerned about it, and liberals now out of power rejoice at the embarrassment of the ministry. It is feared that the United States may get a pretext for seizing Cuba, and Spain is, at present, in no position for war, either by land or sea.

All Sorts.

All watches are said to be compasses; point the hour hand to the sun, and the south is exactly half-way between the hour and the figure XII on the watch; for instance, suppose it is 4 o'clock, then point the hand indicating IV to the sun, and II on the watch is exactly south.

Nature produces the light given by the firefly at about one four-hundredth part of the cost of the energy expended in the candle flame, and at an insignificant fraction of the cost of electric light, or the most economical light yet devised.

In Buenos Ayres the police alone have the right to whistle in the streets. Any other person caught whistling is at once arrested. Some of the "McGinty" and "Annie Rooney" warblers will doubtless thank heaven that Buenos Ayres is not New York.

When Haydn received from the University of Oxford a doctor's degree, which, since 1400, had been conferred on four persons only, he sent in acknowledgment a piece of music, exhibiting a perfect melody and accompaniment, whether read from the top, the bottom or the sides.

The biggest workshop in the world is said to be that of Herr Krupp, the famous gun maker of Essen; in 1883 it employed nine workmen; in 1848, 74; in July, 1888, 20,960 men were employed, and the families of workmen numbered 73,769 souls; of these 24,193 reside in dwellings provided by the firm.

A novelty in the washing-machine line has just been invented. It is connected with a child's swing, and after the soiled garments, with the proper quantity of soap shavings have been put in the tub, a child is placed in the swing, which is set in motion, and moves automatically, and turns the washing machine.

Wait a Little While.

Yes, take your time for it is better late than never, and if you will not at once try the proper remedy to restore your health wait until your doctor says you can't live and then try it. Doctors make a mistake quite often and doctor symptoms instead of diseases. A patient complains of mysterious aches and pains, sleeplessness, gloomy forebodings, nervous disquietude, etc. He is given a liniment for his aches, a narcotic for his sleeplessness, whisky to make him cheerful, and nux vomica or other poison to quiet his nerves. Verily, the last condition of that man is worse than the first. How many fall into the whisky or opium habit and remain confirmed invalids until death brings relief. You don't need such stuff. You need an alterative. You need a remedy that will merely assist nature in regaining her equilibrium. You need a remedy that will assist and strengthen the natural functions of the body. You need a remedy that will assist the digestion and assimilation of food you eat, a remedy that is easy and kind to the stomach, kidneys and liver. Such a remedy is Dr. Bull's Sarsaparilla. Try it and you will then get well in spite of doctors and erroneous treatment.

Deafness Can't be Cured

By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that we cannot cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Hood's Calendar for 1891.

To convey briefly an idea of the magnitude of our Calendar by words, we will say that the edition for 1891 is 5,000,000. To make this enormous number requires the labor of fifty people, ten printing presses and various other machinery for seventy days, manufacturing at the rate of 67,500 Calendars per day!

It is superfluous for us to praise the Calendar for 1891, when so many kind words are spoken by all who have seen it. In fact, it is almost unanimously pronounced the handsomest calendar we have yet issued.

The subject represents three children playing musical instruments, and the positions, expressions, coloring and general finish make a most charming picture. But to be appreciated it must be seen. Ask your druggist for Hood's Sarsaparilla Calendar, or send six cents in stamps for one copy, or ten cents for two, to C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Cause of Rheumatism

An acid which exists in sour milk and cider, called lactic acid, is believed by physicians to be the cause of rheumatism. Accumulating in the blood, it attacks the fibrous tissues in the joints, and causes agonizing pains. What is needed is a remedy to neutralize the acid, and to so invigorate the kidneys and liver that all waste will be carried off. We can honestly recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla for these purposes. It has cured others of rheumatism and it will cure you.

The Judge was Wise.

Mr. Justice Manle once addressed a phenomenon of innocence in a smock frock in the following words: "Prisoner at the bar, your counsel thinks you innocent, I think you innocent, but a jury of your own countrymen, in the exercise of such common sense as they possess, which does not seem to be much, have found you guilty, and it remains that I should pass upon you the sentence of the law. That sentence is that you be kept in imprisonment for one day, and as that day was yesterday you may now go about your business."

One of Gould's Schemes.

It is said that Gould, anticipating adverse legislation from Nebraska this winter, has arranged to send all his through traffic around this State via Denver and the Kansas branch connecting with the Missouri Pacific and Kansas City. Then he proposes to contest the right of a State legislature to regulate the Union Pacific because it is chartered by the federal government. — Nebraska State Journal.

Physicians informed me that I was threatened with paralysis or apoplexy. I suffered terribly with pain on the right side of my head, especially when I would read or write, and on rising to my feet would become perfectly blind and had to hold to something to prevent my falling. I am happy to say that Bull's Sarsaparilla has entirely relieved me. My appetite is good and for the first time in a long while I enjoy my dinners.—Mr. B. C. Rivers, Louisville, Ky.

"August Flower"

The Hon. J. W. Fennimore is the Sheriff of Kent Co., Del., and lives at Dover, the County Seat and Capital of the State. The sheriff is a gentleman fifty-nine years of age, and this is what he says: "I have "used your August Flower for several years in my family and for my "own use, and found it does me "more good than any other remedy. "I have been troubled with what I "call Sick Headache. A pain comes "in the back part of my head first, "and then soon a general headache "until I become sick and vomit. "At times, too, I have a fullness "after eating, a pressure after eating "at the pit of the stomach, and "sourness, when food seemed to rise "up in my throat and mouth. When "I feel this coming on if I take a "little August Flower it relieves "me, and is the best remedy I have "ever taken for it. For this reason "I take it and recommend it to "others as a great remedy for Dyspepsia, &c."

CATARRH

In reading over the literary items of the week, I found not much to interest me, until my eye caught sight of an article headed "Jenks' Dream." Imagine my surprise to find it ended up with a recommendation to use Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. Nevertheless, being a great sufferer from sick headache, I determined to try them, and, to my great joy, I found prompt relief, and by their protracted use, a complete immunity from such attacks. Pierce's Pellets often cure sick headache in an hour. They are gently laxative or actively cathartic, according to size of dose. As a pleasant laxative, take one each night on retiring. For adults, four as an active, yet painless, cathartic. Cause no griping or sickness. Best Liver Pill ever made. Smallest, Cheapest, Easiest to take. For Constipation, Indigestion and Bilious Attacks, they have no equal.

OVER ALABAMA.

Various Things That are Happening Around Us.

The Lee Light Infantry, of Opelika, has been reorganized, with Captain J. D. Parkson at the head of the company.

A number of numerously signed petitions have been forwarded to Montgomery in favor of the modified Henry school bill.

The census bureau issued on Saturday a statement of the population of the state of Alabama by races. The total population is given 1,513,017; 830,696 are whites, 681,431 colored, 750 Indians and 40 Chinamen.

The Alliance exchange estimates that during the current season, it will sell 50,000 tons of commercial fertilizer. The entire consumption of the state will go over 160,000 tons. This is an increase of more than 100 per cent in ten years.

The two Frenchmen who mysteriously disappeared from Birmingham some days ago at the same time the $24,000 belonging to the house of them was stolen, have not been found. Detectives are still at work on the case, but have found no trace of the missing men or money.

The Moulton Valley Oil and Gas company, organized less than six months ago, have been at last rewarded for their labor and money spent and their faith, and a twenty five barrel oil well is daily pouring out its rich treasures six miles east of Moulton.

In the house, Mr. Brown introduced a bill Saturday to incorporate the Southern Steel company, T. T. Hillman, Wilson A. Walker and George L. Morris, of Birmingham, being the incorporators. The capital is to be not less than $100,000, and not more than $30,000,000.

Heavy rains fell all over the middle section of the state Wednesday, doing considerable damage to the railroads. A big land slide occurred on the Kansas City road, and the completion of the new road-bed, Bolton and Birmingham road is greatly delayed by washouts and land slides.

The senate has passed a bill to repeal an act to make an annual appropriation for the benefit of the State Agricultural society, approved February 22, 1887. This takes away the $5,000 given annually to the state fair at Birmingham. So the state fair, if the bill passes the house, will lose $5,000 a year.

Friday night Mr. Y. T. Brannon of Lamar lost his barn and contents by fire. The entire crop of corn, fodder and cotton seed, with five bales of cotton, were consumed, also two horses, one cow and one boy badly burned and will probably die. A wagon and all the stock of farming implements were destroyed.

The state board of public printing, at Montgomery, has awarded the Daily News, an afternoon paper of Birmingham, the state patronage. Under the law the question of the largest circulation in the state is the controlling influence. This is the first instance in Alabama's history that the contract has been awarded a paper not published at the state capital or to an afternoon paper.

In the course of an argument in defense of the bill to make it unlawful for hogs to run at large in beat 22, Limestone county, Representative Lane, on Saturday, stated on the floor of the house that it would require in that beat fencing to the value of $116,000 to keep out of the fields hogs worth $153. These rather startling figures are more or less true of scores of beats throughout the State.

Information that comes from good authority is to the effect that the Macon and Birmingham road will be pushed on from LaGrange to Birmingham immediately, the company having already made all necessary financial arrangements. As is well known, the Kansas City is behind the M. & B. The building of the road means another through line to Savannah, and is the biggest thing now in prospect for Birmingham.

The striking of a twenty-five barrel oil well in Moulton valley, forty miles from Florence, has renewed the interest there in boring for oil, and several companies secured options on large tracts of land last year, but have never developed. One company has secured options on 8,000, and is raising $10,000 to bore for oil, a few miles from the city. Expert geologists have found every indication for oil and gas in that section is the same formation as that of Moulton valley.

The bill now pending in the legislature to provide against the garnishment of workmen's wages has created somewhat of a stir among the retail merchants of Birmingham. So much interest have they taken in it that a movement was inaugurated among them a few days since to make known their opposition to the Jefferson representatives at Montgomery, and to secure, if not the defeat of the bill, at least the exception of Jefferson county from its operation.

Under the provisions of the new reapportionment bill which passed the senate last week, Jefferson has six representatives, Montgomery four, Mobile and Dallas three each, Barbour, Bullock, Calhoun, Clark, Chambers, Hale, Henry, Jackson, Lee, Lauderdale, Lowndes, Madison, Marengo, Morgan, Perry, Pike, Russell, Sumter, Talladega, Tallapoosa, Tuskaloosa and Wilcox, two representatives each, all the other counties having one each. As is well known, the county of Jefferson gains four members under the new apportionment.

Steel will soon be manufactured in Birmingham on a large scale. The success of the experiments made with various basic processes has convinced local capitalists that steel can be made from the iron ores of that district, and they are now willing to put money into the business. The present legislature has been petitioned to incorporate two big steel companies now organized. By a basic process now in use it is believed steel can be made there cheaper than at any other point in America. The two companies are headed by local iron manufacturers of wealth and experience and they mean business. At least two large steel plants will be erected during the year.

Messrs. Harrington Bros., of West Point, Ga., have succeeded in obtaining an adjustment of a complicated misunderstanding with the Savannah and Western Railroad Company. Last week they purchased 1,100 bales of cotton in Opelika, which they wished shipped to Columbus to be compressed, where they have a force of men employed to handle their cotton and properly sample it. The road refused to receive it for shipment, as they have a contract with the Opelika compress not to receive any cotton at Opelika unless compressed there. This prevented the shipment of the cotton for several days, but everything has been satisfactorily adjusted and the cotton forwarded to Columbus to be compressed.

Alliance Resolutions.

The Shelby county Farmers' Alliance held a two days's session at Calera and a good deal of business was transacted. A resolution was unanimously adopted opposing the bill now pending before the legislature to increase the jurisdiction of the county court of Shelby. They also passed a resolution unanimously asking the legislature to submit for ratification by the people an amendment to the constitution of the state authorizing local taxation for educational purposes. They also appointed a committee of six of their best men to locate or establish at least one high school in the county, where their boys can receive a collegiate education at less expense than now. The reports from the different primaries showed the organization to be in a healthy, prosperous condition.

Against the Force Bill.

Resolutions of thanks have been tendered by the general assembly of Alabama "to the general assembly of Illinois for its refusal to table or refer a joint resolution expressing condemnation of the so-called force bill, now pending in our national congress." The resolutions proceed to say that Chicago is "one of the great wonders and marvels of American growth, which would be largely increased by the success of the Columbian exposition." Yet the general assembly of Alabama could entertain no proposition to take part in said exposition so long as the force bill was being pushed in congress; and "our thanks are hereby tendered to all our members in congress for their opposition to a measure which we regard as detrimental to American liberty, and we ask the conservative and business men of the north to use their influence to secure the defeat of the so-called force bill, which is partisan in its nature, unprecedented in American politics, and inexcusable for want and lack of necessity; that the governor of the state of Alabama is hereby requested to forward forthwith copies of this resolution to both speaker and president of the two houses of the general assembly of Illinois, and a copy to be sent to each of our distinguished federal senators." The resolutions were adopted by the house and sent to the senate, which also adopted them.

TENNESSEE'S NEW GOVERNOR

Takes up The Reins Dropped by Bob Taylor.

John P. Buchanan was formally inducted into the office of governor of Tennessee Monday, in the presence of fully 8,000 people. The general assembly, justices of supreme court and all the State officers were in attendance. Governor Taylor's retiring address was brief but full of wit. He then closed briefly, and introduced his successor, Hon. John P. Buchanan, who spoke briefly also. Upon closing, Governor Buchanan was sworn in by Chief Justice Turney, of the supreme court, and a reception followed in the governor's office.

During the last year sixty-eight persons had their names changed in New York, in the manner prescribed by law.

CONFEDERATION.

LABOR ORGANIZATIONS AGREE UPON A PLATFORM.

The Meeting in Conformity with Ocala Instructions.

The conference of the different labor organizations began at Washington City Thursday afternoon. A committee on "business" was appointed, consisting of Livingston, of Georgia; Wright, of Pennsylvania; Humphries, of Texas, and Wild, of Washington city. After discussing a basis of action and adopting plans for the same, the committee adjourned until Friday morning at 10 o'clock. The delegates met promptly at the hour appointed. The question under consideration was some plan of agreement by which organizations could unite on some satisfactory platform and form a close confederation of state organizations for both offense and defense. After a long session the following demands were agreed upon:

"We demand the abolition of national banks as banks of issue, and as a substitute for national bank notes we demand that legal tender treasury notes be issued in sufficient volume to transact the business of the country without damage or special advantage to any class or calling; such notes to be legal tender in payment of all debts, both public and private; and such notes, when demanded by the people, shall be loaned to them at not more than 2 per cent per annum upon nonperishable products, as indicated in the subtreasury plan, and also upon real estate with proper limitations upon the quantity of land and amount of money.

We demand the free and unlimited coinage of silver.

We demand the passage of laws prohibiting alien ownership of land, and that prompt action to devise some plan to obtain all lands now owned by aliens and foreign syndicates, and all lands now held by railroads and other corporations in excess of such as is actually used and needed by them, be reclaimed by the government and held for actual settlers only.

Believing in the doctrine of equal rights to all and special privileges to none, we demand that taxation—national, state or municipal—shall not be used to build up one interest or class at the expense of another one.

We demand that all revenues, national, state or county, shall be limited to the necessary expenses of the government, economically and honestly administered.

We demand a just and equitable system of graduated tax on income.

We demand the most rigid, honest and just state and national government control and supervision of means of public communication and transportation, and if this control and supervision does not remove the abuses now existing, we demand government ownership of such means of communication and transportation.

We demand that the congress of the United States submit an amendment to the constitution providing for the election of United States senators by a direct vote of the people of each state; also president and vice president by a direct vote.

Resolved, That this confederation of industrial organizations demand that in each State a system shall be provided and faithfully executed that will insure an honest and accurate registration of all voters, a full, fair, secret and official ballot and an honest public count; and we demand that each state legislature shall make it a felony for any improper interference with the exercise of registration, ballot or count.

Permanent organization was then formed by the election of Ben Terrell, of Texas, as president, and J. W. Hayes, of Pennsylvania, as secretary and treasurer.

Ben Terrell, A. W. Wright and J. J. Rogers were appointed a committee on by-laws, with instructions to report at Saturday's meeting.

The business of the conference was resumed Saturday morning, the question under discussion being the best method of instructing and reaching the industrial classes, and the most feasible plan for educating them in doctrines of the organization. Much difficulty has been encountered in disseminating the principles and ideas of the confederation as embodied in the Ocala convention, and reaching a common basis on which to work. This is applicable particularly to the negro regions as well as in a less degree to other portions of the country, where it has been found that nearly every state organization has different methods of reaching the people. The confederation, after long discussion, finally determined that the national committee is to consist of the chairmen of the different organizations in the confederation. The duty of this committee will be to determine on the best methods to perfect the work of the organization and carry out the demands made by the confederation. The new committee has plenary power during the adjournment of the delegates composing the organization, and each chairman of the executive committee has power to appoint an assistant to aid him in any way in carrying out the views and impressing upon the people of his organization the principles of confederation. By-laws were also adopted by the conference for the government of the confederation, which also prescribe the duties of the officers of the different organizations.

The president of the confederation was authorized and empowered to invite all industrial organizations to send representatives to meet and exchange views with the confederation at its next meeting, the delegates to be fully empowered to act for the organizations they represent. The conference then adjourned to meet again on February 22, 1892, at some place to be decided upon by the chairman of the executive committee. The president, however, has power to call another meeting whenever he deems it advisable. R. A. Humphries was elected vice-president of the confederation.

A VIOLENT STORM.

Snow and Sleet Play Havoc in New York City.

Meagre dispatches from New York city say: The storm which set in at 11 o'clock Sunday night and continued until Monday noon, was the severest of the season thus far. About six inches of snow fell, and it was of a clinging kind that fastened itself to everything it touched, loading trees until they were shorn of their branches or fell prostrate with their trunks snapped off as though they had been mere twigs, and clinging to the electric wires until they gave way under the pressure and broke in all directions, or until the poles on which they were strung, breaking under the enormous weight, fell across the streets and against houses, blocking all traffic on the former and threatening death and destruction to the latter and their inmates. At daylight Monday morning the work of destruction had commenced and it continued until the snowfall ceased at noon, when wrecks of trees and telegrape poles were to be found on every street, while irregular festoons of wire were hanging on every hand and detached lengths were strung on every sidewalk. No such work of devastation has been known since the great blizzard of March, 1886, and it is a question if that memorable storm was more serious in its effects upon telegraph poles and wires of the city. Early in the morning telegraphic and telephonic connections were broken and while the snow did not offer a bar to railroad traffic, the prostrate poles and fallen wires prevented running cars on many streets and even elevated railroad trains were compelled to move cautiously, and were often brought to a stop by wires that had fallen across the tracks. The police and fire departments were especial sufferers. All wire connections between the various police stations and the central office were broken and recourse was had to messengers. The same may be said of the telegraph, telephone and electrical light companies, all of which had their full effective force engaged all day. Many quarters of the city were wrapped in Cimmerian darkness Monday evening, but for the fortunate circumstance that the moon is nearly full and supplies, in part, the lack of electric lights, none of which were working in any portion of the city excepting in some sections in the Harlem district. The Western Union is badly crippled by the storm, all the wires being down, but three, those being on the western circuit connecting Albany, Rochester, Buffalo and Chicago. Details of the great storm are difficult to obtain, so many of the wires being down.

AN ABUNDANCE OF LYMPH

In New York--A Sanitarium to be Established.

A New York dispatch of Sunday says: The supply of lymph in the city has become so plentiful recently that not only have all the large hospitals been able to secure enough of the fluid to carry on investigations, but various physicians are contemplating the establishment of a great sanitarium in which the tubercular patients will be treated. Local physicians have faith enough in the curative effects of the lymph to invest their money in a scheme which will make its administration more effectual than it has yet been. It is the intention of the physicians in charge of the sanitarium to charge only for attendance, and such expenses as ordinarily occur. The sanitarium will be conducted on exactly the same principles as those which govern public hospitals.

SOUTHERN BRIEFS

DAILY OCCURRENCES IN THE SUNNY SOUTHLAND

Curtailed into Interesting and Newsy Paragraphs.

An application was filed at Chattanooga Tuesday morning to wind up the McDowell Wagon Company's affairs. Partnership trouble is the cause.

The first annual exhibition of the South Carolina Pet Stock and Poultry Association and the South Carolina Kennel Association combined, began at Greenville, Tuesday.

The stockholders of the Tennessee and Coosa railroad, which is now owned by the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis, met in annual session at Huntsville, Ala., Tuesday, and elected directors.

The bill creating a fifth judge of the supreme court of Alabama, was passed by her legislature Thursday. The governor is to appoint the judge within ten days after its approval, to hold office until the general election in 1892.

The North Carolina house of representatives, on Thursday, passed a resolution refusing to make an appropriation for the world's fair, in the event of the passage of the election bill. A similar resolution had already passed the senate.

E. T. Moore, late president of the People's bank at Fayetteville, who was arrested Monday evening, charged with embezzling over $106,000 of the bank, waived examination Wednesday and was bound over to appear at the United States circuit court in Raleigh next June.

In the United States court at Charleston, Thursday, an order was signed postponing the time for the appointment of a permanent receiver for the Charleston, Cincinnati and Chicago railroad till the 24th of February. The suit was brought by the Pennsylvania Finance Company in December last, and Samuel Lord was appointed temporary receiver of the road.

On Thursday application for a charter for the Macon, Ga., produce exchange was filed in Bibb superior court. The incorporators are O. M. Houser, of Fort Valley; W. E. Warren, of Powersville, and D. H. Lowe, W. S. Deidrich and T. O. Skellie, of Macon. The capital stock will be $10,000, with the privilege of increasing it to $25,000.

A dispatch from Wheeling, W. Va., says: The Redmen, a band of regulars, after being quiet for a long time, have again shown their peculiar species of authority. Tuesday night thirty disguised men took John Barber and James Ballard from their homes in Wirt county, tied them to trees and beat them unmercifully. Oscar Keller, one of the band, has been arrested.

A Chattanooga dispatch of Wednesday says: Mrs. Fugettee and all the important witnesses as to the killing of Banker Fugette by his father-in-law, Judge Warder, have testified before the grand jury. That body has found an indictment for murder in the first degree against Warder, but it has not been served, as he is suffering from one of the pistol wounds received.

A sensation was created at Manchester, in Coffee county, Tenn., Tuesday, by the arrest of ex-Trustee B. F. Lean on a charge of embezzlement. Lean retired December 1st, after a four-year term, and shortly afterwards removed to Alabama. It is alleged that the shortage was discovered nearly a month ago, and that the amount is nearly $6,000. Mr. Lean was of good social standing, and of excellent character.

Efforts are being made to organize another transportation company at Chattanooga to put a line of boats on the Tennessee river. It is claimed that the present company is controlled by the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis railroad, but the boat company denies the charge. So far no definite move has been taken to organize the second company. Several firms have signified their readiness to subscribe to the project, and that is as far as it has gone.

United States Marshal Walker, receiver of the Mobile and Girard lands, in Alabama, received instructions Thursday from United States District Judge Bruce not to deliver any more of the timber seized by him as receiver, as having been cut on the forfeited lands of the Mobile and Girard Railroad Company. Receiver Walker had been delivering timber to Milligan & Co., that firm giving bond to indemnify the government in event the legal proceedings are finally decided in the government's favor.

A Montgomery dispatch of Thursday says: H. C. Keeble, of Selma, head of the Keeble company, which failed for $250,000 a few days ago, has fled the state to escape an expected indictment and arrest. Some 6,000 bales of cotton were consigned to the company, and he used the warehouse receipts in a great many cases, and drew money on them from banks and others. Persons advancing money claim the cotton, while the consignors also make a claim. Keeble thought it best to leave. His whereabouts are not known.

On Wednesday, Governor Jones sent to the Alabama senate the names of Levi W. Lamley and Wiley Tunstall for positions as railroad commissioners for four years from March 1st. The salary of the office is $3000, and it is regarded as one of the best positions within the gift of the governor. The positions were so desirable that there were twenty-nine applicants, among the number being several of the most prominent men in the state. Both of the gentlemen appointed have been members of the board for six or eight years past. The nominations were unanimously confirmed by the senate.

[illegible]E DECIDED

In the Behring Sea Matter---Adverse to Petition.

The Behring sea case was taken up Tuesday in the United States supreme court, pursuant to an order made by the chief justice. The courtroom was filled with spectators. The United States was represented by Attorney General Miller and Solicitor General Taft, and the government of Great Britain by Joseph H. Choate, of New York, and Calderon Carlisle. Vice President Morton, Representative Greenhalge and Ben Butler, of Massachusetts, and Mr. Stockdale, of Mississippi, were among the auditors. Calderon Carlisle opened for Great Britain.

After considerable argument on both sides the attorney general in his argument opposed the motion for leave to file a petition for a writ of prohibition on the following grounds:

First—That the supreme court has no power in any case to issue a writ of prohibition to the Sitka court, because it is not a district court of the United States, being merely a territorial court. He argued further that the question of jurisdiction of the Alaska court which the petition seeks to present cannot be raised on the hearing of the admiralty proceedings, which are on appeal with the supreme court, because the issue of these proceedings show jurisdiction in the Alaska court, and after sentence in such cases, he argued, prohibition "will not issue."

In concluding his argument he held that, conceding all the facts averred in the petition, the question of the jurisdiction of the Alaskan court depends upon the extent of the dominion of the United States in Behring sea.

FALLING INTO LINE.

No Appropriations if the Force Bill Passes.

A Trenton, N. J., dispatch says: The senate, Tuesday morning, concurred in the resolution adopted by the house last week denouncing the federal election bill, and asking New Jersey congressmen to oppose the same. A resolution offered that New Jersey withhold the appropriations from the world's fair if the election bill passes congress was adopted by the assembly. The vote on the resolution was a party one.

WEST VIRGINIA ALSO.

The West Virginia legislature, on Tuesday, after an acrimonious discussion, passed, by a vote of 40 to 20, a resolution that in case of the passage of the federal election bill, the state will make no world's fair appropriation.

ILLINOIS SPEAKS OUT.

A Springfield, Ill., dispatch says. In the house, on Tuesday, a resolution instructing the senators from Illinois to vote against the federal election bill was passed by a strict party vote—77 to 73. Mr. Springer, on behalf of the democrats, gave notice that if the senators from Illinois should vote for the federal election bill, the democrats in the state legislature would not vote a dollar in aid of the world's fair.

PEFFER IS THE MAN

To Succeed Ingalls as Senator From Kansas.

A Topeka dispatch says: At high noon Tuesday, the two bodies of the Kansas legislature met separately and voted for United States senator. The ballot resulting as follows, in the house: Peffer, ninety-six; Ingalls, twenty-five, and Blair, straight democrat, four. In the senate: Peffer received four votes, Elder one and Ingalls thirty-five. Two republican state senators voted for Peffer. The republicans were magnificent in their defeat. As each vote in the house for Ingalls was announced, a perfect yell followed, and it was not allowed to die out till the packed floor, lobbies and galleries were exhausted. This delayed the ballot, but gave the republicans an opportunity to show their superb nerve. Ingalls is defeated, and all the work done since the election has not resulted in the changing of an adverse vote in his favor.

One copy six months 75
One copy four months 50

The lady friend who sends us the article headed "A Parable," has our thanks. It is unexcelled.

What a novelty a newspaper would be that was edited by the people who are always growling about the papers.

The Age-Herald states that Mr. H. A. Wilson has resigned his position as deputy revenue collector and that he will soon begin the practice of law in Birmingham.

Dukes, the negro editor who was run out of Montgomery, because of his vile writings, was seriously shot by a Democratic negro in Arkansas last week. Dukes' villification brought on the difficulty.

Some of our patrons who are receiving their subscriptions speak very kindly of the View and they have our thanks. They are the kind we like to please. While it is not possible to print a paper like the New York World in Clanton, there are many who tell us that we are giving them a good county paper.

A white man shot a negro at Carbon Hill mines last week, and then defied arrest. He succeeded in frightening the Yankees so bad that they called on the governor to order out the "melish," and when the boys reached the scene the belligerent was ready to surrender, and treated them all around to Carbon Hill "cheese and crackers."

The astonishing thing about the force bill agitation in Congress is that there is absolutely nothing behind it except Harrison and his ambition to be elected. Take away Harrison's influence from the Republican side of the Senate and the force bill would be dropped in an hour. The party is not in favor of it, and yet Harrison is allowed to have his own. It is a strange fact.

Gov. Jones has re-appointed Messrs. Lawler and Tunstall railroad commissioners for the next four years. The salary of the position is $3,000 per annum and the work is principally in taking free rides in palace cars and having an occasional chat with a railroad official or a car porter. A sweet place surely, and we would like to have one of the gentlemen swap with us.

Of the late George Bancroft the Chicago Times says: "There can be no better guide in this direction than the life of America's great historian. He was a Democrat pure and simple. In his creed was no thought of an aristocracy resting upon dishonor of birth or gathered fortune. He believed in the people, nor would limit the sufferage by lines tending to partisan advantage. Learned in the story of nations that had passed away, he was quick to see the dangers threatening his country and skillful in pointing the way of safety. Inspired with an honorable ambition he returned the confidence of the people with a service which of itself was his reward. Called to high responsibilities at an early age, he filled the measure of his opportunities and left his imprint on the story of his times.

The Force Bill.

The Force Bill is again reported dead. Before the present congress adjourns it will have ample time to bob up again and avail of another opportunity to "kick the bucket."

An exchange has suggested with a good show of reason that the present congress never intended to pass the bill. The Republicans have a majority sufficient to rush the measure through if they could be united on the question, but our precocious statesman of the pencil has reached the conclusion wisely or otherwise that the Republicans have no desire to pass the bill, their sole object in its agitation being to stave off financial legislation—legislation that would be of interest to the people generally, but of which the nabobs and "plutocrats" of the East are not in favor. The antics of the Republican Senators engineering the iniquity have given a show of reason to this conclusion, and the people may cry in vain for relief from a congress the majority of whom are partisans for revenue, and not for principles of patriotism.

OVER THE COUNTY.

Neighborhood News Gathered by Our Correspondents.

Stick to the Alliance.

Mr. Editor:—Not long ago your paper gave its opinion that the Alliance farmers would have things their own way in the next campaign; and yet, Mr. Editor, there's an old saying, "there's many a slip 'twixt cup and lip." Some I know have been seen smiling lately when told that certain men had joined the order. Everybody in my neighborhood has joined who can, and there won't be offices enough to go round. PETE.

Verbena Verbiage.

I hope your readers will not think that we are isolated or selfish because of our silence, and even now we do not wish to make the impression that we wish to be conspicuous for we like to read the news from the different localities, and we like to reciprocate.

Mrs. P. J. Anderson has been spending a pleasant visit among her friends here. She has just returned to her home in Montgomery.

Mr. Anderson Baker is recovering from serious sickness.

The "grippe" is prevalent in Verbena and Coopers and surrounding country, but not fatal.

Rev. J. M. McCord has located at Verbena and entered upon his pastoral work. And the Rev. Mr. Sanders, pastor of the M. E. Church, is highly esteemed, their meetings are on alternate Sabbaths. The pulpit (at Coopers) is occupied once a month by Rev. W. J. Ruddick. With these three good men at the religious helm, there is nothing to hinder success. S.

Mr. M. M. Durbin our turnip peddler is sick with "grippe" and our school boys are complaining of having no turnips to eat.

We regret the loss of Mr. James A. Dudley and family who have moved near Clanton.

Mr. Thomas Jones, of Coosa, and Miss Martha Weblon were married on Feb. 1st making twenty-one weddings in our community during the winter and fall.

Our farmers seemed to be [illegible] tered on Mr. James Garner for [illegible] next Probate Judge. We hope [illegible] will accept the nomination if he should be so nominated.

Sister Perry, of Washington, has been holding a series of meetings at Pierce's Chappel and much good has been accomplished, she has up to this time had upwards of twenty conversions and still taking them in. She seems to be sent of God. D. M.

The "grip" is raging in this community.

Miss Maggie Garner has been very sick but is now convalescent.

Mr. E. Eddings, of this community, spent Wednesday in Calera.

There is an old negro in this neighborhood, who claims to be 116 years old, and he cuts two cords of wood per day.

Pleasant Grove Academy is in a flourishing condition, under the supervision of Prof. J. T. Huffstutler. Prof. Huffstutler is an efficient teacher.

The farmers are busy preparing their lands.

It is a very remarkable fact for a country church, but there has not been a Sunday in ten years but what there has been Sunday School at Concord Church. The S. S. is now flourishing.

Mr. W. S. Moore and Miss Mollie Reynolds were happily married at the Methodist Church Sunday last, Rev. R. J. Wilson officiating. We congratulate you Bill upon your excellent choice.

It has created a little excitement in this community that certain citizens of Coosa county have passed a resolution asking not to be placed in a Senatorial district with Chilton because she is independent, or with Shelby because she is Republican. W. S. G.

Stanton Notes.

George Lawrence, a white boy of 13 years, accidentally shot himself in the hand while carelessly handling a parlor rifle yesterday evening. Didn't know it was loaded.

Mr. Frank Fuller has sold his place in Stanton to Mr. George Patrick and moved with his family to Catherine.

Miss Alice Strother, of Wilcox, who has been visiting the family of Mr. O. H. P. Wright, left for Selma yesterday.

Messrs. James, Secor and Albert Chellborg, of New York city, are visiting Mr. Richard Cox.

Mr. William Walker, Sr., died on the 27th ult. He had been afflicted many months with paralysis, and his death was not unexpected.

We are glad to state that Mr. Wooley is recovering from the "grippe". His daughter, Mrs. Sawyer, of South Carolina, is visiting him.

Our railroad has lately taken an impetus and it is probable that we will hear the locomotive soon.

Tom Hambrick and child both died the same day last week with the strange disease called the "grippe."

A Parable.

A lady reader sends the following with this request accompanying it: Please publish in our CHILTON VIEW the enclosed clipping. I want all your subscribers to read it, especially "the chewers and dippers and snuffers and puffers":

Seeing that men who professed to be servants of the Most High had corrupted themselves and become filthy and abominable, a great and wise prophet stood up and did prophesy these words of truth and soberness: Then shall the kingdom of Satan be likened to a grain of tobacco seed, which though exceedingly small, being cast into the earth, grew exceedingly and became a great plant, and spread forth its leaves rank and broad, so that the huge and vile worms with thorns on them, even to their tails, came and formed habitations thereon, and did crawl all over and leave their slime and filth thereupon. And it came to pass in those days that the sons of men did look upon this rank and filthy plant and were very much enamored therewith, and did think it was beautiful to behold, and a plant very much to be desired to make lads big and manly. And it further came to pass, that men claiming to be nice men, did put forth their hands and pulled the [illegible] these filthy looking worms, and left their bodies still sticking to the tobacco leaf, that the leaf might be made rich by the juice thereof, and having cut these filthy plants and smoked them, even with an exceeding great smoke and cured, and stripped, and prized, and wrought the leaves into curious shapes, and forms, and the sons of men gave gold and silver for it, and did chew thereof. And some that chewed thereof, it made sick at stomach, and others it made their heads to ache; and others it made to spew and vomit most filthily; but for all this, they continued to chew thereof. And it came to pass that those that continued to chew became exceedingly unmanly, and exclaimed: "We are enslaved and cannot cease from chewing." And the mouths of all who were enslaved became exceedingly filthy and [illegible] enough that they were [illegible] with a violent spitting, and [illegible] spit even in ladies' parlors [illegible] their floor and carpets, and being wholly abandoned to the use of the plant, they even invaded the sacred precincts of the house of the Lord, and there with prayers on their lips and tobacco in their mouths they sang, prayed and preached, and squirted the filthy juice on the floor of the Lord's house and under the pews and against the walls and in the pulpit, and did drop their quids of tobacco all over the floor of the most high God, and would return home and say, "We have worshiped God to-day."

But some of the Saints of the Most High were not well pleased with such conduct, but chewers cared not for any of these things, but continued to chew and squirt where they pleased. And in the course of time it came to pass, that this filthy plant was ground into dust, even the stalks and stems and filth thereof, and it was called snuff; and it came to pass that ladies even beautiful and fair ladies, did make unto themselves brushes and mops and dipped the same into the filth called snuff, and did put these filthy mops into their mouths and then rubbed and scrubbed mightily, and spit and sneeze and squirt, and call the same dipping.

And again it it came to pass, that the leaves of this filthy plant were cunningly wrought into little round rolls called cigars, and the sons of men did set fire to one end thereof and did put the other end into their mouths and suck mightily, even as calves suck, and they did look very grave and calf-like and the smoke of their torment ascended forever and ever. And the cultivation thereof became a mighty business in the earth, and the merchants and speculators waxed rich thereby.

And it came to pass, that the Saints of the Most High defiled themselves therewith; even the poor, who could not buy bread nor shoes, nor religious papers nor school books for their little ones, would spend money for the filthy plant and chew and squirt, while their families were suffering. And the Lord was greatly displeased therewith and said, "Wherefore do ye spend your money for that which satisfieth not, and wherefore this waste? And why do these little ones lack bread and shoes, and your families do without religious papers, and your children have no school books. Turn your tobacco fields into corn and wheat and cotton, and put this evil from you, and be ye separate and defile not yourselves; when I will bless you and cause my face to shine upon you," but almost unanimously the chewers and dippers and snuffers and puffers exclaimed: We cannot cease from chewing and dipping and snuffing, puffing and sneezing and spitting and squirting; we are slaves."—Ex.

Senator Hargrove has introduced a bill to establish a reformatory for boys under sixteen years old. We don't know what the provisions of his bill are, but from his known ability we judge that it will fill the requirements. The fact is patent, Alabama needs such an institution and needs it badly.—Troy Messenger.

Notice to Non-Resident.

The State of Alabama, Chilton County, In Chancery at Clanton, Seventh District, N. E. Chancery Division.

Leroy Flannagan vs. Cloe Flannagan.

In this cause it is made to appear to the Register by the affidavit of complainant that the defendant, Cloe M. Flannagan, is a non-resident of the State of Alabama, and that she resides in Grant Parish in the State of Louisiana. And further, that in the belief of said affiant, the defendant Cloe M. Flannagan, is of the age of twenty-one years.

It is therefore ordered by the Register that publication be made in the Chilton View, a newspaper published in the town of Clanton, once a week for four consecutive weeks requiring her, the said Cloe M. Flannagan, to plead, answer or demur to the bill of complaint in this cause by the 19th day of February, 1891, or, in thirty days thereafter, a decree pro confesso may be taken against her.

The Equitable Life Assurance Society
OF THE UNITED STATES.

In selecting a company in which to insure, why not take the best instead of being persuaded by the eloquence of representatives of weaker companies to take what is less advantageous? It is the company, not the agent, with whom the assured must deal after the policy is once taken. It is the company, not the agent that pays the dividends and meets claims when they mature. It costs no more to insure in the best and strongest company than any other established on a sound business basis; therefore, we again ask, WHY NOT TAKE THE BEST?

A Sonnet.

It is easy enough to be pleasant
When life flows by like a song,
But the man worth while is the man who will smile
When everything goes dead wrong;
For the test of the heart is trouble,
And it always comes with years,
And the smile that is worth the praises of earth
Is the smile that shines through tears.

Mr. J. Bice, of Strasburg, was in town last week.

Mr. J. M. Stanfield has put in a new planing machine at his mill.

Mr. W. C. Jones has moved from the southern part of the county to a farm one mile west of Clanton.

Postmaster Chesnutt is moving the postoffice to the front part of the Lowe building.

We were forced to "boil down" our neighborhood locals. No offense. Space crowded.

Mr. J. J. Honeycutt has moved to Strasburg and engaged in business with Mr. J. Bice.

Mr. Jas. A. Dudley has moved his saw mill to a point on the railroad one mile south of Clanton.

"Wool-Hat," sends some items from Verbena. Send your name and they will be gladly published.

Mr. P. C. Dennis, of Cooper's, one of Chilton's best citizens, was in town Friday, and paid the VIEW a visit.

Mr. J. P. Vanderveer, of Clear Creek, we learn, is making preparations to move with his family to Florida.

Mr. J. F. Maull has withdrawn from the Clear Creek Lumber Co., as will be seen by notice published in our advertising columns.

Rev. Hardy Jones drops us a few items and says he is mad because the VIEW did not "note the pop call of so great a personage as he is."

Dr. J. S. Johnson has erected a new cottage residence on his lot near the courthouse. It will be occupied by Mr. S. T. Nelson during the present year.

The demands of the Confederation of Labor Organizations recently perfected at Washington D. C., will be found published on the first page of this issue.

Mrs. E. F Chilton, lately a much loved resident of our town, died at her home in Montgomery on Monday. She was the wife of Judge Wm P. Chilton for whom our county was named.

Mr. Honeycutt, father of Mr. J. J. Honeycutt of the Jumbo neighborhood, died at the residence of his son-in-law near Strasburg on the night of the 28th inst. He had reached the age of 76 years.

A correspondent at Lily wants space in the VIEW to be heard from occasionally. By all means if you furnish your name. This rule is invariable. Remember that we will not publish your name, but we must know who is responsible for the items furnished.

Our patrons who come in to see us and find the publisher absent will please bear in mind that the young man in our office will be pleased to serve them. He says he can handle more money than you can bring with you; and we can say for him that he will handle it honestly and properly, and your receipt will be good.

Our young friend Oscar Boykin, the first "devil" the VIEW office sported, in the days when he was a strapping youngster ready for base-ball and for rubbing ink on other boy's noses, was in town Friday. He was very much set back by the recent fire in which his entire stock of goods was destroyed.

Clanton has a milinery store conducted by Mrs. Glennie Phillips. We have an idea that it would be a generous and gallant concession for our merchants to turn their milinery business over to this worthy lady. Divided up it is very small. The VIEW and no one else is responsible for this suggestion.

Our County's Population.

The population of Chilton county by races is, whites, 11,432; colored 3,116. This is a larger white population than is given either of our nearest neighbors, Bibb or Coosa, Bibb having 9,044, and Coosa 10,489. Bibb has 4,780 colored, and Coosa 5,420. Our good neighbor, Autauga, has but 4,722 whites and 8,487 colored. The evidence on every hand goes to prove that Chilton's white population is increasing much more rapidly than the colored. We have a larger white population than Dallas, the whites in that county numbering only 7,906. Chilton is a good county to come to.

Alliance Herald.]

He wants a fair remuneration for his labor.

He wants to see class legislation abolished.

He wants more money that debt trade may be abolished.

He wants free and fair elections and purity in politics.

He wants an equal representation in the legislative department.

He wants everybody to have a free and fair chance in the race of life.

He wants an equal chance with men engaged in other occupations, no more.

He wants to see all men successful who are engaged in the pursuit of legitimate enterprises.

He wants to see the genius of man directed to the development of the country's resources.

He wants to see this Republic a "government of the people."

He wants reduced rates on the transportation of the products of labor, in order to place him nearer the consumer.

He wants the financial system so modified that money will become the beneficent agency of commerce, instead of its master.

Legislative.

The bill repealing the law creating the Chilton county court of revenue has passed both houses and the governor's signature has probably made it a law ere this. It will go into effect at the expiration of the present term of the board of revenue as now appointed, which will be in August, 1892.

The bill creating a new Supreme Court Judge has passed the House.

The bill placing Probate Judge's on salaries failed to pass the house but was referred back to the committee to consider amendments. It elicited an animated discussion.

Mr. Hargrove has introduced a new road law in the Senate. Mr. Smaw, of Greene and the member from Sumter have each introduced a law on the same subject.

At the expiration of the session the VIEW will publish the laws of general interest and those relating to Chilton county particularly.

The temperance bill has passed the Senate and probably the House by this writing. It prohibits the sale of liquor in any but an incorporated town.

Several contributions too late.

Cause of Rheumatism

An acid which exists in sour milk and cider, called lactic acid, is believed by physicians to be the cause of rheumatism. Accumulating in the blood, it attacks the fibrous tissues in the joints, and causes agonizing pains. What is needed is a remedy to neutralize the acid, and to so invigorate the kidneys and liver that all waste will be carried off. We can honestly recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla for these purposes. It has cured others of rheumatism and it will cure you.

ALLIANCE NOTES.

NEWS OF THE ORDER FROM ALL SECTIONS.

Items of Interest to Allancemen Everywhere.

Two papers, an English and a Scandinavian, have been established in Dakota by the State Alliance.

***

The executive council of the Farmers' Alliance of Kansas have sent four state lecturers into the field.

***

The business of the several State Alliance Exchanges for the year past amounted to $10,000,000.

***

The Farmers' Alliance is the biggest thing on earth. Was born of necessity in the State of Texas, and has killed more politicians during its brief existence than any other known power. It is here to stay, or words to that effect.—Alliance Monthly.

***

Little River Pilot (Richmond, Ark.) says: The pleasant and harmonious meeting of the Farmers' Alliance at Ocala, Florida, has proven beyond the shadow of a doubt that the ghost of sectionalism no longer stands between the farmers of the north and the south, the east and west. They met on one common platform and together consulted over their interests and laid plans to protect themselves and their posterity. May the blessings of God rest upon the works of the noble order.

***

Living Issues (Boston, Mass.) says: Union is coming. The Farmers' Alliance has led the way. Over the chasm of North and South, over the soldier's grave, Kansas and Florida, the farmer of Dakota and the planter of Louisiana, have shaken hands. What an achievement—forty congressmen at its first election. The farmers taught us how. Even black and white are brotners in the Farmers' Alliance. If that difference in the South can be forgotten, can reformers of the East and North come together?

***

Thomas S. Gellibrand, of London, and Louis von der Hoya, of Germany, proposed to the direct trade convention in session in Atlanta recently that if the Southern States would interest themselves to the extent of a guarantee of 5 per cent of the sum necessary to build four steamships to ply between Europe and the Southern ports, that they would furnish the steamers and commence direct trade at once. The convention appointed a canvasser for each State to secure $50,000 as a guarantee at once. So it seems that direct trade is about to take practical shape at last. A large majority of those present were Alliancemen.

At a meeting of the Seventh Congressional District Farmers' and Laborers' Union of the State of Missouri, held at Bowling Green, the following resolution among others, was adopted:

Whereas, The Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union assembled at Ocala, Fla., December 2, 1890, gave to the world a Declaration of Principles of the Farmers' and Laborers' Organizations; therefore be it

Resolved by the Seventh Congressional District Farmers' and Laborers' Union of Missouri, That after careful examination of the same, we heartily indorse the declaration and believe it to be as just to all as any set of principles that the mind of man could formulate.

***

The Alliance Times (Anderson, Ind.) says: The Alliance is a political organization and teaches politics; its principles are purely political, its intentions are political, and the man or woman who is thinking of becoming a member with any other understanding had better not send in his application for membership. While it is political it is non-partisan. Some people do not know the difference between politics and partisanship. Politics is the science of government; partisanship—well it is anything to beat the other party, regardless of principles or anything else.

***

The Alliance men of Kansas are impressed with the great purpose of the Order, which is that the strong shall help the weak whenever their greater strength is needed, and serves as the basis for much that the Alliance does in business co-operation. The following from Wichita, describes the broad line in which the duty of mutual aid is construed in Kansas: "The Alliance lecturers over the State have commenced to advocate the policy of farmers organizing and making loans on corn to enable poor farmers to meet their obligations without being compelled to put their corn on the market. The first company has been organized. It is composed of five hundred members, each putting in $200, and it is proposed to take care of the poor members of a certain number of sub-Alliances. It is said that within a few days similar loan companies will be organized covering the entire State. A resolution was passed stating that every bushel of corn should bring the farmer $1 or more."

***

THE DEMANDS.

The demands recently made by the National Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union show that they had a full conception of the responsibilities, and that they were cautiously making demands that they intended to enforce. Summed up in brief, the seven demands made show that they will require only about thirteen bills or laws, as follows:

First demand: 1. Law abolishing national banks. 2. Law establishing subtreasury plan. 3. Law establishing system of 2 per cent land loans direct to the people. 4. Law increasing volume of money to $50 per capita.

Second demand: 5. Law prohibiting dealing in futures.

Third demand: 6. Free coinage of silver.

Fourth demand: 7. Law prohibiting alien ownership of land. 8. Law forfeiting unearned railway land grants and limiting their land holdings.

Fifth demand: 9. Law revising tariff in the interest of the producer. 10. Law creating a graduated income tax. 11. Law reducing government expenditures.

Sixth demand: 12. Law creating efficient control of railroads.

Seventh demand: 13. Law for the election of United States senators by direct vote of the people.

AN ALLIANCE VICTORY.

Judge Peffer was elected senator Tuesday by the Kansas legislature to succeed Mr. Ingalls. This is an overwhelming victory for the Farmers' Alliance, whose cause he espoused. Peffer is a man of education and ability, with an irreproachable personal character, though not as much of a scholar as a man of affairs. He was born in Pennsylvania sixty years ago, and the foundation of his education was laid in the country school house of that state. In 1870 he moved to Kansas, locating on a claim government land in Wilson county, engaging in farming and the practice of law. In 1874 he was elected to the state senate as a republican.

In 1880 he was a presidential elector on the republican ticket, and in 1881 was appointed editor of the Kansas Farmer and moved to Topeka. He then abandoned party and politics and devoted himself to the study of economic questions. During the campaign he was a declared candidate for the position to which he has been nominated by his party and Judge Peffer has alway taken a great interest in agricultural matters, and is thoroughly educated in the bucolic silence in politics. He unreservedly indorsed the St. Louis platform and the Ocala platform of the National Farmers' Alliance Industrial Union, and the platform of the people's party in Kansas; believes the government should aid in improving harbors and rivers in the South, and building north and south railroads; in the West in irrigating lands wherever and as fast as settlement demands; and, first of all, the issuance of money enough to set the people on their feet again.

BEN TERRELL'S VIEWS.

Ben Terrell, national organizer for the Farmers' Alliance, made an able address before the convention of the Farmers' and Laborers' Union of Kentucky, which met recently in Lexington. He appealed to the inhabitants of the cities and towns to aid the farmers to promote the better condition of the agriculturists; that they were people of the same government, and what was the interest of one class was the interest of all. He declared that the Alliance was not a partisan organization, but it stood ready to rebuke any party or administration which did not heed the demands of the laboring class. He said that the farmers, both north and south, would stand shoulder to shoulder in the fight against the common enemies of mankind—namely, speculators and monopolists. There was no sectional strife among the farmers of the nation. They are all for one end—better times. He deprecated class legislation; said it was injurious to the people, and doubly so to the farmer, upon whom the brunt of everything falls. The farmers were patriots, not partisans, and whatever was good for the country they would always go for it. He said that the farmers as a class were educated; that they were readers and thinkers, and their organization did not bind them to any political or religious views, but reserved to each individual member a perfect freedom of political and religious thought and action. He further said that the farmers have determined that parties shall support the people, not the people support the parties. And the party in the future which will gain the votes of the Alliance will be the party which will enact legislation for the relief of the people. And they reserve to cast a ballot which will relieve them from the oppression to which they are subjected. He concluded by saying that the Alliance to cultivate the friendship and good will of all classes, and asked that everybody join the farmers in trying to do away with sectionalism.

SECRETARY WINDOM DEAD.

After a Banquet Speech He Suddenly Expires.

Hon. William Windom, secretary of the treasury of the United States, died Thursday night at 10:05 o'clock, in the banquet hall at Delmonico's, where he was the guest of the New York board of trade and transportation. His had been the first toast of the evening. He had finished his response and had seated himself, swooned at once, and died almost immediately. Every effort to restore him was made, but in vain. He died of heart disease. The great assemblage at once dissolved. Mr. Windom had been the only speaker and the sentiment to which he responded was: "Our Country's Prosperity Is Dependent Upon its Instruments of Commerce."

THE NEWS IN WASHINGTON.

The announcement of the sudden death of Secretary Windom, in New York, gave almost as great a shock to his official friends and associates in Washington as did the shooting of President Garfield to the members of his official household. It was so terribly sudden and unexpected that all who heard the news were profoundly shocked, and so overcome as to be unable to express the grief they felt.

As soon as the telegram bearing the sad intelligence was received by the Associated Press, its contents were immediately communicated to President Harrison, at the white house. When the message was read to him he was greatly distressed and almost completely overcome.

Mr. Windom was subject to fits of heart failure. On Tuesday last he was seized with an attack while on the steps of the treasury at Washington, but he did not lose consciousness and was able to take care of himself.

FATAL COLLISION,

In Which two Soldiers and Many Horses are Killed.

A Topeka, Kan., dispatch says: Particulars of a collision between a passenger train and a special bearing troops from Pine Ridge, which occurred Tuesday evening on the Union Pacific railway at Florence, a small station near Irving, Kan., have been received here. The special was carrying about 400 soldiers, part of the Seventh cavalry, and battery E, light artillery, bound for Fort Riley. The train consisted of seven passenger and twenty-four freight cars loaded with horses and several pieces of artillery and ammunition, hauled by two large engines. Three engines and several cars are a complete wreck. Many of the soldiers were seriously, and at least two fatally, injured. The dead, so far as can be ascertained, are, Sergeant Schortbat, battery E, artillery; Private Mell, troop G, Seventh cavalry. Among the wounded are Captain Godfrey, troop D, Seventh cavalry, and ten enlisted men. The conductor of the military train is held responsible for the accident, as he was running on the express train's time. A large number of cavalry horses were killed.

WILL REFUND THE MONEY.

The Deluded Exodusters to be Reimbursed.

A Washington dispatch of Tuesday says: The Congo Emigration company advertise their willingness to return the money to the parties remitting for tickets to Africa by their secretary. The post-office department is investigating the matter, and when the proof is obtained of sending circulars through the mails, there will probably be some arrests.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

NEWS NOTES AND ITEMS FROM THE NATIONAL CAPITAL.

Proceedings of the Second Session of the 51st Congress.

SENATE.

The senate met at noon Tuesday and the journal of Thursday (covering the proceedings of Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Monday) was read and approved. The credentials of Stanford and Irby as senators-elect from California and South Carolina for the term beginning March 4, 1891, were presented, read and placed on file. Those of Stanford were criticised by Hoar as unsatisfactory in form, the governor undertaking to commission him, instead of simply certifying to his election. Among the petitions presented and referred was one by Mr. Frye, in favor of having potatoes received by the government and treasury certificates issued thereon at the rate of $1 per bushel. It was referred to the finance committee. Mr. Plumb offered a resolution which was agreed to—providing that until otherwise ordered the senate shall meet daily at 11 o'clock a.m., and that morning business shall continue for one hour only. On motion of Mr. Paddock, the house bill to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations was taken up by unanimous consent, in the morning hour, Mr. Blair stating that there was an understanding that after the termination of the apportionment bill the bill for the adjustment of accounts of government workmen under the eight-hour law would be taken up. Mr. Paddock stated that the committee on Indian affairs had reported a substitute for the house bill; that the number of claims filed in the interior department was 1,289, aggregating an amount of $4,315,600, and that, after the sifting process of the department, the amount had been reduced to $1,348,000. At 2 o'clock (and while Mr. Allen was speaking) the bill was laid aside and the apportionment bill was taken up as "unfinished business"—the question being on Mr. Davis' amendment to increase the total number of representatives from 356 (as proposed in the house bill) to 360 and giving an additional member to each of the states of Arkansas, Minnesota, Missouri and New York. Without action on the apportionment bill, the senate proceeded to executive business, and at 5:15 o'clock p. m. adjourned until Wednesday at 11 o'clock a. m.

The senate met at 11 o'clock a. m. Wednesday, which is to be the hour for daily meeting for the remainder of the session unless otherwise ordered. Mr. Stewart said inasmuch as there was some uncertainty as to Mr. Stanford's position on the vote (Monday) to lay aside the cloture rule, he wished to have read a telegram written to him by Mr. Stanford on Monday morning, but not delivered on account of interrupted telegraphic business. The telegram was read. House amendment to the senate bill refferring to the court of claims the claim of the Chesapeake Female college, of Virginia, for use and occupation of its property from 1861 to 1869 by the military authorities of the United States, was concurred in and the bill now goes to the president. The conference report on the bill for a public building at Columbus, Ga., was presented and agreed to. The house appropriation bill was then taken up and Mr. Hale, who had reported it from the census committee, explained and advocated the house bill and argued against the amendment proposed by the minority of the committee. A lengthy argument ensued, Messrs. Davis, Gorman, Carlisle and Vance taking part therein. The bill was laid aside after a statement from Mr. Hale that he would ask a vote upon it at noon Thursday. After a brief executive session the senate adjourned.

HOUSE.

Tuesday morning, after some miscellaneous routine business, the house went committee of the whole on the military academy appropriation bill. In the general debate which followed, the recent Indian troubles in Dakota formed the subject of discussion, and also the election bill. Of the latter, Mr. Wheeler, of Alabama, said that its passage would result in the prostration of all of the prosperity which was dawning upon the people of the south. Mr. Spinola, of New York, was in pursuit of the "force" bill when he was interrupted by Mr. Bland with a request that Mr. Spinola should yield to him to make a motion to lay the "force" bill on the table. Mr. Spinola replied that he would not do so, being apprehensive that the force bill was not quite dead. Until he saw that bill placed in its grave and the sod thrown upon it, and a benediction delivered, he would not believe that the measure was out of the way. After further debate, the committee rose and the house adjourned.

In the house, on Wednesday, the journal of Tuesday's proceedings was approved without question. The speaker laid before the house the resignation of John H. McCarthy, as representative of the eighth district of New York. Laid on the table. The house then went into committee of the whole, Mr. McComas, of Maryland, in the chair, on the military academy appropriation bill. Before disposition of the bill, the committee found itself without a quorum, and the roll call failing to procure the necessary 100 members, the committee rose and the house adjourned.

NOTES.

The senate on Wednesday confirmed the nomination of F. W. Collins, United States marshal for the southern district of Mississippi and R. C. Wilcox postmaster of Clarksville, Tenn.

The delegation of Sioux chiefs and headmen arrived in Washington Thursday, under escort of Special Agent Lewis. Arrangements will be made at once for their conference with the secretary of the interior.

The secretary of the treasury sent a letter to congress Tuesday, in which he requested an appropriation of $15,000 for heating apparatus, an elevator and for painting the interior walls of the Atlanta custom house.

The house republicans, and particularly the Pennsylvania republicans, felt outraged at Cameron's vote on the force bill and telegraphed to Harrisburg to have the Pennsylvania legislature pass a resolution condemning his course.

The democratic senators are delighted at the action of the Alabama, Arkansas and Tennessee legislatures, in passing resolutions against appropriations for the world's fair, if the force bill becomes a law. They hope that every southern state will do likewise.

The republicans who were in not with the democrats in the vote on the force bill were all on hand except Senator Stanford, of California, who was absent without a pair, and Senator Ingalls, of Kansas, who was, however, paired with a republican against the bill.

Although the silver pool investigating committee have been in session nearly every day recently, Senator Cameron has been the only fish caught in their drag net. But even he, it seems, was not in the pool. He speculated on the outside after the bill had passed congress.

The silver bill is still in the hands of the coinage committee, but there is a strong probability, unless it is acted on before the end of the week, that an attempt will be made to discharge the committee from its further consideration, and bring the matter directly before the house.

At a meeting of the house committee Wednesday morning, it developed that a strong effort will be made to smother the free coinage bill in the coinage committee of the house. The bill passed the senate two weeks ago, and should have been reported before this. No action was taken toward bringing it before the house. To the contrary, it seems to be the desire of the committee to hold it up as long as possible.

The newspaper correspondents before the silver pool investigating committee gave out some points Wednesday that will lead the committee to make disclosures, whether they want to or not. The investigation so far has had the effect of placing the committee in the light of desiring to cover up the tracks of those supposed to have been connected with the silver pool. Now, however, that the names of Congressmen Clunie, of California; Ketchum, of New York, and Perkins, of Kansas, have been mentioned as members of the pool, the chances are that the facts of the deal will be brought out, and many sensations will develop within the next few days.

A MINE HORROR.

Terrible Explosion and 130 People Dead.

A terrible mine explosion occurred at the mammoth works of the H. C. Frick Coke Co., Pittsburg, Pa., Tuesday morning. One hundred and seven bodies had been taken from the ill-fated mines up to 10 o'clock Wednesday morning. It is estimated there remains at least seventeen more victims of the explosion still in the pit. After the explosion news of the awful fate of scores of miners at work in the shaft spread rapidly among the mines and miners' homes. Couriers carried the dreadful news hither and thither, and families were dashed from the comforts of home into the depths of grief and despair. The scenes at these miners' cottages can readily be imagined by those who have known grief in its more formidable forms, but no artist's pen can correctly picture it.

AT THE MOUTH OF THE PIT.

Within an incredibly short time the entrance to the shaft was swarmed with eager, anxious crowds of men, women and children, some of whom could only, with great difficulty, be kept at a safe distance, as the bodies of the victims, mangled by the terrible force of the explosion, or burned almost out of human semblance, were brought from the yawning depths. The crowd of watchers pushed forward to the pit for a glimpse of recognition. The hearts of wives and sisters stood still for fear their loved ones were among the dead. The more disinterested ones quailed before the scene.

WORK OF THE RESCUERS.

The rescuing party proceeded with their grim task, and the crowd of silent watchers looked on. It was one of those scenes which, once witnessed, remains forever impressed upon the memory of the spectator.

This catastrophe, while involving more than five times the loss of life occurred by the Dunbar disaster, differs in many respects from the latter. At Dunbar the explosion set fire to the mine and the shaft for days and weeks was a roaring furnace, adding horrors to the great fatality. In Tuesday's occurence this was not the case, and by the perfect work of the fan, pure air was forced into the mine, and the work of rescuing was permitted to begin at once.

WHAT CAUSED THE EXPLOSION.

An official of the Frick company says, regarding the cause of the explosion: "It may never be known how or why the explosion occurred. An accumulation of fire damp was probably the cause, but it was never known to exist in any quantity before; in fact it may be said that the Mammoth mine has been free from damp. There is a theory that a pocket of natural gas was reached, and that the operation of ventilating fans now prevents any accumulation of it. It is not necessary that every one in the mine be killed when an explosion occurs. The explosion may stay in one particular section, and may not permeate the entire mine unless the volume is so great as to force it to every part of the pit. In this case the gas was confined to one portion, and miners who were in other localities escaped."

A COMPLETE ANNIHILATION.

Never in the history of American coal mining has there been such an unexpected accident, with such a complete annihilation of all within its reach. The Mammoth mine has been notable always as being particularly free from gas. Hundreds of safety gauge lamps were provided for the miners by the company, but they were never used, as they were regarded as unnecessary.

THE DEATH LIST INCREASES.

Thursday afternoon it was discovered by the rolls of the company that twenty-three more men are missing, in addition to the 107 found dead. This increases the total dead to 130. It is probable the remaining twenty-three will not all be found for weeks, owing to the immense piles of wreckage that must be undermined. Twenty-seven more dead miners were buried at noon, many of the graves being marked "Unknown," owing to the terrible mutilation.

Master Workman Rae, of the United Mine Workers, is laboring with his colleagues to form more stringent laws for the state, and influential politicians are preparing to push them in the legislature. As it is, there seems to be no way for the people to reach the company for damages.

A call for assistance has been issued by all the Pittsburg labor organizations, and the newspapers and business offices are receiving subscriptions.

Insect Breathing.

The little-known phenomenon of the respiration of insects has been studied in the grasshopper, by M. Contejean. The process observed in the vertebrates is inverted, the movement of inspiration being passive, and that of expiration active. The air is expelled by a contractile effort. If the insect is wounded, blood flows at every expiration, while neither decapitation nor the absorption of ourare arrests the respiratory movements, which in man are immediately stopped.

Has Bid and's Advice to Women.

A good rule for following is never to heed unreal foes. There are always enough enemies at one's elbow without reaching forward to grasp those reserved for the future. When men bid you beware, take no foolhardy risks, but plumb the depths yourself, and accept no tyro's word for the undertow and tides. Those who cling to spars never learn to swim, and it is only by striking out fearlessly one ever catches the secret of keeping the head above water.—Illustrated American.

In Tepe-Kermene, an ancient town in the Crimea, a platina coin has been found bearing the image of Antiochus of Syria, who died B. C. 164. The coin is the only one of its kind known to exist, and for this reason its value is inestimable.

A peculiar fact with reference to Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is, that, unlike sarsaparillas and other blood medicines, which are said to be good for the blood in March, April and May, the "Discovery" works equally well all the year round, and in all cases of blood-taints or humors, no matter what their name or nature.

Why? Because it's sold on a peculiar plan, and you only pay for the good you get.

Can you ask more?

"Golden Medical Discovery" is a concentrated vegetable extract, put up in large bottles; contains no alcohol to inebriate, no syrup or sugar to derange digestion; is pleasant to the taste, and equally good for adults or children.

The "Discovery" cures all Skin, Scalp and Scrofulous affections, as Eczema, Tetter, Salt-rheum, Fever-sores, White Swellings, Hip-joint disease and kindred ailments.

NEVER WITHOUT IT.

About three years ago my little boy three years old was confined to his bed with what the doctors pronounced inflammatory rheumatism in his left leg. He complained of severe pains all the time, extending to his hips. I tried several remedies but they did him no good. A neighbor whose little son had been afflicted the same way, recommended S. S. S. After taking two bottles my little boy was completely cured, and has been walking one and a quarter miles to school every day since. I keep S. S. S. in my house all the time, and would not be without it. S. J. CHESHIRE, Easton, Ga.

It is perfectly harmless, yet so powerful as to cleanse the system of all impurities.

"German Syrup"

A Cough and Croup Medicine.

For children a medicine should be absolutely reliable. A mother must be able to pin her faith to it as to her Bible. It must contain nothing violent, uncertain, or dangerous. It must be standard in material and manufacture. It must be plain and simple to administer; easy and pleasant to take. The child must like it. It must be prompt in action, giving immediate relief, as childrens' troubles come quick, grow fast, and end fatally or otherwise in a very short time. It must not only relieve quick but bring them around quick, as children chafe and fret and spoil their constitutions under long confinement. It must do its work in moderate doses. A large quantity of medicine in a child is not desirable. It must not interfere with the child's spirits, appetite or general health. These things suit old as well as young folks, and make Boschee's German Syrup the favorite family medicine.

We want to sell our heavy stock very much, so much so that the prices will be giving away prices.

OVER ALABAMA.

Various Things That are Happening Around Us.

Saturday night the store of John Ramagnano, at Jacksonville, was broken into, his safe drilled through and about $1,400 stolen. The work is that of an expert, and there is no clue as to who the parties are.

The Southern exposition will open at Montgomery October 28th and close November 11th. Capt. H. G. Bibb has been elected president. Preparations are being made to make the exposition the greatest fair ever held in Alabama.

Sunday night about 9 o'clock, two men entered the office of the Birmingham Railway and Supply Company, at Birmingham, sandbagged the clerk, John C. Matthews, tied his hands and feet and gagged him. They robbed the safe of $786, and made good their escape. The clerk gained consciousness in two hours. He thinks he was chloroformed. The robbers were white men.

The St. Louis, Paducah and Tennessee River Packet company and the Louisville, Paducah and Tennessee River Packet company have arranged to put on the light draught steamer, to ply between Riverton and Decatur, Ala., via the Mussel Shoals canal. This will connect their Chattanooga line of steamers with the lower Tennessee river trade, and will be the first practical through navigation of the upper Tennessee, although several boats have recently made the trip.

It is reported that the Chattahooga Southern, the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia system, the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis road and the Louisville and Nashville will build a commodious union passenger depot in Gadsden where, it is said, they have secured the necessary ground. One of the roads, the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis, owns several acres near the business center of the city, and pressure will be brought to bear on the roads to build nearer the city.

A special from Florence says: Deputy United States Marshal Shoenfield returned a few days ago with Harvey Reynolds, who was arrested on the Alabama state line charged with operating a distillery and retailing illicit liquor. His bond was fixed at $500, which he was unable to raise, as he is already under $1,000 bond for a similar offence. His bondsmen have turned him over to the authorities. He is the worst moonshiner in that section. Some sensational developments are looked for, which will involve him, as he was a principal actor.

The projected Fort Payne and Eastern road, has already awakened great interest along the entire length of its proposed route. All through the section of the country that it will traverse there are great deposits of marble and immense forests of timber. A direct communication to the Tennessee river, where heavy material, such as pig iron, machinery coal and marble could be sent hundreds of miles by water, would insure for the new road a good local business within a year of its completion.

The Philadelphia Record seems to be watching Alabama affairs! It says: "Greatly to their astonishment, the capitalists who are building railroads in Alabama have discovered that the railroad committee in the legislature, which is largely composed of Alliance men, is not hostile to the railway corporations, but, on the contrary, has declined to report favorably a bill conferring mandatory powers upon the state railroad commissioner. The bill may be passed, of course, notwithstanding the recommendations of the committee, but there is little fear of such a reversal of the judgment of the committee."

Mr. C. M. Boulden, president of the Birmingham and Jones Valley Railroad company, has signed a contract with reliable parties to complete the road ready for the rolling stock from Birmingham to Avondale; work to begin at once and to be completed within ninety days. The rolling stock will be ordered so as to be on hand by that time, and the road will be pushed forward to completion throughout its entire length. And when so completed will be one of the most profitable and popular roads entering Birmingham, as it passes through the most fertile and thickly populated portion of Jones Valley. At a meeting of the council of the town of Avondale Mr. Boulden was granted an extension of time to the 15th of May in which to complete his road in compliance with the above contract.

For the Third Time.

Fifty-two acres of Choctaw point have been condemned for the third time in the probate court, says the Mobile Register. This property was first condemned by the Anglo-Southern Construction company, the jury naming $5,500 as the price to be paid for it. The Anglo-Southern company failed to make the payment, and a few weeks ago the property was condemned by the Mobile, and Kansas City Railroad company for use as its terminal yard. Its value in the opinion of the jury, had in the mean time advanced to $8,000. Investigation proved that proper notice of this condemnation had not been given, and the proceeding would not hold. This discovery necessitated a new action, and the jury decided that the Mobile, Jackson and Kansas City Railroad company should pay $13,000 for it.

Oil in Lawrence.

Everybody is awaiting confirmation of the reports of oil in Lawrence county and is watching with interest the operations of the explorers and speculators. The Moulton Advertiser continues to believe in it and says: "The oil news is still encouraging, and every doubt has been removed. For the past three weeks it has been the all absorbing topic of conversation among the people of this valley, and no one ever grows weary in telling or listening to others tell about this marvelous industry. New companies are being organized everywhere to drill for oil. One will begin boring somewhere in the Landersville and Mount Hope territory as early as men and machinery can be gotten on the ground. Pennsylvania capital is interested in the enterprise, and will push the development with a vim. We learn that four engines will be put to work immediately in the Terry sen lement. We met an oil man in Moulton who informed us that such lands as we have are now selling in Pennsylvania for $1,500 per acre. He has been over our oil territory—has examined it closely and is convinced beyond a doubt that we have petroleum here of a very high grade. In fact, our county is now full of men prospecting for oil and other minerals. We do not wish to discourage any enterprise looking to the development of our mineral resources, but we want to caution our people about leasing or selling their lands. We are your friends and we want you to reap a full reward of all that comes out of the earth. Preparations are being made to bore another well at Hartsell, and a development company has also been organized at Florence."

CAPITOL NOTES.

The re-districting bill has been killed in the senate.

The house concurred in the senate resolution to authorize Safford Berney to have printed in his handbook of Alabama from the engraved plates, prepared for the geological survey, copies of the map.

The bill to make an appropriation for defraying the expenses of the annual encampment of the state troops has passed the house. As amended and passed, it appropriates $13,500 a year for the years 1891 and 1892, and it was disposed of without discussion.

The house bill, to create a new county of portions of Clarke, Maringo and Wilcox counties, said new county to be called the county of Herndon, has been passed by the house on a vote of 56 yeas to 23 nays, slightly more than the two-thirds majority required under the constitution.

The following house bills have been passed: A bill to establish and mark the boundary line between Cherokee county, Alabama, and Polk county, Georgia, and appropriating $250 for that purpose. To amend the code so as to more effectually prevent lotteries in this state. It prohibits any lottery or device of the like kind, or any gift enterprise, or any scheme in the nature of a lottery or gift enterprise. A bill to provide for the redemption of lands by persons whose lands have been sold for state taxes.

The house has passed, without discussion and without opposition, Mr. Webb's bill for the relief of needy confederate soldiers and sailors, residents of Alabama, who from wounds or other cause are now unable to earn a livelihood, and for the widows of such as were killed in said war, and have not since married. The bill imposes a special tax of ½ mill, and is to run for six years. Special provision in the total of $1,200 a year is made for the totally blind, of whom it is believed there are but ten or twelve in the state. For veterans suffering under other disabilities provision is made after the manner of previous acts of this nature. The bill will raise about $125,000 a year.

THE EDITION SEIZED

For Alleged Publication of a Lottery Advertisement.

A Knoxville, Tenn., dispatch says: A large portion of the mnil edition of the Morning Journal was seized by the postmaster at that place Friday for an alleged violation of the lottery laws. The alleged offense was the publication of a reading advertisement of the scheme of a local lottery firm to send a man or woman to Europe free of all charge. With every purchase of goods a ticket was to be given, so the advertisement read, and there it stopped. It is understood that the matter will be carried up for decision, as the publishers assert that there was no violation of any law, state or national.

ALLIANCE NOTES.

NEWS OF THE ORDER FROM ALL SECTIONS.

Items of Interest to Alliancemen Everywhere.

The state secretary's books show that the first Alliance in Georgia was the Antioch Alliance in Troup county, organized March 31st, 1887, and that Mrs. Lord, of Antioch, was the first lady in Georgia to join the order.

***

The Farmers' Alliance warehouse in Athens, Ga., is building up a fine business. Hon. James M. Smith, of Oglethorpe, sent it one shipment of 350 bales, and will supplement it with 1,060 more. Col. Smith is the kind of men who build up Alliance institutions.

***

The Industrial Advocate (Kansas) says it would like to see the work of the Alliance take a little more of an agricultural turn; that it would be a good plan to have meetings of neighborhood Alliances with subjects of discussion already outlined, and bring out all there is in it that would be of benefit to the farming class.

***

The Spalding County Alliance met at Griffin, Ga., a few days ago. The manager of the Alliance warehouse made a report which was highly encouraging. The report showed that 13,307 bales of cotton had been weighed, and that there was a nice little purse, aggregating nearly $5,000, in bank, which will go back to patrons in the way of dividends in a few weeks.

***

One hundred million of the government credit to be loaned to a syndicate to dig a ditch in Nicaragua is constitutional with John Sherman; but to loan the farmer credit on his wheat, oats and other crops that go to keep the human family alive is unconstitutional. There is a great deal of difference between tweedle-dee and tweedle-dum.—National Citizens' Alliance.

***

"IN UNITY THERE IS STRENGTH."

The Alliance organization is a protest against the economic, financial and political delusions of the times. The farmers have struggled against these wrongs and influences year after year, only to wear themselves out with their mortgages, cyclones and floods; and yet they have fed 65,000,000 of people with the products of their work. The question with them is, "Shall we submit to those conditions any longer, or shall we rise up and assert our rights and obtain justice and fair play?" To the latter they have returned an affirmative answer. Upon this hypothesis they are now working, believing that "in union there is strength." Following out this idea, they propose to unite with the independent party, the people's party by its representatives, the late federal and confederate soldiers by their representatives, the Farmers' Alliance, the Farmers' Mutual Benefit Association, the Citizens' Alliance, the Knights of Labor, the Colored Farmers' Alliance, and all other industrial organizations that support the principles of the St. Louis agreement of December, 1889.

FOR THE TWITTY BILL.

The following resolutions were passed a few days ago by the Bethlehem, Ga., Alliance:

Whereas, There is a bill before the general assembly of Georgia known as the Twitty bill; and,

Whereas, We understand said bill has been postponed until the adjourned session of the said body for the purpose of knowing the wish of the people in regard to the passage of the same; and,

Whereas, We believe said bill to be just and right; therefore be it

Resolved, 1. That we endorse the same, and recommend that it be amended so as to nullify the following clauses often found in notes given for guano, etc., to wit: "And no payment is to be allowed on this note unless it is entered on the note and signed by the maker." And again: "We agree to hold all crops growing upon the land fertilized with this fertilizer in trust for the said A. B. & Co. until this note is fully paid."

2. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the author of the said bill, and that they be published.

3. That we ask other citizens throughout the State to give their opinion in regard to said matter.

***

The Industrial World (Spokane Falls, Wash.) says: "There has never been a dissenting State Alliance on the sub-treasury bill, and out of a total vote of thirty-six States at the last national meeting only four votes were cast against it. We think that the sub-treasury will not only smash the democratic party but the republican also. These old parties are backed by the money kings of Wall street, and they will use this party machinery to ignore and kill this bill. The party politicians flocked to the Ocala meeting to defeat this bill, but failed. These same men have flocked to the different State Alliances for the same purpose, but have everywhere failed. The fight is on. All of the subsidized daily papers are, without exception, united in discouraging the discussion and consideration of this bill. The politicians are everywhere fighting it, as there is a deadly fear in their minds that it will force itself to the front and smash them and their parties. Alliancemen and mechanics also, should force this bill to the front, and never lose, an opportunity to put in a good word for it and the land loan bill. It will be to the people like a man who is pulled out of a mud pond and dressed in a new suit of clothes. They are the beginning of a series of much needed reforms."

A SPLENDID SCHEME.

The Alliance of Hart county, Ga., is not troubling itself about local or national politics, but has gone to work in earnest and in a business way, to benefit its membership. Last year nearly every sub-Alliance in the county borrowed money enough to run its membership for cash, basing the estimate on an economical administration of each man's family government. The money was obtained in the following manner: Five or six of the best men in each sub-Alliance would make a note for enough money for all. The cash was then distributed to each member according to his estimated needs. When the crop was gathered the money was brought in by each man in accordance with the talents he had received, and turned over to the makers of the bank note, who in turn paid off the note in bank. In this way men who were entirely unable to get money from the bank, got money and paid the merchant cash for his meat and corn. This arrangement, instead of damaging, helps the local merchant. He gets a fair profit and gets the money as he sells the goods, and can afford to sell for shorter profits because he can use his cash several times the same season. The most of the guano was bought on joint note in the same way and at very short profits to the dealer. The scheme altogether is a commendable one, and its general adoption would be a great benefit to sub-Alliances.

DANGER TO THE ALLIANCE.

As soon as the Alliance approaches the development of strength which indicates possibility of its principles becoming dominate in the government, the tremendous power of wealth and political influence will be exerted to modify the policy of its leaders. When a man becomes prominent and powerful by virtue of the votes back of him, he is brought face to face with new necessities.

The power to talk and reason now becomes the power to act. The courage to talk and write of vast reforms for the welfare of humanity, and the courage to act in the same line are two wholly distinct developments in human nature.

It is like the difference between urging the troops to death and destruction behind the breastworks—and leading them in the charge after the breastworks have been cleared.

Few men have the power within them to face the to-dayism of thirty-one billion dollars of capital, with all that it implies! Few men, indeed, in a single state have the name heroism to stand before the polished and cultured princelings of an old civilization, and proclaim the truths involved at the hearthstone of a desolate home.

Here is the danger. We have reached it. The Alliance is now a power, and already we find men who have posed as the leaders of revolution, making their peace with the money power. The heroism of the platform becomes the conservatism of the lobby.

The hour demands men! It demands iron wills and genuine courage. It demands the spirit of the Master—men who in statecraft can pierce the present clouds into the future beyond—men who can make pathways as well as tread these already beaten.

The hour of trial comes. Watch ye who wavers—who trenches—who falters and prepare to search anew for those who are equal to the wondrous times which dawn upon us.—The Great West.

MAYOR WORD'S VERSION

Regarding His Attack on Rev. Sam Jones.

Mayor J. J. Word, of Palestine, Texas, published a card Friday, in which he says the trouble between Sam Jones and himself was on account of personal matters, and not because the evangelist criticised his official actions. The mayor says: "While Mr. Jones was here he took it upon himself to refer in the most insulting language to my private life and habits before my wife and children; hence my attack upon him. As for my official conduct, that is open to the scrutiny of right-minded men."

THE TRADES UNIONS

To Demand the Work on the World's Fair Buildings.

The organized labor of Chicago hotly asserted itself Sunday regarding the world's fair. It was a regular meeting of the trade and labor assembly body, said to represent 47,000 workmen, and one of whose members was given a seat in the world's fair directory in recognition of $300,000 subscribed by workingmen to the guarantee fund of the fair. James O'Connell, president of the assembly, offered the following:

Whereas, The present directory of said exposition indicate their intention of refusing to recognize union labor, but threaten to emply indiscriminately non-union labor, thereby flooding the labor market of Chicago with the ultimate design of destroying the trades unions; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, as union men, protest against this treacherous action of the directors of the World's Columbian exposition, and unless immediate action is taken by that body to redeem their implied pledges given in regard to union labor, we will deem it our duty to oppose in every way any further legislation, either municipal, state or national, in favor of said World's Columbian exposition, and we hereby recommend all workingmen who have subscribed for said stock to decline to pay any further assessments until proper assurances are given by the directors that the said implied pledges will be kept; and be it further

Resolved, That unless satisfactory assurances are given by the directors that their indicated action will be changed, we shall deem it our duty to ask the co-operation of every body of organized labor throughout the country to assist us in making our protest emphatic.

The resolution was carried without opposition. The man will go before the world's fair direntory with the above resolution and ask further that eight hours be made a day's in the constitution of the world's fair buildings.

FRIDAY'S BLAZES.

Destructive Fires at Various Points.

Friday morning fire was discovered in the Willingham building, Macon, Ga. The firemen promptly responded and by hard work prevented a serious conflagration. Conservative judges place the loss at about $20,000, covered by insurance. The fire originated in the second story of the building in the rooms occupied by the Bradycrotine Company as a factory and packing department. It is thought to have been caused by rats.

CAR SHOPS DESTROYED.

A fire in the Pullman car shops at St. Louis, destroyed the shops and their contents, including eleven cars, together with a number of small dwelling houses near by. The aggregate loss is estimated at $250,000, partly insured. About 400 men are thrown out of work as a result of the fire. The burned property was owned by George M. Pullman, of Chicago.

NUT AND BOLT FACTORY BURNED.

The nut and bolt works of J. Henry Steraberg & Son, at Pittsburg, Pa., were destroyed by fire Friday. Loss $375,000; insurance probably two-thirds.

A NORFOLK BLAZE.

At Norfolk, Va., fire destroyed a building on Hill street, until recently occupied as a peanut factory, but at this time empty except for a small amount of patent fence. During the late war the building was occupied by northern troops as a bakery. The loss is about $5,000: fully insured.

SODA WORKS DESTROYED.

Church & Co's soda works, in Grand Point, were burned early Friday. Loss, $200,000. The night force of 125 men were at work when the fire occurred, but escaped without difficulty.

A dispatch of Tuesday from Montgomery says: The state senate passed a bill appropriating $30,000 to represent Alabama at the world's fair.

Hon. A. H. H. Stuart, secretary of the interior in Fillmore's cabinet and a member of the Peabody educational board, is critically ill in Staunton, Va.

The California house of representatives, on Tuesday, passed a bill appropriating $300,000 for California's exhibition at the world's fair, by a vote of 48 to 22.

A joint resolution has been passed by the California legislature asking congress for laws providing for a government tax, loaning money on farming lands.

At Campbellsburg, Ky., Tuesday, the farmers' union passed resolutions denouncing the Louisville tobacco exchange and agreeing to support Lexington or Cincinnati in the future as a tobacco market.

A Birmingham dispatch of Tuesday says: Warrior river, at Tuscaloosa, is fifty-five feet above low water mark and rising. The Alabama river is out of its banks and destroying property below Montgomery.

A Macon, Ga., dispatch of Tuesday says: The melon and fruit growers and shippers have organized the Macon Produce Exchange, with a capital stock of $10,000. They propose to handle 2,000 cars of melons and other fruits, also all kinds of eastern and western fruits and produce.

A Chattanooga dispatch of Thursday says: Judge Warder's physicians declare him insane and say his life is in great danger. His hand, which was wounded in the fight, has quit healing, and may have to be amputated. His condition is very critical. His mind is undoubtedly dethroned.

Fire broke out in one section of Phillip's & Parish's cotton warehouse, at Selma, Ala., Thursday afternoon. Eight hundred bales of cotton were burned. Two negroes, suspected to have set the building on fire, were arrested and committed to jail. All the cotton was covered by insurance.

A case of interest to hotel men everywhere, involving, as it does, the extent of their liability for damages in cases of accident to guests was tried at Montgomery, Wednesday. In July, 1889, W. A. Thomas, a guest of the Windsor hotel, of which D. P. West is proprietor, fell in a hallway, alleged to be poorly lighted, breaking both arms. The plaintiff sued West for $10,000 damages. The jury, after being out forty-eight hours, rendered a verdict awarding the plaintiff $2,000. The case will be appealed.

The trustees of the state university met at Raleigh Wednesday; Governor Fowle presiding. Dr. K. P. Battle tendered his resignation as president of the university, a position he had ably filled since the reorganization of the institution in 1875. The resignation was accepted after remarks upon his valuable services had been made by several trustees, and a committee was directed to prepare suitable resolutions regarding his retirement from control of the university. He was elected professor of history to fill the chair recently created.

A Montgomery, Ala., dispatch of Wednesday says: Several days ago a bill giving the old school of medicine, known as allopathy, absolute control of the examination board for admission to practice, passed the senate. A counter bill, in the interest of the homeopathic and eclectics, giving schools of medicine full representation in the examining board, was defeated in the house by a vote of 48 to 30. The vote was so close the allopaths are discouraged, and fear the senate bill will also be defeated, and it is understood that the three schools of medicine are holding a consultation with a view to compromise their differences. The bills have created intense feeling for and against.

CHILTON COUNTY

In the geographical center of Alabama. The Louisville and Nashville, the E. T. V. & Ga. and the Montgomery, Tuskaloosa and Memphis Railroads pass through the county, and the Coosa river is the boundary line on the east. The chief industries are farming and saw milling. Population 15,000.

Clanton, the county seat, is on the L. & N. R. R., 56 miles south of Birmingham and 40 north of Montgomery. Several large saw mills are located in the vicinity of the town.

We will produce an army of bargains, and an army of bargain seekers will come so characteristic of all our announcements. No piecemeal business in this!

A Wholesale Slaughter of Every Department.

We Will Have No Dull Trade.

Our business last fall was very large. We are too active to allow business to stagnate. So to prevent a stagnation we are compelled to dispose of our big stock of Winter Goods, not considering profits or cost of goods. We want to sell our heavy stock very much, so much so that the prices will be giving away prices.

OVER ALABAMA.

Various Things That are Happening Around Us.

Saturday night the store of John Ramagnano, at Jacksonville, was broken into, his safe drilled through and about $1,400 stolen. The work is that of an expert, and there is no clue as to who the parties are.

The Southern exposition will open at Montgomery October 28th and close November 11th. Capt. H. G. Bibb has been elected president. Preparations are being made to make the exposition the greatest fair ever held in Alabama.

Sunday night about 9 o'clock, two men entered the office of the Birmingham Railway and Supply Company, at Birmingham, sandbagged the clerk, John C. Matthews, tied his hands and feet and gagged him. They robbed the safe of $786, and made good their escape. The clerk gained consciousness in two hours. He thinks he was chloroformed. The robbers were white men.

The St. Louis, Paducah and Tennessee River Packet company and the Louisville, Paducah and Tennessee River Packet company have arranged to put on the light draught steamer, to ply between Riverton and Decatur, Ala., via the Mussel Shoals canal. This will connect their Chattanooga line of steamers with the lower Tennessee river trade, and will be the first practical through navigation of the upper Tennessee, although several boats have recently made the trip.

It is reported that the Chattahooga southern, the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia system, the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis road and the Louisville and Nashville will build a commodious union passenger depot in Gadsden where, it is said, they have secured the necessary ground. One of the roads, the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis, owners several acres near the business center of the city, and pressure will be brought to bear on the roads to build nearer the city.

A special from Florence says: Deputy United States Marshal Shoenfield returned a few days ago with Harvey Reynolds, who was arrested on the Alabama state line charged with operating a distillery and retailing it ilcit liquor. His bond was fixed at $500, which he was unable to raise, as he is already under $1,000 bond for a similar offence. His bondsmen have turned him over to the authorities. He is the worst moonshiner in that section. Some sensational developments are looked for, which will involve him, as he was a principal actor.

The projected Fort Payne and Eastern road, has already awakened great interest along the entire length of its proposed route. All through the section of the country that it will traverse there are great deposits of marble and immense forests of timber. A direct communication to the Tennessee river, where heavy material, such as pig iron, machinery coal and marble could be sent hundreds of miles by water, would insure for the new road a good local business within a year of its completion.

The Philadelphia Record seems to be watching Alabama affairs. It says: "Greatly to their astonishment, the capitalists who are building railroads in Alabama have discovered that the railroad committee in the legislature, which is largely composed of Alliance men, is not hostile to the railway corporations, but, on the contrary, has declined to report favorably a bill conferring mandatory powers upon the state railroad commissioner. The bill may be passed, of course, notwithstanding the recommendations of the committee, but there is little fear of such a reversal of the judgment of the committee."

Mr. C. M. Boulden, president of the Birmingham and Jones Valley Railroad company, has signed a contract with reliable parties to complete the road ready for the rolling stock from Birmingham to Avondale; work to begin at once and to be completed within ninety days. The rolling stock will be ordered so as to be on hand by that time, and the road will be pushed forward to completion throughout its entire length. And when completed will be one of the most profitable and popular roads entering Birmingham, as it passes through the most fertile and thickly populated portion of Jones Valley. At a meeting of the council of the town of Avondale Mr. Boulden was granted an extension of time to the 15th of May in which to complete his road in compliance with the above contract.

For the Third Time.

Fifty-two acres of Choctaw point have been condemned for the third time in the probate court, says the Mobile Register. This property was first condemned by the Anglo-Southern Construction company, the jury naming $5,500 as the price to be paid for it. The Anglo-Southern company failed to make the payment, and a few weeks ago the property was condemned by the Mobile, and Kansas City Railroad company for use as its terminal yard. Its value in the opinion of the jury, had in the mean time advanced to $8,000. Investigation proved that proper notice of this condemnation had not been given, and the proceeding would not hold. This discovery necessitated a new action, and the jury decided that the Mobile, Jackson and Kansas City Railroad company should pay $13,000 for it.

Oil in Lawrence.

Everybody is awaiting confirmation of the reports of oil in Lawrence county and is watching with interest the operations of the explorers and speculators. The Moulton Advertiser continues to believe in it and says: "The oil news is still encouraging, and every doubt has been removed. For the past three weeks it has been the all absorbing topic of conversation among the people of this valley, and no one ever grows weary in telling or listening to others tell about this marvelous industry. New companies are being organized everywhere to drill for oil. One will begin boring somewhere in the Landersville and Mount Hope territory as early as men and machinery can be gotten on the ground. Pennsylvania capital is interested in the enterprise, and will push the development with a vim. We learn that four engines will be put to work immediately in the Terry sen lement. We met an oil man in Moulton who informed us that such lands as we have are now selling in Pennsylvania for $1,500 per acre. He has been over our oil territory—has examined it closely and is convinced beyond a doubt that we have petroleum here of a very high grade. In fact, our county is now full of men prospecting for oil and other minerals. We do not wish to discourage any enterprise looking to the development of our mineral resources, but we want to caution our people about leasing or selling their lands. We are your friends and we want you to reap a full reward of all that comes out of the earth. Preparations are being made to bore another well at Hartsell, and a development company has also been organized at Florence."

CAPITOL NOTES.

The re-districting bill has been killed in the senate.

The house concurred in the senate resolution to authorize Safford Berney to have printed in his handbook of Alabama from the engraved plates, prepared for the geological survey, copies of the map.

The bill to make an appropriation for defraying the expenses of the annual encampment of the state troops has passed the house. As amended and passed, it appropriates $13,500 a year for the years 1891 and 1892, and it was disposed of without discussion.

The house bill, to create a new county of portions of Clarke, Maringo and Wilcox counties, said new county to be called the county of Herndon, has been passed by the house on a vote of 56 yeas to 23 nays, slightly more than the two-thirds majority required under the constitution.

The following house bills have been passed: A bill to establish and mark the boundary line between Cherokee county, Alabama, and Polk county, Georgia, and appropriating $250 for that purpose. To amend the code so as to more effectually prevent lotteries in this state. It prohibits any lottery or device of the like kind, or any gift enterprise, or any scheme in the nature of a lottery or gift enterprise. A bill to provide for the redemption of lands by persons whose lands have been sold for state taxes.

The house has passed, without discussion and without opposition, Mr. Webb's bill for the relief of needy confederate soldiers and sailors, residents of Alabama, who from wounds or other cause are now unable to earn a livelihood, and for the widows of such as were killed in said war, and have not since married. The bill imposes a special tax of ½ mill, and is to run for six years. Special provision in the total of $1,200 a year is made for the totally blind, of whom it is believed there are but ten or twelve in the state. For veterans suffering under other disabilities provision is made after the manner of previous acts of this nature. The bill will raise about $125,000 a year.

THE EDITION SEIZED

For Alleged Publication of a Lottery Advertisement.

A Knoxville, Tenn., dispatch says: A large portion of the mail edition of the Morning Journal was seized by the postmaster at that place Friday for an alleged violation of the lottery laws. The alleged offense was the publication of a reading advertisement of the scheme of a local lottery firm to send a man or woman to Europe free of all charge. With every purchase of goods a ticket was to be given, so the advertisement read, and there it stopped. It is understood that the matter will be carried up for decision, as the publishers assert that there was no violation of any law, state or national.

ALLIANCE NOTES.

NEWS OF THE ORDER FROM ALL SECTIONS.

Items of Interest to Alliancemen Everywhere.

The state secretary's books show that the first Alliance in Georgia was the Antioch Alliance in Troup county, organized March 31st, 1887, and that Mrs. Lord, of Antioch, was the first lady in Georgia to join the order.

***

The Farmers' Alliance warehouse in Athens, Ga., is building up a fine business. Hon. James M. Smith, of Oglethorpe, sent it one shipment of 350 bales, and will supplement it with 1,060 more. Col. Smith is the kind of men who build up Alliance institutions.

***

The Industrial Advocate (Kansas) says it would like to see the work of the Alliance take a little more of an agricultural turn; that it would be a good plan to have meetings of neighborhood Alliances with subjects of discussion already outlined, and bring out all there is in it that would be of benefit to the farming class.

***

The Spalding County Alliance met at Griffin, Ga., a few days ago. The manager of the Alliance warehouse made a report which was highly encouraging. The report showed that 13,307 bales of cotton had been weighed, and that there was a nice little purse, aggregating nearly $5,000, in bank, which will go back to patrons in the way of dividends in a few weeks.

***

One hundred million of the government credit to be loaned to a syndicate to dig a ditch in Nicaragua is constitutional with John Sherman; but to loan the farmer credit on his wheat, oats and other crops that go to keep the human family alive is unconstitutional. There is a great deal of difference between tweedle-dee and tweedle-dum.—National Citizens' Alliance.

"IN UNITY THERE IS STRENGTH."

The Alliance organization is a protest against the economic, financial and political delusions of the times. The farmers have struggled against these wrongs and influences year after year, only to wear themselves out with their mortgages, cyclones and floods; and yet they have fed 65,000,000 of people with the products of their work. The question with them is, "Shall we submit to those conditions any longer, or shall we rise up and assert our rights and obtain justice and fair play?" To the latter they have returned an affirmative answer. Upon this hypothesis they are now working, believing that "in union there is strength." Following out this idea, they propose to unite with the independent party, the people's party by its representatives, the late federal and confederate soldiers by their representatives, the Farmers' Alliance, the Farmers' Mutual Benefit Association, the Citizens' Alliance, the Knights of Labor, the Colored Farmers' Alliance, and all other industrial organizations that support the principles of the St. Louis agreement of December, 1889.

FOR THE TWITTY BILL.

The following resolutions were passed a few days ago by the Bethlehem, Ga., Alliance:

Whereas, There is a bill before the general assembly of Georgia known as the Twitty bill; and,

Whereas, We understand said bill has been postponed until the adjourned session of the said body for the purpose of knowing the wish of the people in regard to the passage of the same; and,

Whereas, We believe said bill to be just and right; therefore be it

Resolved, 1. That we endorse the same, and recommend that it be amended so as to nullify the following clauses often found in notes given for guano, etc., to wit: "And no payment is to be allowed on this note unless it is entered on the note and signed by the maker." And again: "We agree to hold all crops growing upon the land fertilized with this fertilizer in trust for the said A. B. & Co. until this note is fully paid."

2. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the author of the said bill, and that they be published.

3. That we ask other citizens throughout the State to give their opinion in regard to said matter.

The Industrial World (Spokane Falls, Wash.) says: "There has never been a dissenting State Alliance on the sub-treasury bill, and out of a total vote of thirty-six States at the last national meeting only four votes were cast against it. We think that the sub-treasury will not only smash the democratic party but the republican also. These old parties are backed by the money kings of Wall street, and they will use this party machinery to ignore and kill this bill. The party politicians flocked to the Ocala meeting to defeat this bill, but failed. These same men have flocked to the different State Alliances for the same purpose, but have everywhere failed. The fight is on. All of the subsidized daily papers are, without exception, united in discouraging the discussion and consideration of this bill. The politicians are everywhere fighting it, as there is a deadly fear in their minds that it will force itself to the front and smash them and their parties. Alliancemen and mechanics also, should force this bill to the front, and never lose, an opportunity to put in a good word for it and the land loan bill. It will be to the people like a man who is pulled out of a mud pond and dressed in a new suit of clothes. They are the beginning of a series of much needed reforms."

A SPLENDID SCHEME.

The Alliance of Hart county, Ga., is not troubling itself about local or national politics, but has gone to work in earnest and in a business way, to benefit its membership. Last year nearly every sub-Alliance in the county borrowed money enough to run its membership for cash, basing the estimate on an economical administration of each man's family government. The money was obtained in the following manner: Five or six of the best men in each sub-Alliance would make a note for enough money for all. The cash was then distributed to each member according to his estimated needs. When the crop was gathered the money was brought in by each man in accordance with the talents he had received, and turned over to the makers of the bank note, who in turn paid off the note in bank. In this way men who were entirely unable to get money from the bank, got money and paid the merchant cash for his meat and corn. This arrangement, instead of damaging, helps the local merchant. He gets a fair profit and gets the money as he sells the goods, and can afford to sell for shorter profits because he can use his cash several times the same season. The most of the guano was bought on joint note in the same way and at very short profits to the dealer. The scheme altogether is a commendable one, and its general adoption would be a great benefit to sub-Alliances.

DANGER TO THE ALLIANCE.

As soon as the Alliance approaches the development of strength which indicates possibility of its principles becoming dominate in the government, the tremendous power of wealth and political influence will be exerted to modify the policy of its leaders. When a man becomes prominent and powerful by virtue of the votes back of him, he is brought face to face with new necessities.

The power to talk and reason now becomes the power to act. The courage to talk and write of vast reforms for the welfare of humanity, and the courage to act in the same line are two wholly distinct developments in human nature.

It is like the difference between urging the troops to death and destruction behind the breastworks—and leading them in the charge after the breastworks have been cleared.

Few men have the power within them to face the to-dayism of thirty-one billion dollars of capital, with all that it implies! Few men, indeed, in a single state have the name heroism to stand before the polished and cultured princelings of an old civilization, and proclaim the truths involved at the hearthstone of a desolate home.

Here is the danger. We have reached it. The Alliance is now a power, and already we find men who have posed as the leaders of revolution, making their peace with the money power. The heroism of the platform becomes the conservatism of the lobby.

The hour demands men! It demands iron wills and genuine courage. It demands the spirit of the Master—men who in statecraft can pierce the present clouds into the future beyond—men who can make pathways as well as tread those already beaten.

The hour of trial comes. Watch ye who wavers—who trenches—who falters and prepare to search anew for those who are equal to the wondrous times which dawn upon us.—The Great West.

MAYOR WORD'S VERSION

Regarding His Attack on Rev. Sam Jones.

Mayor J. J. Word, of Palestine, Texas, published a card Friday, in which he says the trouble between Sam Jones and himself was on account of personal matters, and not because the evangelist criticised his official actions. The mayor says: "While Mr. Jones was here he took it upon himself to refer in the most insulting language to my private life and habits before my wife and children; hence my attack upon him. As for my official conduct, that is open to the scrutiny of right-minded men."

Another dispatch of Wednesday says: The only works in the Connellsville region in active operation are those of W. J. Rainey, a non-union operator. The employes are non-union men, and have expressed a desire to continue at the old wages, and their employer has expressed himself as willing to protect them against any bulldozing on the part of the strikers. So forty detectives and a number of deputies have been distributed at the workdocks, owing to the strike of the dock laborers, is becoming critical. Open acts of violence are only prevented by the presence about the docks of a large force of police. The union dock laborers and stevedores, are charged with having broken their agreements with the companies.

THE TRADES UNIONS

To Demand the Work on the World's Fair Buildings.

The organized labor of Chicago hotly asserted itself Sunday regarding the world's fair. It was a regular meeting of the trade and labor assembly body, said to represent 47,000 workmen, and one of whose members was given a seat in the world's fair directory in recognition of $300,000 subscribed by workingmen to the guarantee fund of the fair. James O'Connell, president of the assembly, offered the following:

Whereas, The present directory of said exposition indicate their intention of refusing to recognize union labor, but threaten to emply indiscriminately non-union labor, thereby flooding the labor market of Chicago with the ultimate design of destroying the trades unions; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, as union men, protest against this treacherous action of the directors of the World's Columbian exposition, and unless immediate action is taken by that body to redeem their implied pledges given in regard to union labor, we will deem it our duty to oppose in every way any further legislation, either municipal, state or national, in favor of said World's Columbian exposition, and we hereby recommend all workingmen who have subscribed for said stock to decline to pay any further assessments until proper assurances are given by the directors that the said implied pledges will be kept; and be it further

Resolved, That unless satisfactory assurances are given by the directors that their indicated action will be changed, we shall deem it our duty to ask the co-operation of every body of organized labor throughout the country to assist us in making our protest emphatic.

The resolution was carried without opposition. The men will go before the world's fair direntory with the above resolution and ask further that eight hours be made a day's in the constitution of the world's fair buildings.

FRIDAY'S BLAZES.

Destructive Fires at Various Points.

Friday morning fire was discovered in the Willingham building, Macon, Ga. The firemen promptly responded and by hard work prevented a serious conflagration. Conservative judges place the loss at about $20,000, covered by insurance. The fire originated in the second story of the building in the rooms occupied by the Bradycrotine Company as a factory and packing department. It is thought to have been caused by rats.

CAR SHOPS DESTROYED.

A fire in the Pullman car shops at St. Louis, destroyed the shops and their contents, including eleven cars, together with a number of small dwelling houses near by. The aggregate loss is estimated at $250,000, partly insured. About 400 men are thrown out of work as a result of the fire. The burned property was owned by George M. Pullman, of Chicago.

NUT AND BOLT FACTORY BURNED.

The nut and bolt works of J. Henry Sternberg & Son, at Pittsburg, Pa., were destroyed by fire Friday. Loss $275,000; insurance probably two-thirds.

A NORFOLK BLAZE.

At Norfolk, Va., fire destroyed a building on Hill street, until recently occupied as a peanut factory, but at this time empty except for a small amount of patent fence. During the late war the building was occupied by northern troops as a bakery. The loss is about $5,000; fully insured.

SODA WORKS DESTROYED.

Church & Co.'s soda works, in Grand Point, went burned early Friday. Loss, $300,000. The night force of 125 men were at work when the fire occurred but escaped without difficulty.

SOUTHERN BRIEFS

DAILY OCCURRENCES IN THE SUNNY SOUTHLAND

Curtailed into Interesting and Newsy Paragraphs.

Judge Wilson Lewis, of Pineville, Ky., was killed Thursday by his son, with whom he was quarreling.

The railway commission bill, which has attracted a great deal of attention, was passed by the North Carolina legislature Tuesday.

A dispatch of Tuesday from Montgomery says: The state senate passed a bill appropriating $30,000 to represent Alabama at the world's fair.

Hon. A. H. H. Stuart, secretary of the interior in Fillmore's cabinet and a member of the Peabody educational board, is critically ill in Staunton, Va.

The California house of representatives, on Tuesday, passed a bill appropriating $300,000 for California's exhibition at the world's fair, by a vote of 48 to 22.

A joint resolution has been passed by the California legislature asking congress for laws providing for a government tax, loaning money on farming lands.

At Campbellsburg, Ky., Tuesday, the farmers' union passed resolutions denouncing the Louisville tobacco exchange and agreeing to support Lexington or Cincinnati in the future as a tobacco market.

A Birmingham dispatch of Tuesday says: Warrior river, at Tuscaloose, is fifty-five feet above low water mark and rising. The Alabama river is out of its banks and destroying property below Montgomery.

A Macon, Ga., dispatch of Tuesday says: The melon and fruit growers and shippers have organized the Macon Produce Exchange, with a capital stock of $10,000. They propose to handle 1,000 cars of melons and other fruits, also all kinds of eastern and western fruits and produce.

A Chattanooga dispatch of Thursday says: Judge Warder's physicians declare him insane and say his life is in great danger. His hand, which was wounded in the fight, has quit healing, and may have to be amputated. His condition is very critical. His mind is undoubtedly dethroned.

Fire broke out in one section of Phillip's & Parish's cotton warehouse, at Selma, Ala., Thursday afternoon. Eight hundred bales of cotton were burned. Two negroes, suspected to have set the building on fire, were arrested and committed to jail. All the cotton was covered by insurance.

A case of interest to hotel men everywhere, involving, as it does, the extent of their liability for damages in cases of accident to guests was tried at Montgomery, Wednesday. In July, 1889, W. A. Thomas, a guest of the Windsor hotel, of which D. P. West is proprietor, fell in a hallway, alleged to be poorly lighted, breaking both arms. The plaintiff sued West for $10,000 damages. The jury, after being out forty-eight hours, rendered a verdict awarding the plaintiff $2,000. The case will be appealed.

The trustees of the state university met at Raleigh Wednesday; Governor Fowle presiding. Dr. K. P. Battle tendered his resignation as president of the university, a position he had ably filled since the reorganization of the institution in 1875. The resignation was accepted after remarks upon his valuable services had been made by several trustees, and a committee was directed to prepare suitable resolutions regarding his retirement from control of the university. He was elected professor of history to fill the chair recently created.

A Montgomery, Ala., dispatch of Wednesday says: Several days ago a bill giving the old school of medicine, known as allopaths, absolute control of the examination board for admission to practice, passed the senate. A counter bill, in the interest of the homeopaths and eclectics, giving schools of medicine full representation in the examining board, was defeated in the house by a vote of 48 to 39. The vote was so close the allopaths are discouraged, and fear the senate bill will also be defeated, and it is understood that the three schools of medicine are holding a consultation with a view to compromise their differences. The bills have created intense feeling in the legislature.

Next year Congressman W. H. Forney, now representing the seventh district, will come down into the fourth district to see us all.

Chilton is in the fourth Congressional district by the redistricting act, the district being composed of Dallas, Chilton, Shelby, Talladega, Calhoun and Cleburne. "All's well that ends well."

"The American Present" is the title of a literary publication to be established at Sheffield, Ala., under the auspices of the Southern Literary Association, with Col. Tom Cannon as managing editor.

The Farmers' Alliance people having fixed up things on land to their general satisfaction, have now turned their attention to the shipping interest. What they do not know about ships they can guess at, and this is about the way the shipping interests of this country have been managed anyhow.—N. Y. World.

An old story begins thus: "There was once an idiot who persuaded himself that he was the wisest man in the world." Judging by the signs, this idiot has many descendants living in various parts of Georgia.—Rome Tribune.

One to read the proceedings of our legislature would at once conclude that the poor man has a few descendants scattered over Alabama.—Moulton Adv.

The Legislature Adjourned.

There will be few to regret this announcement. There is always a degree of uncertainty and doubt pervading the country when law makers are promulgating improvements upon existing conditions, caused mainly by the apprehension that the changes advocated may not be effectual in bringing about the desired improvement.

Our legislators have had a fine opportunity for "posing" even when no practical good may have been accomplished.

The body as a whole has given us some very wise and desirable laws. Some of the most important are a new road law, and the establishing of a reformatory for boys. Both of which measures emanated from the able Senator from Bibb and Tuskaloosa. Another very important law coming from him was the increased appropriation for our State geological survey. The amount appropriated is $7,500. Some of the best speeches made in the lower house were on this measure. The bill to place probate judges on salaries, known as the Adams' bill, was shelved by being referred back to the committee. The bill opposing the running of freight trains on Sunday was defeated by Mr. Adams' motion to "indefinitely postpone." Mr. Adams being a minister his action on this bill greatly astonished some, but it did not astonish those who reflect that a politician can never be counted upon even if he is a preacher.

We have no fault to find with the Legislature. The good bills went through and the bad bills were killed in spite of the wiles of politicians and demagogues, who are generally to be found in plenty both in the Legislature and the lobby.

The laws of importance which were passed will be published in the VIEW either in full or by synopsis.

The Nine Congressional Districts.

During its last days the Legislature passed the bill redistricting the State. Alabama by the late census having gained another member of Congress, now has nine districts composed as follows:

1. Marengo, Choctaw, Clarke, Monroe, Washington and Mobile.
2. Montgomery, Pike, Crenshaw, Covington, Butler, Conecuh, Escambia, Baldwin and Wilcox.
3. Lee, Russell, Bullock, Barbour, Dale, Henry, Coffee and Geneva.
4. Dallas, Chilton, Shelby, Talladega, Calhoun and Cleburne.
5. Lowndes, Autauga, Tallapoosa, Elmore, Macon, Coosa, Chambers, Randolph and Clay.
6. Sumpter, Pickens, Greene, Tuskaloosa, Lamar, Fayette, Marion and Walker.
7. DeKalb, Marshall, Etowah, Cullman, St. Clair, Winston, Cherokee and Franklin.
8. Jackson, Madison, Limestone, Morgan, Lauderdale, Lawrence and Colbert.
9. Jefferson, Bibb, Hale, Perry and Blount.

Legislative.

Senator Hargrove's reformatory bill provides that convict inspectors, with the approval of the Governor shall purchase a farm in some healthy portion of the State and on it erect the necessary buildings. A superintendent will be placed in control of it with a salary of $1,200, and $8 a month for each inmate.

The temperance bill was indefinitely postponed by the house and did not become a law. This was the bill prohibiting the sale of liquor outside of incorporated towns. It should have passed. It was violently opposed by several members "because it would bring another question into local politics by becoming a law." It will probably be demonstrated next year that the neglect to pass the bill has kept "another question" in politics instead of settling the matter as might have been done. The next Legislature will have the same question to dispose of.

The bill redistricting the State passed.

The following is a brief statement of the new school law as to the duty of Superintendents: The bill provides that hereafter it shall be the duty of the Superintendents of Education to apportion the school fund to the various school districts without regard to race; county superintendents shall appoint three trustees, who shall be freeholders, and householders, for each township; the county superintendent of education as soon as he receives his county's portion of school funds shall forthwith notify the trustees of each township or school of the amount appropriated for township or district; township trustees shall apportion to each school such an amount of school fund as they deem just and equitable, and they shall determin the number of and what children shall be transferred, and shall fix the pay for such transferred children as they think proper.

McKee on Cleveland.

Uniontown Herald: Col. Robt. McKee sums the matter up in a nutshell in the Montgomery Journal when he says that if the present Congress settles the silver matter, Cleveland is the strongest presidential candidate, but if the silver question is not settled and is to be one of the next issues then to nominate Cleveland would mean summary defeat. The fiat of the people has gone forth for more and cheaper money and unless the opinion of certain great men change on this question, in the language of our own Morgan, "the Democratic party will have to dispense with them."

Cotton.

It is said that the farmers of South Georgia are buying up all the cotton they can get. They say that they can buy it now cheaper than they can raise it. The cotton will be held until next fall.

There is a good deal of wisdom embodied in the above statement, and the farmers of Dallas county will do well to take the same view of the matter. It is folly to continue to grow heavy crops of cotton to be sold for less than the cost of production. Better do without a new suit of clothes or a new bonnet or cloak where it takes a half bale of cotton to pay for it.—Alabama Mirror.

A Wise Farmer.

To be a perfect farmer, a man should combine reading, observation and practice. A man may work in the fields all his life and be a poor farmer. We should gain knowledge by reading and study, and also by what we see around us, and then this knowledge must be put into practice. Our views, if they will not stand the tests of actual experiments, are worthless. All sound theory is based upon practice, and all sensible practice is the result of well grounded information, whether learned by our own observation or from the experience of others. That theory which will not stand the test of experience is worthless, and that practice that is not based upon sound theory is equally worthless.—Ex.

We have come to the conclusion that the county-seat papers are the best. If a man reads at all, he is pretty likely to read his county paper for the local and legal news. If he is a man who reads the large dailies he will be sure to want the country paper to see what his neighbors are doing.—Dudley E. Jones.

The man who observed that the large rivers generally happened to run close to the large cities has now discovered that the firms that do the largest amount of business generally happen to have the largest advertisements in the papers.—Dansville (N. Y.) Breeze.

Detectives at Stanton.

Somewhat of a sensation was created at Stanton, nine miles south of this place, this morning by several white men getting off the train there, who it was learned, were detectives. The story is as follows: For some months past there has been a white man by the name of Brennon peddling dry goods in this and adjoining sections with headquarters at Dixie. Last December Brennon was located in a neighborhood nine miles east of Marion, Perry county, and while there accompanied one of the neighborhood girls to church and it seems that a young man by the name of Fort became very much incensed at it, and he, with his brother, made an assault on Brennon at the church, insulting him grossly. Whereupon a difficulty occurred, resulting in Brennon giving the Fort brothers a good thrashing. Brennon was arrested, stood his trial, and came back to Dixie and told some friends about his trouble. Brennon went back to the same neighborhood on the 6th of January, leaving his trunk and some packages of goods at Dixie, saying he would be back the next week, but has never come, nor has he ever been heard from since.

This morning the party of men, consisting of two detectives and Brennon's brother, all from Birmingham, revealed the fact that foul play was suspected. Brennon No. 2 called at the postoffice for his brother's mail, and found, among other letters, one from the young lady he escorted to church, telling him not to come back there again, that there was a plot on foot to kill him if he did.

Brennon had left Dixie before the letter came, and the 'supposition' is did go back and was killed.

Brennon No. 2, together with the two detectives, hired a wagon and have gone over there to-day to investigate matters. W.

LATER.—Brennon has been found at a farmer's house sick. W.

Providence Points.

Mr. William Scarber was buried at Poplar Springs last Sunday at 3 o'clock. He leaves a wife and children to mourn his loss, but they should be reconciled from the fact that deceased was a man of christian character, and esteemed by all his neighbors, who extend a hearty sympathy to the bereaved family.

Married, at the residence of the bride's father, last Sunday 9 o'clock a. m., Mr. John Oaks and Miss Mary Ann Wyatt. They have launched their ship to battle against the waves of the world but as they have a host of friends it is hoped that they will succeed well and live a long and happy life.

La grippe is leaving our town but as it took its flight it caught Mr. J. R. Thomas by the back of the neck and gripped him about two days before it let go.

Jail Escape.

Tuesday afternoon, Cannon, the rapist, made his escape from the county jail. When young John Hayes, son of Sheriff Hayes, went into the jail to see that the prisoners were safe in their cells for the night, Cannon had filed his way out of his cage and was in the hall way and as the jail door was opened, he made a break for liberty. Hayes fired five shots from a revolver at the fleeing prisoner. At the first shot Hayes says the prisoner fell flat on his face. But he got on his feet again and after several other falls he succeeded in reaching the swamp and avoiding a crowd of pursuers who were close on his heels.

Sheriff Hayes telegraphed for blood hounds to continue the pursuit, and the chase was kept up until midnight without success.

Cannon was convicted at the Fall term of the circuit court of rape upon a little white girl. He was sentenced to imprisonment for life. His case having been taken to the Supreme Court, he was in jail awaiting the decision of that court.

The Republicans who voted to substitute the Apportionment instead of the Force Bill for consideration were Messrs. Cameron, Teller, Wolcott, Washburn, Ingalls, Jones, Stanford and Stewart. That means the death of the infamous measure.

Fire Insurance.

I take this method of returning thanks to those citizens of Clanton and vicinity who have insured through my agency. Being pressed with other duties I have not engaged in soliciting, and as this patronage has come from about every business man in Clanton and from a number at other points, voluntarily, it is all the more appreciated. Respectfully,

The Equitable Life Assurance Society

OF THE UNITED STATES.

In selecting a company in which to insure, why not take the best instead of being persuaded by the eloquence of representatives of weaker companies to take what is less advantageous? It is the company, not the agent, with whom the assured must deal after the policy is once taken. It is the company, not the agent that pays the dividends and meets claims when they mature. It costs no more to assure in the best and strongest company than any other established on a sound business basis; therefore, we again ask, WHY NOT TAKE THE BEST?

OVER THE COUNTY.

Neighborhood News Gathered by Our Correspondents.

Dixie Dots.

Our school near Dixie closed Friday by which our attention was attracted for a few hours. It was conducted by our teacher, Miss Lafarice Deadwilder. We were sorry to give her up, but we are glad to say we have secured her services for our next school.

Jemison Locals.

Mr. J. R. Hill has sold out his mercantile interest at Columbiana, and will move back to Jemison at an early day. We are glad to welcome him back among us, as he is a good citizen.

Prof. Crump has brought his family to Jemison, and they are boarding at Dr. Givhan's.

Mr. Garner our new depot agent has removed his family here from Blount county.

Rev. A. E. Burns failed to go to the Baptist Congress, which convened at Evergreen, owing to sickness in his family.

Mr. J. A. Butler has bought the Latham house and lot.

We regret to hear of the death of Mrs. L. L. Killingsworth, which occurred at home Monday last from congestion of the lungs, and tender our sympathies to the bereaved husband and orphan children.

Miss Sadie Harrell, of Calera, has been visiting Miss Minnie Wells.

X. Y. Z.

Verbena Verbiage.

The farmers have planted very few oats yet.

It has rained so much the roads have become almost impassible.

The farmers should plant more corn and less cotton. The price of cotton is very low now and still falling. If we make a big cotton crop this fall, cotton won't be worth picking. We should raise more hogs and make our meat at home. I wish there were more farmers like Mr. John W. Moody, he has killed and put up twenty-seven hundred pounds of meat this winter.

Mr. Hugh Spratlin, of the Capital City, and Mr. William Wadsworth, of Wadsworth's Station, will make their future home here. We gladly welcome such energetic and enterprising young men, and we wish them much success in their new enterprise.

The beautiful daughter of Judge A. J. Brooks has returned from school.

Hon. G. A. Northington had the boss cabbage. It weighed fourteen pounds. Hon. Henry D. Clayton, of Barbour, gave it to him.

Mr. William Goodson has moved to Verbena.

Our genial young friend, Frank Baldwin, Esq., who is taking a law course at the University of Alabama, paid his father a visit this week.

There was a dance at the "Clifton" on the night of the 10th. Those who attended report a splendid time.

Stanton Notes.

Last week a negro by the name of Gabe Allen was brutally murdered by another negro whose name could not be learned. Gabe was shot in the neck with a load of bird shot while eating his supper, and died almost instantly.

Mr. Richard Coe was very badly frightened a few nights ago by what he supposed was a very mad bull, but on investigation found to his surprise that the unearthly howling was made by a young man training his voice for the Methodist prayer-meeting.

Everybody in this place has had a siege of the "grippe," especially Mr. J. F. Pyner who says he had the worst case ever known. Last Friday a week ago he began to sweat with it. Saturday noon following he removed his clothing, wrung them out and hung them to the fire where he says they have been hanging since, but still continue wet. He is keeping up a hot fire around them, and says he is going to dry them if it takes until next August to do it.

The young ladies of Stanton have recently formed a society, which they call the "Plant System." What it is we have been unable to find out.

Mr. Henry Fisher has returned after an absence of a few days and says: "D—n the pension business."

Miss Dykes, of Uniontown, is visiting Mrs. W. F. Powers of this place.

The creeks and branches have been on a considerable boom in this neighborhood for the past few days, and the fences in their way have bowed in humble submission to the cruel waves.

We have information that the last Jemison package of papers mailed from this office did not reach its destination on time. If our Jemison friends will be patient they may get the package yet. We are frequently receiving the daily papers from Birmingham and Montgomery after they are a week old. The Southern general route agent writes us that he has his eye on this line of road and will correct the trouble as soon as he can "spot" the man.

A THRILLING EXPERIENCE.

Remarkable Statement of Personal Endurance and Providential Escape.

The following story—which is attracting wide attention from the press—is so remarkable that we cannot excuse ourselves if we do not lay it before our readers, entire.

To the Editor Rochester (N. Y.) Democrat:

SIR—On the first day of June, 1881, I lay at my residence in this city surrounded by my friends and waiting for death. Heaven only knows the agony I then endured, for words can never describe it. And yet, if a few years previous any one had told me that I was to be brought so low, and by so terrible a disease, I should have scoffed at the idea. I had always been uncommonly strong and healthy, and weighed over 200 pounds and hardly knew, in my own experience, what pain or sickness were. Very many people who will read this statement realize at times that they are unusually tired and cannot account for it. They feel dull pains in various parts of the body and do not understand why. Or they are exceedingly hungry one day and entirely without appetite the next. This was just the way I felt when the relentless malady which had fastened itself upon me first began. Still I thought nothing of it, that probably I had taken a cold which would soon pass away. Shortly after this I noticed a heavy, and at times neuralgic, pain in one side of my head, but as it would come one day and be gone the next, I paid little attention to it. Then my stomach would get out of order and my food often failed to digest, causing at times great inconvenience. Yet, even as a physician, I did not think that these things meant anything serious. I fancied I was suffering from malaria and doctored myself accordingly. But I got no better. I next noticed a peculiar color and odor about the fluids I was passing—also that there were large quantities one day and very little the next, and that a persistent froth and scum appeared on the surface, and a sediment settled. And yet I did not realise my danger, for, indeed, seeing these symptoms continually, I finally became accustomed to them, and my suspicion was wholly disarmed by the fact that I had no pain in the affected organs or in their vicinity. Why I should have been so blind I cannot understand.

I consulted the best medical skill in the land. I visited all the famed mineral springs in America and traveled from Maine to California. Still I grew worse. No two physicians agreed as to my malady. One said I was troubled with spinal irritation; another, dyspepsia; another, heart disease; another, general debility; another, congestion of the base of the brain; and so on through a long list of common diseases, the symptoms of many of which I really had. In this way several years passed, during which time I was steadily growing worse. My condition had really become pitiable. The slight symptoms I had at first experienced were developed into terrible and constant disorders. My weight had been reduced from 207 to 130 pounds. My life was a burden to myself and friends. I could retain no food on my stomach, and I lived wholly by injections. I was a living mass of pain. My pulse was uncontrolable. In my agony I frequently fell to the floor and clutched the carpet, and prayed for death. Morphine had little or no effect in deadening the pain. For six days and nights I had the death-premonitory hiccoughs constantly. My water was filled with tube-casts and albumen. I was struggling with Bright's disease of the kidneys in its last stages!

While suffering thus I received a call from my pastor, the Rev. Dr. Foote, at that time rector of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, of this city. I felt that it was our last interview, but in the course of conversation Dr. Foote detailed to me the many remarkable cures of cases like my own which had come under his observation. As a practicing physician and a graduate of the schools, I derided the idea of any medicine outside the regular channels being in the least beneficial. So solicitious, however, was Dr. Foote, that I finally promised I would waive my prejudice. I began its use on the first day of June, 1881, and took it according to directions. At first it sickened me; but this I thought was a good sign for me in my debilitated condition. I continued to take it; the sickening sensation departed and I was finally able to retain food upon my stomach. In a few days I noticed a decided change for the better, as also did my wife and friends. My hiccoughs ceased and I experienced less pain than formerly. I was so rejoiced at this improved condition that, upon what I had believed but a few days before was my dying bed, I vowed in the presence of my family and friends, should I recover, I would both publicly and privately make know this remedy for the good of humanity, wherever and whenever I had an opportunity, and this letter is in fulfillment of that vow. My improvement was constant from that time, and in less than three months I had gained twenty-six pounds in flesh, became entirely free from pain and I believe I owe my life and present condition wholly to Warner's Safe Cure, the remedy which I used.

Since my recovery I have thoroughly reinvestigated the subject of kidney difficulties and Bright's disease, and the truths developed are astounding. I therefore state, deliberately, and as a physician, that I believe more than one-half the deaths which occur in America are caused by Bright's disease of the kidneys. This may sound like a rash statement, but I am prepared to fully verify it. Bright's disease has no distinctive features of its own (indeed, it often develops without any pain whatever in the kidneys or their vicinity), but has the symptoms of nearly every other common complaint. Hundreds of people die daily, whose burials are authorized by a physician's certificate as occurring from "Heart Disease," "Apoplexy," "Paralysis," Spinal Complaint," "Rheumatism," "Pneumonia," and other common complaints, when in reality it is from Bright disease of the kidneys. Few physicians, and fewer people, realize the extent of this disease or its dangerous and insidious nature. It steals into the system like a thief, manifests its presence if at all by the commonest symptoms and fastens itself in the constitution before the victim is aware of it. It is nearly as hereditary as consumption, quite as common and fully as fatal. Entire families, inheriting it from their ancestors, have died, and yet none of the number knew or realized the mysterious power which was removing them. Instead of common symptoms it often shows none whatever, but brings death suddenly, from convulsions, apoplexy or heart disease. As one who has suffered, and knows by its bitter experience what he says, I implore everyone who reads these words not to neglect the slightest symptoms of kidney difficulty. No one can afford to hazard such chances.

I make the foregoing statements based upon facts which I can substantiate to the letter. The welfare of those who may possibly be sufferers such as I was, is an ample inducement for me to take the step I have, and if I can successfully warn others from the dangerous path in which I once walked, I am willing to endure all professional and personal consequences

A New Departure in the South.

Mr. A. K. Hawkes, the Opticien, as widely known as the proprietor of Hawkes' Crystallized Lenses, has lately added to his business the manufacture of all kinds of eye glass and spectacle lenses. This factory is run by electric motor power, and is the first one thus operated in the South. On account of the rapid increase of the already immense business of this house, Mr. Hawkes found it necessary to start this factory, and is now prepared to fill all oculists' prescriptions at short notice. The factory is at 19 Decatur St. and the salesroom and wholesale department at 12 Whitehall Street, Atlanta, Ga.

The Longest Day.

It is quite important when speaking of the longest day in the year, to say what part of the world we are speaking about, as will be seen by reading the following list, which tells the length of the longest day in several places. How unfortunate are children of Torneo, Finland, where Christmas day is less than three hours in length!

At Stockholm, Sweden, it is 18½ hours in length.

At Spitzberken the longest day is 3½ months.

At London, England, and Bremen, Prussia, the longest day has 16½ hours.

At Hamburg, in Germany, and Danzig, in Prussia, the longest day has 17 hours.

At Wardbury, Norway, the longest day lasts from May 21 to July 22, without interruption.

At St. Petersburg, Russia, and Tobolsk, Siberia, the longest day is 19 hours, and the shortest, 5 hours.

At Torneo, Finland, June 21 brings a day nearly 22 hours long, and Christmas one less than three hours in length.

At New York the longest day is about 15 hours, and at Montreal, Canada, it is 16.—Selected.

A Valuable Dog.

Lawyer—"The trouble began over the ownership of a valuable coon dog. The litigation has been going on for about six years and has cost the contestants nearly $20,000 so far."

Preyer—"Who will win the dog eventually, do you think?"

Make Glad Hearts That are Sad.

The youth of both sexes that find themselves in a state of ill health at that interesting period when they reach manhood and womanhood, should not let themselves despond. Away with gloomy melancholy! Life is before you, and with proper treatment and care perfect health will be your portion. A perfect man! A perfect woman! The noblest work of God! Keep clear of quack doctors and their pernicious medical literature. They seek to rob you of your purse and to gain this end would frighten the very life out of you. All you need at this time of life is an occasional use of that excellent strengthening medicine invented by that eminent physician Dr. John Bull, of Louisville, Ky., called Dr. John Bull's Sarsaparilla. It is a complete regulator of every organic function, giving health and power to every part and assuring perfect self control. How glad hearts that are sad will be when they know this.

A trite saying this: "Hope in adversity and fear in prosperity."

For Dyspepsia, Indigestion and Stomach disorders, use Brown's Iron Bitters. The Best Tonic, it rebuilds the system, cleans the Blood and strengthens the muscles. A splendid tonic for weak and debilitated persons.

No one doubts that Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy really cures Catarrh, whether the disease be recent or of long standing, because the makers of it clinch their faith in it with a $500 guarantee, which isn't a mere newspaper guarantee, but "on call" in a moment.

That moment is when you prove that its makers can't cure you.

The reason for their faith is this:

Dr. Sage's remedy has proved itself the right cure for ninety-nine out of one hundred cases of Catarrh in the Head, and the World's Dispensary Medical Association can afford to take the risk of your being the one hundredth.

The only question is—are you willing to make the test, if the makers are willing to take the risk?

If so, the rest is easy. You pay your druggist 50 cents and the trial begins.

If you're wanting the $500 you'll get something better—a cure!

SENATE.

In the senate, Tuesday, the house bill to establish a custom district of Tennessee, with a substitute constituting Nashville, Tenn., a port of delivery, was taken up and passed. A conference was asked, and Messrs. Dolph, Washburn and Kenna were appointed conferees on the part of the senate. The naval appropriation bill was taken up. Mr. Hale said that the appropriations made in the bill for the running expenses of the navy department, aside from the construction of new ships, were between $600,000 and $700,000 less than the appropriation for last year. The bill, as reported, appropriated $31,564,000. The large items were for the carrying out of contracts on vessels heretofore authorized by congress. As compared with the estimates, the bill appropriated $1,770,000 less. The two main terms of increase reported from the committee on appropriations were for two dry docks—one in South Carolina and one on the Pacific coast. The first committee amendment that was challenged was the item of $25,000 for the equipment and arms for naval militia in various states. After the word "equipment" had been stricken out, leaving it read "for arms, for naval militia," only the amendment was agreed to. The next amendment reached was to insert a paragraph appropriating $100,000 to continue the construction of a timber dry dock at the coaling station at Port Royal, S. C. Agreed to without question. The next amendment was one providing for a dry dock on Columbia river, or on Puget Sound. No action on this amendment was reached. Conference committee were ordered on the pension appropriation bill and on the army appropriation bill. Messrs. Allison, Dawes and Gorman are conferees on the first bill, and Messrs. Allison, Plumb and Washburn on the second. A message from the president, with correspondence relating to the conduct of Commander Reiter in connection with the arrest and killing of General Barrundia, was presented and referred to the committee on naval affairs. The president's veto message on the bill for a public building at Dallas, Tex., with the action of the house passing the bill over the veto, was presented and referred to the committee on public buildings and grounds. The senate then adjourned.

In the senate, on Wednesday, Mr. Teller offered a resolution, which was agreed to, calling on the secretary of the treasury for a list of all persons, firms or associations, by whom silver bullion had been offered, under the act of July 14, 1890, the amounts and prices; list of those from whom silver bullion had been purchased, amounts and prices; basis on which an estimate is made of the market price of silver; and the amounts and prices of silver bullion purchased outside of the United States. Consideration of the naval appropriation bill was then resumed, the pending question being on the amendment in reference to the site of the dry dock on the Pacific coast. The amendment recommended by the committee on appropriations leaving it to the secretary of the navy to decide upon the site of the dry dock, was advocated by Messrs. Dolph and Mitchell, while Mr. Allen argued in support of his amendment, fixing Port Orchard, on Puget sound, as the site. The discussion was continued by Messrs. Cockerell, Hiscock, Washburn, Call, Squire, Spooner and Hale. Finally, after nearly three hour's talk, a vote was taken on Mr. Allen's amendment and it was agreed to. The next amendment by the committee was to insert a paragraph instructing the secretary of the navy to sell one or more of the old single turreted monitors, the price to be determined by a board of naval officers. It was agreed to. The remainder of the committee amendments were agreed to without contest. Mr. Call presented some views in favor of the re-establishment and proper equipment of the navy yard at Pensacola, and of establishing a proper plant in the region of Alabama, where iron and steel are produced, for the construction and repair of vessels at Pensacola. The bill was then passed. Mr. Wolcott, from the weights and measures to sit during sessions of the house, which was granted. The army and pension appropriation bills were sent to conference. The senate bill was passed for the transfer of army officers on the retired list from the limited list to the unlimited list when they shall have attained the age sixty-four years. Mr. Abbott, of Texas, from the committee on public buildings and grounds, reported back the bill providing for the extension of the public building at Dallas, Tex., at a cost of $200,000. This bill passed congress last session, but was vetoed by the president. The recommendation of the committee is that the committee on civil service, reported back, without recommendation, the senate bill to insure preference in appointment, employment and retention in the public service of the United States to veterans in the late war, and it was placed on the calendar. The District of Columbia appropriation bill was reported and placed on the calendar, and Mr. Plumb gave notice that he would ask for its consideration Thursday. The copyright bill was then taken up, but Mr. Platt consented that the bill should be laid aside informally and that bills on the calendar should be taken up. Quite a number were passed, among them the senate bill appropriating $50,000 for an equestrian statue of General Francis Marion, in Columbia, S. C. The senate bill appropriating $50,000 for a public building at Charlottesville, Va., was reported and placed on the calendar. The senate at 5:50 o'clock adjourned till Thursday at 11 o'clock a. m., the copyright bill being unfinished business.

HOUSE.

On Tuesday, the house bill, (coming over from Friday evening), was passed increasing to $100 a month the pension of the widow of General Custer. Mr. Wickham, of Ohio, asked unanimous consent for the committee on coinage, bill be passed over the veto. The bill passed—yeas 141, nays 68, the necessary two-thirds voting in the affirmative. The legislative appropriation bill was taken up. In the general debate, the Barrundia case was revived by Mr. Dalzell, of Pennsylvania, who defended the action of Commander Reiter. The public reprimand administered to Commander Reiter by the secretary of the navy was, he said, unwarranted and unjust. A naval officer had been degraded by a public reprimand, without the intervention of a court martial. He criticised severely the action of Secretary Tracy. Mr. Lodge spoke in defense of the secretary of the navy, as also did Mr. Dolliver, of Iowa. Mr. Boutelle, of Maine, said that while he entertained the greatest respect and esteem for the head of the navy department, he was so unfortunate as not to be able to commend the secretary's action towards Commander Reiter. Mr. Fithian, of Illinois, opposed the shipping bill, and attacked Charles Hill, secretary of the shipping league, on account of his statement that he (Fithian) was a British emissary. He denounced that statement as a lie and the author of it as an unmitigated liar. Mr. Farquahar, of New York, briefly defended Mr. Hill, and, without dispensing of the bill, the committee rose, and the house adjourned.

In the house, on Wednesday, on motion of Mr. Richardson, of Tennessee, the senate amendment to the house bill to fix the rate of wages of certain employes of the government printing office was non concurred in. The house then went into committee of the whole (Mr. Payson, of Illinois, in the chair) on the legislative appropriation bill. In the general debate which followed Mr. Stockdale, of Mississippi, devoted himself to the civil service and Barrundia affair. Then Mr. McAdoo, of New Jersey, declared his opposition to the shipping bounty bill. Mr. Fitch gave notice that if the shipping bill passed a committee would be appointed in the next congress to inquire into the manner in which its passage had been secured. Without disposing of the bill the committee rose and after some unimportant routine business, the house adjourned.

NOTES.

The house, on Tuesday, granted the committee on coinage leave to sit during session.

The house, on Tuesday, passed a bill increasing to $100 per month the pension of the widow of Gen. Custer.

The president and Secretary Proctor have sustained Colonel Forsyth's management at the Wounded Knee engagement, contrary to the advice of General Miles.

The death of Representative Phelan is the twelfth since the opening of the fifty-first congress. One senator and eleven members have died, of these three were from Pennsylvania.

The international monetary conference, which has been in session in Washington several days, adjourned Tuesday. This action was taken on account of the fact that legislation is now pending in congress, which may materially change the status of silver.

At Mr. Grime's request, the senate appropriation committee, which now has the sundry civil appropriation bill under consideration, on Tuesday, promised to make provision in that bill for the immediate appropriation of the $100,000 to be used in purchasing a site and constructing the Columbus, Ga., public building.

The bills providing for federal courts at both Athens and Columbus, Ga., passed the house last session, and have since been pending in the senate judiciary committee. The chances are, both bills will be reported within a few days. In that event they can be rushed through and become laws before the expiration of the present session.

THANKING SECRETARY BLAINE

For the Reciprocity Treaty Made With Brazil.

A Richmond dispatch of Sunday says: Owing to the large flour milling interest there, the reciprocity treaty with Brazil has been most favorably received by the Richmond trade generally. An insight into the public opinion regarding the matter, may be obtained from the following telegram, sent to Mr. Blaine Saturday, by one of the prominent milling companies:

"To Hon. James G. Blaine, Secretary of State, Washington, D. C: Accept our heartiest congratulations on the magnificent success of your truly statesmanlike policy in securing reciprocity trade relations with Brazil. Its effect must largely increase the consumption of American flour and prove beneficial to every wheat grower in Virginia."

FROM DETROIT MERCHANTS.

Following is the tenor of a telegram sent him by the Merchants' and Manufacturers' Exchange, of Detroit:

"On behalf of the members of the exchange, embracing the principal financial, commercial and manufacturing interests of this city, and in behalf of a very large number of merchants and manufacturers of this state, who approve, not only of reciprocity with South and Central America, but all America. We acknowledge our appreciation of the commercial advantages gained by you for our common country through the agreement completed with Brazil, and we urge a continuance of your efforts to open the avenues of reciprocal trade and commerce, particularly with Canada."

WILL SERVE THEIR TERM.

Dillon and O'Brien Voluntarily Surrender.

Willim O'Brien, accompanied by John Dillon and Thomas P. Gill, left the port of Boulogne Sur-Mer, France, on Thursday, for Folkstone, England. It is expected that Dillon and O'Brien will be arrested the moment they set foot on British soil in order that they may be compelled to serve the terms of imprisonment imposed upon them some months ago, by the Tipperary court for conspiring to incite tenants on the Smith-Barry estates not to pay rent.

A later dispatch from Folkstone says: Dillon and O'Brien, upon their arrival at this place from Boulogne-Sur-Mer, voluntarily surrendered themselves to the police authorities there.

A SLICK BANKER.

After Fleecing His Depositors He Skips Out.

A cablegram from Paris, France, says: A private banker, named Victor Macc, has disappeared, leaving debts aggregating 20,000,000 francs. He attracted deposits by paying high rates of interest and wide advertising. It is said that he had over 20,000 depositors. The bubble bursted Saturday, when it required the best efforts of the police to save the establishment from being wrecked by the angry depositors. On Tuesday it was announced that a letter had been received at the establishment from Mace in which he hints at suicide. Nobody credits that suggestion, however.

HARRISON COMING SOUTH.

The President and His Cabinet to Visit Us.

A Washington dispatch of Thursday says: The president and most of his cabinet will visit the Pacific coast after the adjournment of congress, and have arranged a trip so as to include a tour of the southern states. No details have yet been arranged, but it is probable that the party will start from Washington in the early part of April.

A Dramatic Incident.

Two men sat near each other in the Pittsburg railroad station Monday afternoon, strangers to one another. They began talking about the weather, and then one asked the other to take a drink. Within ten minutes these two strangers had discovered to their amazement that they were long-lost brothers, Frank and James Williams, who had not seen or heard of each other for thirty years. They cried over their wine, and each told the story of his life. Frank had run away as a boy from the Pennsylvania farm and had drifted all over the world, finally making his fortune in Colorado, where he now resides. James had remained with the old folks and had seen them decently buried. Their meeting, which was purely accidental, was a dramatic as anything to be found in myth or story.—Springfield Republican.

The claim is made that the constitutional requirement provides that a majority of all members of the legislature is necessary, which would necessitate Kyle's receiving eighty-five votes, whereas he received only seventy-five.

TRADE TOPICS.

Weekly Review of Business by Dun & Co.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says: There is some improvement in business at the east, and a more confident feeling, and at Chicago the tone is very hopeful. But at most other Western and Southern points business shows no increase in volume, and is rather hesitating. The industrial outlook is modified by the great strike of the Connellsville coke workers, which must cut off large supplies of iron if it lasts, and by a great decrease in the output. The coal market is dull and weak. The demand for wool continues strong, and worsted goods are rising. Sales at Boston in January were 17,040,400 pounds, against 11,339,900 last year, an increase of about 50 per cent, and the market for dress goods is particularly active—agents looking forward to a time of extraordinary prosperity. Trade in cotton goods is fair in volume, and print cloths are a shade stronger in price. The boot and shoe trade show some improvement as to volume, though the prices obtained are not highly satisfactory. The grocery trade is fairly active, and indicates no decrease in the demand for consumption. Provisions have been a shade weaker, with a fall of 1¼ cents in corn, and wheat and oats have declined each a fraction on small sales, but coffee and oil are stronger, and cotton unchanged.

The low price of cotton tends to make trade dull at the south, the farmers holding back for higher prices; but at New Orleans the general trade improves materially. At Nashville it opens very dull, though buyers are cautious, and at other points reporting it is only fair or dull. St. Louis reports a fair volume, but no improvement, while Kansas City finds a better wholesale and a quiet retail trade. At Denver and St. Paul trade is fair; at Minneapolis, very active in lumber, with excellent logging prospects; at Omaha, without improvement, and at Milwaukee and Detroit, quiet. The dry goods, clothing and shoe trades considerably exceed last year's. Philadelphia reports an improvement in wool and a fair trade in dry goods and clothing; good orders in jewelry and a fairly satisfactory trade in paints and chemicals. Throughout the country the money markets are comparatively easy and undisturbed, though the demand is good and the supply hardly adequate; at Cleveland and at Omaha the market is close.

Business failures throughout the country, during the last seven days, number for the United States, 262; Canada, 35. For the corresponding week, last year, the figures were 240 in the United States and 62 in Canada.

IN NEW HANDS.

Idle Cotton Mills of Mississippi to Start up Again.

A dispatch from Jackson, Miss., says: On Saturday Governor Stone approved the charter of the Delta cotton and woolen mills, at Carrollton, Miss. The incorporators are A. E. Randle, of Washington city; Cyrus W. Field, Jr., of New York, and William R. Martin, Oscar C. Brothers, J. Walter Head and T. M. Miller, of Mississippi. This company bought the plant of the Carrollton cotton mills, which had been idle for years, and will at once prepare to begin operation. The capital stock of the new company will be $1,000,000. Mr. Arther E. Randle, the proprietor of this purchase, was a potent factor in securing the passage by the ordinance of the late constitutional convention exempting new factories from taxation for ten years

A DISASTROUS BLAZE.

One Hundred Thousand Dollars' Worth of Property Destroyed.

At 1 o'clock Sunday morning a fire broke out in the large dry goods house of S. Feld & Co., at Greenville, Miss., the stock of goods of which was being sold for account of the First National bank of that city. The conflagration was one of the largest that has visited the city for years. Five stores and their entire contents were entirely consumed in two hours. The total value will approximate $100,000.

NEWS NOTES AND ITEMS FROM THE NATIONAL CAPITAL.

Proceedings of the Second Session of the 51st Congress.

SENATE.

In the senate, on Tuesday, the question of the Hawaiian cable came up again, Mr. Carlisle taking the ground that under the treaty with the Kingdom of Hawaii the United States had the right to the occupation of the harbor of Pearl river, and could land a cable there without any concession that might be held by a citizen of Massachusetts. That treaty, however, had been violated by the United States in the passage of the tariff act of 1890, though he was not aware that the Hawaiian government regarded the treaty as abrogated. In connection with that point, the action of the conference committee and of the two houses in connection with the tariff bill came under discussion. Mr. Carlisle agreed that the Hawaiian cable amendment had no proper place on the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill. It related to a subject that ought to stand by itself and on its own merits. By placing sugar on the free list, under the tariff bill of 1890, the act of 1876 admitting sugar and rice from the Hawaiian islands free of duty, so as to carry out the treaty, had been repealed—expressly and absolutely repealed—by the congress of the United States without notice to the Hawaiian government.

In the senate, on Wednesday, the copyright bill having been taken up as unfinished business, Mr. Platt yielded to the request of Mr. Davis to allow a pension bill on the calendar to be passed. Some dozen pension bills were taken from the calendar and passed, including bills increasing the pensions of the widow of Gen. Custer to $100 a month. The copyright bill having again been taken up, a vote was taken on the Sherman amendment, offered Tuesday by Mr. Power, to admit copyrighted books, etc., printed in foreign countries upon payment of the tariff bill. The amendment was agreed to—yeas 36, nays 24. Thereupon Mr. Frye renewed his amendment requiring photographs, to be printed on plates executed in the United States. The amendment was agreed to—yeas 41, nays 24. Mr. Ingalls moved to strike out of sec. 3 the proviso allowing the publishing of a newspaper or magazine to import two copies of any newspaper or magazine published in a foreign country, and to insert in lieu thereof the following: "And except in case of newspapers and periodicals, which are hereby exempted from prohibition of importation." Agreed to without division. Other amendments were offered and rejected. Finally a vote was taken on the passage of the bill, and the bill was passed—yeas 36, nays 14.

HOUSE.

In pursuance of a written designation by the speaker, the house was called to order Tuesday morning by Mr. Payson, of Illinois. Mr. Thompson, of Ohio, from the committee on judiciary, reported a resolution for the impeachment of Alex Boarman, Judge of the United States district court for the western district of Louisiana, for high crimes and misdemeanors. Ordered printed and recommitted. Mr. Stone, of Missouri, from the committee on public lands, reported a bill forfeiting certain railroad land grants. Mr. Adams, of Illinois, raised the question of consideration, and the house having refused to consider the bill, it was withdrawn. Mr. Brewer, of Michigan, presented, and after a brief debate, the house agreed to the conference report on the fortification appropriation bill. The house then went into committee of the whole on the Indian appropriation bill. Mr. Carter, of Montana, offered an amendment appropriating $940,000 to carry out the agreement with the Crow Indians, of Montana; adopted. Mr. Holman offered an amendment providing that the Cherokee nation may negotiate with the secretary of the interior for the sale of the Cherokee outlet; adopted. The committee then rose and reported the bill to the house. The previous question was ordered on the passage of the bill, and the house adjourned.

NOTES.

The copyright bill, as it passed the senate Thursday is not in a shape to satisfy those most interested. Its advocates, however, expect the conference committee to correct the inconsistencies.

The house coinage committee, on Monday, adopted a resolution to close the hearings at 12 o'clock Friday and to vote on the silver bill in committee at 1 o'clock that day. The resolution was adopted, after a long wrangle, by unanimous consent, the silver men agreeing to it as the best solution of the question.

A. J. Warner, formerly member of congress from Ohio and now head of the silver national executive committee, made a vigorous argument Tuesday before the house committee on coinage in advocacy of the bill for the free coinage of silver. Johnn Warner, congressman-elect from New York, who was one of the delegation sent to Washington from the Cooper union meeting, then protested against additional silver legislation.

STEEL MANUFACTURES.

Labor Commissioner Wright's Report Before Congress.

The president, on Saturday, transmitted to congress the report of Carroll D. Wright, commissioner of labor, on the cost of the production of steel and steel rails. The inquiry was directed by the act establishing a department with the view to ascertain the cost of producing articles dutiable in the United States in the leading countries where such articles are produced, by the units of production, in order to show the difference in the cost of production between this country and Europe, and the possible bearing of these differences upon the tariff rates.

The report covers three features, the first relating to the cost of production of the articles selected; the second, relative to rates, wages, time, earnings and efficiency of labor employed, and the third relating to the cost of living and the total earnings and expenditures of the men employed. The comparison of cost of materials used in the northern and southern districts of the United States shows a difference in favor of the South in the cost of ore and coal to be very great. The ore used in the northern district costs per ton an average of $4.40; cinder scrap, etc., $2.63; limestone, 79.8 cents; coke, $3.014, and coal $2,695. The cost in the southern district for ore is $1,513; cinder scrap, etc., $1,031, 70,01 cents; coke, $3,084, and coal, $1,566.

The table shows the results of the inquiry as to the cost of producing steel rails in thirteen establishments, two of them being in the United States, eight on the continent of Europe and three in Great Britain. In the United States, the net cost of materials was $21.10, at one establishment, and $25.11 at the other. The cost of labor was $1.54 and $1.88. The total cost at one, $24.79, and $27.68 at the other. On the continent the cost of materials varied from $17.09 to $19.88; to cost of labor from $1.02 to $4.64 per ton. In three establishments in Great Britain the net cost of materials varied from $16.39 to $18.05; to cost of labor from $1.36 to $2.54. The totals therefore varied from $18.58 to $21.90. The average earnings per hour for workmen ranges in the northern district from 9 cents to 18 cents; in the southern district from 11 cents to 13 cents; in Europe from 4 cents to 5 cents, and in Great Britain from 5 cents to 10 cents per hour

THE FIRST CLASH

Between Workmen on the World's Fair Buildings.

A Chicago dispatch says: The work of grading Jackson park, in preparation for the world's fair, is at a standstill. Late Friday afternoon a set of idle workmen, finding that they were unable to induce the Italians, who were at work, to strike for an advance in wages, attacked them and drove them out of the park with kick and cuffs. Saturday morning a crowd of idlers gathered in the park to the number of 700 or more, and maintained such a threatening attitude toward the Italians that the contractor thought it best not to resume work. Some union carpenters engaged in building the offices and stables were not molested. The contractors say they will wait till they secure telephone connections with the police department, when they will resume work, and if interferred with will demand protection.

THE LAST SPIKE DRIVEN,

And the United States Connect with British Columbia.

A dispatch from Fairhaven, Wash., says: The last spike in the track which unites the state of Washington and British Columbia was driven at 11 o'clock Saturday, in the presence of about 3,000 persons from both sides of the line. The Fairhaven and Southern road forms the American line, and the new Westminster Southern the British Columbia. A telegram was read from James G. Blaine, secretary of state.

RUSHING WATERS.

Rivers of West Virginia Overflow their Banks.

A Wheeling, W. Va., dispatch of Tuesday, says: The greatest flood in many years is expected here. Reports from all sections of the state indicate unusually heavy rains and the streams are rising rapidly. All railroads entering the city are blocked by landslides and communication is almost entirely cut off in every direction.

Deputy United States Marshal Blair arrived at San Antonio Wednesday evening, having in custody a Mexican named Ruiz Valdez, the leader of the bandits who recently robbed a passenger train, near Brownsville, of $30,000.

Antees, ten-year-old stallion, was sold at auction at Louisville, Ky., Thursday, for $55,000, the highest price a stallion ever brought under the hammer. Bell Boy, who was burned at Veasailles about a year ago, heretofore held the record, he fetching $51,000.

The board of health of New Orleans proposes to establish a chemical laboratory for the purpose of analyzing food and mill products of general consumption. It has favored this idea ever since the death of a young lady there from eating poisonous icecream.

Colonel James O. Nixon, one of the oldest journalists of New Orleans, is dead, aged seventy-four. Mr. Nixon was one of the great ante-bellum journalists of the city, being the owner and editor, as early as 1850, of the Crescent, the old-time know-nothing and whig organ.

The signal office furnished the following special bulletin to the press: Weather reports from Maryland, the District of Columbia, western portions of Virginia and the Carolinas and northern Georgia show that Wednesday was the warmest on record over these sections for this season of the year.

A bill was filed in the chancery court at Chattanooga, Thursday, by the Nashville stockholders enjoining the sale of the Hughes Lumber Company on the 25th of February. Over $200,000 are involved. Serious charges are made in the bill against D. H. Hughes, president of the company.

Mr. D. Barnes Plyler, who had the reputation of being the largest man in North Carolina, his weight being 460 pounds, died at his home in Union county a few days ago. At his request he was buried with hat and boots on, and a pocket knife in his hand. His coffin was four feet wide, and his weight after death was 700 pounds.

A large delegation of New England capitalists started on a tour of the southern states Wednesday. They will be guests of the Georgia and Alabama Investment and Improvement Company and are in charge of Hon. James W. Hyatt. They will visit among other places Tallapoosa and Atlanta, Ga., and Anniston and Birmingham, Ala.

The Alabama legislature adjourned at midnight Wednesday night, having completed the session of fifty days limited by the constitution. A vast number of bills passed both houses, the majority being local measures. The most important bill passed was one appropriating $10,000, to aid in completing the Confederate monument.

E. W. Skinner and M. J. Jennings, of Birmingham, have gone into a complicated and expensive litigation over the possession of Skinner's wife. Some time ago that lady, it is alleged, transferred a share of her affections to Jennings, and then Skinner went gunning for his rival. A truce was patched up, and the wife remained in her husband's possession for a time, but again grew weary of him, and then Jennings took possession again. Again guns were brought into play, and the ownership of the woman remaining unsettled, both men went to the law and the courts. They have had each other arrested times without number, in addition to bringing enough civil suits to keep a court busy at least a month.

THE GIRL ON HORSEBACK.

Bessie (to horse dealer)—I thought you told me that that saddle horse I bought would take in the bit without the slightest trouble!

Dealer—Well, doesn't he!

Bessie—No, he doesn't he! I held the bridle right up to his nose, and clucked several times; but the ugly thing never made a move!

HIS LAST BATTLE.

Death of General Sherman at New York.

General W. T. Sherman died at his home in New York Saturday afternoon. The history of his ailment dates from last Wednesday one week ago, when in company with a number of army and naval officers he attended the Casino theatre and contracted a cold. In a few days erysipelas developed, terminated in pneumonia from which the general never rallied.

The end came peacefuly and quietly at 1:50 o'clock p. m. Saturday, while the general lay unconscious, surrounded by all the members of his family, except Rev. Thomas Ewing Sherman, who is now on the ocean, on his way to this country.

Arrangements for the funeral are in charge of General Henry W. Slocum. The funeral services over the remains of the general takes place on Thursday, from his late residence, although it may be deferred, if his son does not arrive that day from Europe on the Majestic. Thursday evening the body will be taken to St. Louis in a special train of three cars. It will be in charge of General Schofield, and will be accompanied by a delegation from Post LaFayette, Grand Army of the Republic, of New York City.

ORDERS TO THE ARMY.

General Schofield has issued the following order: On the day of the funeral the troops at every military post will be paraded and the order read to them, after which all labors for the day will cease. The national flag will be displayed at half staff from the time of the receipt of this order till the close of the funeral. On the day of the funeral a salute of seventeen guns will be fired at half hour intervals, commencing at 8 o'clock a. m. Officers of the army will wear usual badges of mourning and colors of regiments, and battallions will be draped in mourning for the period of six months. The day and hour of the funeral will be communicated to the department commanders by telegraph and by them to their subordinate commanders. Other necessary orders will be issued hereafter relative to appropriate funeral ceremonies.

A meeting of the board of officers of the New York state commandery of the military order of the Loyal Legion was held at the residence of General Wagner Swayne Sunday morning. The offer of a guard of honor, consisting of comrades of the commandery, to watch over the remains of the dead, was sent the family, and a formal meeting was ordered to take action on the general's death. About 3,000 telegrams have been received at the house since the general's death. The funeral service proper will be held in St. Louis. The pallbearers will be: General J. M. Schofield, General O. O. Howard, Rear Admiral D. L. Braine, Rear Admiral L. Kimberly, General Thomas L. Casey, General J. C. Kelton, Professor H. L. Hendricks, General Joseph E. Johnston, General H. W. Slocum, General Daniel E. Sickles, General L. M. Greege, General J. M. Corse, General Wagner Swayne, General S. L. Woodford.

A BRIEF SKETCH OF GENERAL SHERMAN'S CAREER.

William Tecumseh Sherman was born in Lancaster, Ohio, February 8, 1820. His father was Charles R. Sherman. In 1836 he was appointed a cadet at the United States Military academy, and in July, 1840, was graduated and appointed a second lieutenant in the Third artilery. He served in the army until 1853, when he resigned and engaged in the banking business in San Francisco. He removed to New York in 1857, and the affairs of his firm were closed up. In 1859 he was elected superintendent of the Military academy in Louisiana and held that position until the state seceded. At the beginning of the war he was appointed colonel of the Thirteenth regular infantry. He took part in the first battle of Bull Run. He rose rapidly, and his military history is well known. The campaign against Johnston, which started at Dalton and ended at Atlanta, followed by his march to the sea present some of the most interesting features of the war. His army was dissolved in Washington after a grand review in 1865. On June 27th, of that year, he was appointed to command the military division of the Mississippi. He was promoted to lieutenant general and assigned to command of the military division of the Missouri. When Grant was made president, Sherman was appointed general. He was retired February 8, 1884.

ARRESTED FOR MURDER.

A Bank President Charged With Killing His Wife.

A dispatch of Wednesday from Clarks, Neb., says: S. B. Cowles, president of the Pacific bank and one of the most prominent and oldest citizens of Nebraska, has been arrested, charged with having deliberately murdered his wife early on the morning of February 4th. Since the discovery of the crime the city has been at white heat of excitement. Mrs. Cowles was choked to death in her bed chamber. Her screams attracted attention, and when neighbors rushed in the husband was lying apparently unconscious on the floor, with blood streaming from a wound in the head, while the dead body of Mrs. Cowles was stretched on the bed with the imprints of the murderous fingers on the throat. The house was ransacked as if by burglars in search of booty, and some money and jewelry were missing. When resuscitated, the husband described how a masked burglar had rushed into the bed chamber, felled him to the floor and killed his wife. He immediately offered a reward of $5,000 for clews to the murderer. At the inquest suspicion was directed toward the banker as the murder. Detectives were put to work on the case, and as a result of this investigation Cowles was arrested, charged with the crime. Cowles for seven years was an officer in the Union Pacific transportation service, and is a prominent Odd Fellow and Mason. His banking institution is one of the largest in the state. The murdered woman was a society leader, and was never known to have quarreled with her husband. The wounds on the banker's head, which he declared to have rendered him unconscious, developed, upon examination, to have been the merest scratches, and could easily have been administered by himself.

THE AGENT'S SCHEME

To Influence Legislators Regarding School Books.

A Charleston, W. Va., dispatch says: Ed. B. Dyer, of Kanawha county, rose in his place in the house of delegates Tuesday and announced that a book agent had thrust $50 into his vest pocket, and that he regarded the "present" as a "bribe" to influence his vote on the question of a change of school books throughout the state. Delegate Dyer then handed the $50 over to the speaker of the house. An investigation was ordered, and the sergeant-at-arms was sent to arrest the agent. The investigation, it is said, will involve some who would rather be not known in this affair.

IS IT "JACK?"

A Man Arrested as the Whitechappel Murderer.

A London dispatch of Monday, says: The latest discovery made by the metropolitan police in connection with the Whitechapel murder Friday morning last, by which the woman known as "Carroty Nell," lost her life, bids fair to connect the man, Sadler, now in custody, with the "Jack the Ripper" crime. The metropolitan police now have in their possession a sharp, dangerous-looking knife, stained with blood and showing traces of having recently been washed. This formidable knife has been traced to the possession of Sadler, who was a fireman on board of a steamer, which recently arrived from Turkey.

CRASHED THROUGH THE CAR.

A Falling Boulder Wrecks a Passing Train.

A Pittsburg, Pa., dispatch says: An immense rock, weighing at least 200 pounds, fell from Duquesne Heights, Monday morning, and crashed into a passenger coach on the Washington and Pennsylvania express on the Pan Handle road. Miss Clara Fleming, aged 19 years, was killed; Miss Minnie Baldwin, aged 18, and J. F. Donahoo, aged 20, and another young man whose name was not ascertained, were badly hurt. The heavy rain loosened the rock, which fell as the train was passing. It struck the coach in the middle, wrecking it.

MOTHER AND CHILDREN

Suffocated in a New York Tenement Fire.

A New York dispatch says: A bakery at Delmonico Place and Popkinson avenue caught fire Wednesday morning from a pot of boiling fat, which boiled over. The basement and first floor were gutted. Jacob Enrich, a baker, who was at work over the fat, was fatally burned. On the top floor, after the fire was extinguished, a fireman found Mrs. John Hendly and her four children dead. They were asleep when the fire broke out and were overcome by the smoke before they could escape.

Judge Wood, Third Vice President of the L. & N. R. R. presented five hundred dollars to the Ladies' Memorial Association, of Montgomery, to aid in building the Confederate Monument. And yet we talk of "soulless corporations."

The Talladega Mountain Home strikes the keynote of newspaper success when it remarks. "The ... found it quite profitable news first, and then, if it has the space, to give the news from other points. Our home people want the news from their section first." The newspaper that covers its own field, well will be sure to meet the financial encouragement of the people.

The Philadelphia Press fully appreciates Senator Morgan's staying qualities. It says: "It is intimated that what daunted and finally dissuaded Senators Aldrich and Hoar in their fierce struggle to press the force bill was not the mutineers in the Republican camp, but the fact that the Democrats held Senator Morgan in reserve. When that able man's tongue is in working order it is calculated that he can keep the floor indefinitely. Even the loquacious and endless Blair has not the wind nor bottom of the senator from Alabama."

The last number of Judge, received yesterday, contains an excellent cartoon and a very patriotic one. "Judge" standing in the midst of the states protesting against the force bill by refusing to appropriate money for the World's Fair, and exclaiming to them: "Shame on you Southern States! The World's Fair is national, not sectional." At the same time Judge does not seem to realize that government and its legislation should also be national, not sectional. Its a poor rule that won't rule straight. — Eufaula Times.

Kansas is not only the leading State in the advocacy of Alliance measures and principles, but it is foremost in its advocacy of woman suffrage. Women have already been given the privilege of voting at municipal elections, and holding municipal offices. In several small towns women have been elected mayors and aldermen and the Legislature, it is expected, will remove all restrictions. We may soon expect to hear of woman holding the highest offices in that State and even aspiring to Congress. It looks like Kansas will be the first to make the experiment, which will be watched with absorbing interest.

Considerable discussion is going on over a recent public utterance of Grover Cleveland against the free coinage of silver. It appears to be pretty much of "a tempest in a tea pot." Cleveland knows that the Democratic party would lose the State of New York in the next Presidential election if its nominee favored free coinage. That would mean defeat for the party. If the party wants free coinage it might fill the halls of congress with enough free coinage men to give us the law over Cleveland's veto. That is the only hope for such a law, for Cleveland in spite of his bull headed utterances, is almost certain to be our next President.

A Fertilizer Yarn.

The Troy Herald says: Walter Rainer told a reporter of the Herald the following yarn: He stated that he sold some of his Matchless Cotton Grower guano to a farmer at Clay Hill, at the same time selling him a sack of flour. The farmer had seven small children and he did not arrive at home until after dark, and his good wife, in a hurry to make the bread, made a mistake and used the guano instead of flour. The children ate every heartily and the next morning every one of them were grown. Some of them were grown so tall that their feet were hanging out of the window. Walt says he can tell a good concentrated essence of potash when he tries.

Legislative.

At the eleventh hour the House killed the bill establishing a reformatory school for boys. The members feared there would be no money in the Treasury to stand the necessary expense.

The bill to prevent the running of freight trains on Sunday was really not a good bill and having learned representative Adams' reasons for voting to indefinitely postpone the measure, we give them in justice to him. Freight trains often have car loads of stock, which are in danger of injury and disease as long as they remain cooped up in a car, and to stop such cars, and hold them over a day when they reached Alabama, would not only have been cruelty but contrary to divine commandment. It would be next to impossibe for shippers of stock in distant States to be informed of Alabama's law, and regulate their shipments thereby, and if they were informed on this subject they could not always be sure what days their shipments might reach this State. It was a bad bill, and failed to pass.

To the Primary Alliances in this State.

Feeling the great responsibility vested, I herewith give notice to Primary Alliances in Alabama, that Article 5, Section 1 of the revised constitution is the law by which you are to be governed in electing persons to membership in the Alliance, and all the persons not named in Article 5, Section 1, are ineligible to membership.

And I call attention to a resolution passed by the Supreme Council at Ocala, Fla., viz: "That all connected with the Alliance must support the Ocala demands or suffer suspension from the order." I feel it my duty, and it is made so by the law of the Alliance, to give notice that all Primaries in this State holding a membership who is ineligible according to Article 5, Section 1, of the constitution, should, and the same is hereby instructed to give such members a withdrawl card for the reason that they are ineligible to membership and according to the law of the supreme council no person who does not support the Ocala platform is eligible to membership in the Alliance, and primaries should also give to such members a withdrawl card, and I call upon all the county presidents in this State to see to it that the law as named above is observed, and second that when the county presidents refuse to look after this matter it is the duty of the lecturer, and you are hereby reminded of such duty, and when primaries refuse to observe the law as named above, you are hereby requested to notify me at once.

Platform Adopted at Ocala at the Recent Convention.

First—We demand the abolition of national banks; we demand that the government shall establish sub-treasuries or depositories in the several States which shall loan money direct to the people at a low rate of interest, not to exceed 2 per cent. interest per annum on non-perishable farm products, and also upon real estate with a proper limitation upon the quality of land and the amount of the circulating medium be speedily increased to not less than $50 per capita.

Second—We demand that Congress pass such a law as shall effectually prevent the dealing in futures on agricultural and mechanical productions, providing a stringent system of procedure in trials, such as shall secure prompt convictions and imposition of such penalties as shall secure the nearest perfect compliance with the law.

Third—We condemn the silver bill recently passed by Congress, and demand in lieu thereof the free and unlimited coinage of silver.

Fourth—We demand the passage of a law prohibiting the alien ownership of land, and that Congress take some prompt action to devise some plan to obtain the land now owned by aliens, and foreign syndicates, and that all lands now held by railroads and other incorporations, in excess of such as is actually used and needed by them, be reclaimed by the Government and held for actual settlers only.

Fifth—Believing in the doctrine of equal rights to all and special privileges to none, we demand that our national legislation be so framed in the future as not to build up one industry at the expense of an other. We further demand a just and equitable system of graduated taxation. We believe that money on the contrary, should be kept as much as possible in the hands of the people, and hence we demand that all national and State revenues shall be limited to the necessary expenses of honest administration.

Sixth—We demand the most rigid, honest and just State and national government control and supervision of means of public communication and transportation and if this control and supervision do not remove the abuses now existing, we demand the government ownership of such means of communication and transportation.

CLEVELAND'S LETTER.

What Senator Pugh and Morgan Say About it.

The Washington Post contains an interview with a large number of Senators and Representatives. The majority of them hold that Mr. Cleveland has destroyed his chance for the Presidency.

Senator Pugh, of Alabama: Mr. Cleveland's letter to the Gold Standard meeting, in New York, and the meeting itself, are aimed at the Senate bill in favor of the free coinage of silver now struggling for passage by the House, and intended to defeat that bill. The people are for free coinage, and in the South and West they are practically unanimous. No man who stands in the way of free coinage of both metals can be elected in 1892. My belief is that Mr. Cleveland's letter makes certain what was before doubtful, and that is he will not be the Democratic nominee in 1892. Free coinage of silver will certainly be a national issue in 1892, and the Southern and Western Democracy must give up free coinage or Mr. Cleveland, and I am satisfied they will stick to silver and let Mr. Cleveland enjoy life on Wall Street.

Senator Morgan, of Alabama: I deeply regret that Mr. Cleveland can not be nominated by the Democratic party. His attitude on the subject of free silver, which is to be the issue of the next campain, has killed his chances.

Whites and Blacks.

The census of 1890 showed an increase in the negro population of the country of 34.8 per cent. Judging by its returns to date, the Porter census will show an increase of only 9 2 per cent., bringing the total number of negroes up to 7,186,226.

The Southern people will naturally feel gratified at the proof that the white race is growing more rapidly than the negro; that there is no danger of the country ever being swamped by Africans, but that a white majority will ultimately prevail in every portion of it. They recognize the fact, also, that all previous statistics have indicated the more rapid growth of the whites, but they never expected such startling figures as those of Mr. Porter—and they do not believe them.

The negro has been in this country 200 years, has been free nearly thirty years. We have therefore, been able to study him in freedom and slavery. There is no question of immigration to affect the negro population, and as a consequence the ratio of increase, both in slavery and freedom, has been steadier than among the whites. Only once it has varied—in the census of 1870—and that variation was subsequently proved to be due to frauds of grossest kind. There have been no indications whatever of any remarkable changes in the negroes of the South in the last decade; there has been no unusually excesive death rate, nor any cause of decline in the race. When Mr. Porter, therefore, tells us that the negroes have increased during the decade barely one-third as fast as in any previous ten years, he tells us what we cannot believe, however glad we might be to have it true.

When the census returns are completed what The Times-Democrat said at the very start will be shown to be true—that a gross fraud has been perpetrated, and that it has been perpetrated in the same way as in 1870 when, as Mr. Porter himself confesses, the South was cheated out of 1,500,000 population, mainly negroes, and twelve Congressmen. Mr. Porter's deputies have played this old trick over again, omitting a million or more negroes, believing that it will be impossible to detect the fraud among them, and that whites—pleased at discovering the slow increase of population of the blacks, will not be so vehement in denunciation and exposure of the fraud. Mr. Porter's census has counted out over a million negroes in the South for the purpose of defrauding it of representation—and his own figures show it.—Times-Democrat.

It is understood the President intends making a trip through the South shortly after the adjournment of Congress. The exact date of the trip or the points to be visited have not been fully determined upon, but it is probable that the trip will include Richmond, Atlanta, Birmingham, Charleston, Jacksonville, New Orleans and Galveston and the return trip by way of the cities of the Mississippi Valley and perhaps Nashville and Chattanooga. The President will probably be accompanied by the Postmaster-General and other members of the cabinet.

"It was Washington Irving who said that "with every exertion, the best of men can do but a moderate amount of good, but it seems in the power of the most contemptible individual to do incalculable mischief."

The Equitable Life Assurance Society

OF THE UNITED STATES.

In selecting a company in which to insure, why not take the best instead being persuaded by the eloquence of representatives of weaker companies to take what is less advantageous? It is the company, not the agent, with whom you are assured must deal after the policy is once taken. It is the company, not the agent that pays the dividends and meets claims when they mature. It costs no more to assure in the best and strongest company than any other established on a sound business basis; therefore, we again ask, WHY NOT TAKE THE BEST?

Stanton Notes.

The citizens of Dixie and vicinity were aroused at 2:10 this morning by a fearful noise and crashing, caused by two trains colliding on the curve a short distance below the Dixie depot.

Who is to blame for the disaster it is not known, though several reports are in circulation as to the cause.

The two engines were in a bad fix, and six or seven box cars were almost demolished, the most of them were loaded with compressed cotton, and a few of the bales were literally torn to pieces. It is strange to say that the track was not damaged.

The crew of both trains were considably bruised up, but fortunately none were seriously injured. One of the engineers took some people up to show them where he jumped off his cab, and right at the spot he pointed was lying a dead hog. The supposition is the engineer killed it by jumping on it.

Two tramps, one a white man and the other a negro, were killed. They were, it is supposed, in one of the cars loaded with cotton. The negro could not be indentified. Papers found on the white man showed him to be Joseph S. Fithian, a printer frow New Orleans, and was a member of the "Typo Union" and held a certificate from that organization, showing that he was a member, and in good standing. The man looked to be about 25 years of age.

Weakness.

There is no symptom of ill health more discouraging than weakness. That constant feeling of fatigue and disinclination to exert oneself. Life to such seems languid and insipid, and the invalid almost becomes reconciled to die. Do you suffer thus? Would you be enlivened? Do you wish your strength renewed? Try a bottle of Dr. Bell's Sarsaparilla. It will greatly ass st your recovery. Soon will you then experience a feeling of new life and returning power. No longer will the least exertion give fatigue and cause your heart to palpitate unnaturally. No more will that feeling of dizziness oppress you when you suddenly get up from your chair. No longer will indigestion and urinary disorders continue to break down your constitution. Every function will resume its natural activity and you will soon enjoy a glorious feeling of self control and confidence. No longer nervous, afraid and imaginative of gloomy disaster. Ambition will take the place of discouragement and you will be happy in health and kindly hope.—Cal Rural Pest.

Big Inducement for Druggists.

The druggists throughout the country are making a specialty of handling Hawkes' Crystallized Lenses. They write that they make more money, in proportion, out of this line than anything else they carry in stock. These fine glasses have been advertised extensively for many years, and have received the endorsement and approval of thousands of the best citizens of the United States. They are eagerly sought after by spectacle-wearers everywhere, and it will pay druggists and general merchants to put in a stock of these goods. Exclusive sale is given to one firm in each town. The trade can be built up, and the entire spectacle business of a large section can be monopolized with these goods. Factory, Decatur St., and salesroom, Whitehall St., Atlanta, Ga. Malaria is believed to be caused by poisonous miasms arising from low, marshy land, or from decaying vegetable matter, and which, breathed into the lungs, enter and poison the blood. If a healthy condition of the blood is maintained by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla one is much less liable to malaria, and Hood's Sarsaparilla has cured many severe cases of this distressing affection even in the advanced stages when the terrible chills and fever prevailed. Try it.

And if you decide to take Hood's Sarsaparilla do not be induced to buy any substitute.

ALLIANCE NOTES.

NEWS OF THE ORDER FROM ALL SECTIONS.

Items of Interest to Alliancemen Everywhere.

Minnesota has an Alliance called "the McKinley Bill Killers' Alliance."

***

The Alliance legislature of South Carolina will hereafter exact a royalty of $2 per ton on phosphate rock, mined in the rivers, instead of $1 as heretofore. There is a vague report that a valuable phosphate mine was discovered in the Okefeenokee swamp before its recent sale; but as this property has now passed out of the hands of the state, there is no chance of Georgia ever getting a royalty thereon.—Southern Alliance Farmer.

***

California is pushing ahead in the matter of organizing sub-Alliances in every county of the state. The Pacific Rural Press, of San Francisco, so long the able official organ of the grange, has also espoused the Alliance cause, giving it a fine department and becoming its official and fraternal organ. One feature is commendable and explains why the work goes on so bravely, and that is, the good women are placed in active positions. They are not only secretaries, chaplains and door-keepers, but organizers and lecturers. State Organizer J. B. Rigdon organized thirteen sub-Alliances in twelve days.

The Southern Alliance Farmer, in announcing that the control of that paper had passed into the hands of Harry Brown and T. L. Gantt, and that the latter had been made an editorial co-worker, says:

Land, transportation and finance are the three living issues of the day. Aliens should not and must not be allowed to own our lands. Our flag should float over the domains of American citizens, not of foreign lords. The lines of transportation must submit to a complete and just government control, or the government must own them. The finances of the country must be run in the interest of the people, and not in the interest of banks and bondholders.

***

Bevier (Mo.) Appeal asks: "Are you interested in the work of the Alliance? Do you believe in the demands of the order as amended at the Ocala convention? If you do, it is your duty to support papers that openly and boldly advocate those principles, and help spread the light by getting your friends and neighbors to support them also. If you patronize papers whose chief mission is to bind you to the truth and teach you that you must trample on the grandest and noblest principles if the welfare of your party demands it, you are an ingrate, a traitor to the cause, false to your family and your country.

***

The Atlanta Evening Journal of Tuesday, says: "Senator Gordon will soon be a member of the Alliance. He would have been regularly initiated into the mysteries of the order long before this had it not been that he was unavoidably absent. He returned a few days ago from New York and informed the officers of the Edgewood Alliance, of which he has been elected a member, that he was ready to be initiated. There is some provision of the order which requires members to be initiated only at regular meetings. The next regular meeting of the Edgewood Alliance will be held on the sixth of March, and then Senator Gordon will present himself for initiation. The meeting will doubtless be a most interesting and largely attended one."

***

The rot being dished up to the people about loans on land by those who oppose the Alliance demands, is disgustingly false in statement and dishonest in purpose. The constant reference to the Argentine troubles as arising from land currency is without a scintilla of fact behind it. The assignats of the first French republic were but the shadow of substantial currency, as they were really government issues of money redeemable from the sale of lands, but they lacked the authority of a stable government. They were promises of the government to be paid from the proceeds of lands declared to be confiscated, and presented no guarantee that those lands would be of sufficient value to redeem the entire issue. The value of the assignats was further affected by the fact that the claim of government to every rood of the land was litigious, and that at the time of their issue, and all during the time they passed current, the nations of Europe were combined in the field to overthrow the authority under which they were issued; that they were valueless as money is amply proven by after facts, the principal of which is that they were never recognized by the national authority in time of peace. This alone is indorsement of the judgment of the people who refused to receive them in exchange for the products of their labor. For shame, that opponents can devise no better argument than these false statements of history!—National Economist.

That we most emphatically declare against the present system of government as manipulated by the congress of the United States and the members of the legislatures of the several States; therefore,

We declare in favor of holding a convention on February 22d, 1892, to fix a date and place for the holding of a convention to nominate candidates for the office of president and vice-president of the United States.

We declare that in the convention to be held on February 22, 1892, that representation shall be one delegate from each State in the Union.

That we favor the abolition of national banks, and that the surplus funds be loaned to individuals upon land security at a low rate of interest.

That we demand the foreclosure of mortgages that the government holds on railroads.

That the President and Vice President of the United States should be elected by popular vote, instead of by an electorial college.

That the Alliance shall take no part as partisans in a political struggle by affiliating with republicans or democrats.

That we favor the free and unlimited coinage of silver.

That the volume of currency be increased to $50 per capita.

That all paper money be placed on an equality with gold.

That we as land-owners pledge ourselves to demand that the government allow us to borrow money from the United States at the same rate of interest as do the banks.

That senators of the United States shall be elected by vote of the people.

THE FARMERS' ALLIANCE.

Texas is fairly alive with Alliances and Alliancemen, and the very best, most intelligent men, who were formerly, as democrats or republicans, active against each other, are uniting in every township to form a party of the people.

These Alliances are virtually school houses in which the correct principles of political economy are being taught. They are the well-springs of regeneration from political serfdom for the benefit of the Goulds, Quays Belmonts and others, who can see nothing in the people but beings to be found by legislation that they may be bled and impoverished at the leisure of the money leaders.

The Wall street machinery, now in the one-man control of Jay Gould, during the month of November, 1890, by simply withholding $75,000,000 from business uses, caused a depression in securities of $500,000,000. Jay Gould, after a year of quiet, got $75,000,000 where he could dam it and prevent it flowing into the market. The men found themselves as an army with supply trains cut off. Failure after failure; down went banks, business men and depositors by the thousands—not alone in New York, but in every city touched by the financial wires of man's dependence upon man.

This is called "operating" the market. This is the direct result of so shortening the volume of money that two or three men can corner and control it.

The Wall street operators lose millions, and to keep up the fever, the government pours millions of dollars into the laps of gamblers, and in turn slaps the tariffs and the taxes upon the farmers. The wealth producers are ground still deeper in the soil waiting for their bodies, and the wealth absorbers go on skinning each other, controlling causes, political parties and legislation.

The Barings fail for $100,000,000, and banks rush to their rescue. A farmer fails to produce enough from his land to meet the interest on his mortgage, and the law steps in and confiscates his home, and he steps out a heart-broken man with a heart-broken family.

Texas is an empire of itself. We pray God that its Alliances may be even more numerous than are its school houses, and that in each one may be taught the principles of financial reform, and thus the punishment of robbers and the prevention of panics.

The payment of the entire bonded debt of the government in full legal tender greenback money.

The abolition of a system that permits a government to pay interest money on what it has the power to create.

The free and unlimited coinage of silver as full legal tegal tender.

Carrying on the public improvements not by taxation, but by the letting of work to those who will receive their pay in full legal tender greenback money, never to be retired through the hocus pocus plan of converting it into interest-drawing United States bonds, or any other bonds on which the government can guarantee or pay interest.

On with the Farmers' Alliance! They are the day star of our redemption from bondage. All we can do to help on this work is a labor of duty and of love for humanity, and it will be done persistently.—Advance Thought.

***

The National Economist says editorially: "One of the cleanest bits of evidence given yet, showing the utter disregard and contempt in which many congressmen hold the Alliance and its demands, came out at a recent meeting of the committee on coinage, weights and measures. This committee has charge of the silver bill, and granted the legislative committee of the National Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union (then in session at Washington) a brief hearing. When President Polk and some dozen or more state presidents appeared they were introduced by the chairman of the coinage committee as the "representatives of a farmers' association of some kind whose name he had forgotten." Here is a practical illustration of the effect of the thousands of letters, petitions and resolutions that have been sent from members of the Order and sub-Alliances to this committee. Here is conclusive evidence that they were thrown aside as idle trash, unworthy a moment's consideration. When the chairman of this important committee is in ignorance of the very name of the Alliance, how can the farmers of the country expect any redress from Congress? It shows that the wants of the farmers have not even been discussed in committee, and their demands have been considered as an innovation.

Boats of the Vikings.

Centuries have passed since the ships of the Vikings floated on the water, and yet it is known, almost as if they had been launched yesterday, their model and their build. They are found delineated on rocks in Norway, and their remains are still dug up from beneath the ground. One of them was unearthed lately from a mound in blue clay at Sandefjord, in Norway, at a point now half a mile from the sea, and it had plainly been used as the burial-place of its owner. The sepulchral chamber in which the body of the Viking had been deposited was built amidships, being tent-like in shape, and made of logs placed side by side, leaning against a ridge-pole. In this chamber were found human bones and feathers of a peacock, some fishhooks and several bronze and lead ornaments for belts and harness. Round about the ship were found the bones of nine or ten horses and dogs, which had probably been sacrificed at the time of the burial. The vessel was 77 feet 11 inches at the greatest length, and 16 feet 11 inches at this greatest width, and from the top of the keel to the gunwale amidships she was 5 feet 9 inches deep. She had twenty ribs, and would draw less than four feet of water. She was clinker-built—that is, had plates slightly overlapped, like the shingles on the side of a house. The planks and timbers of the frame were fastened together with withes made of roots, but the oaken boards of the side were united by iron rivets firmly clinched. The bow and stern were similar in shape and must have risen high out of the water, but were so broken that it was impossible to tell how they originally ended. The keel was deep, and made of thick oak beams, and there was no trace of any metallic sheathing, but an iron anchor was found almost rusted to pieces.—[New York Sun.

THE GIRL WHO SMUGGLES.

George—Why, what do you mean! What have I done?

She—All last summer at the beach you gave me nothing but gas; now you become economical and want it turned down!—[New York Herald.

EXCITEMENT IN ROCHESTER.

The Commotion Caused by the Statement of a Physician.

An unusual article from the Rochester, N. Y., Democrat and Chronicle, was recently republished in this paper and was a subject of much comment. That the article caused even more commotion in Rochester, the following from the same paper shows:

Dr. J. B. Henion, who is well known not only in Rochester but in nearly every part of America, sent an extended article to this paper a few days since, which was duly published, detailing his remarkable experience and rescue from what seemed to be a certain death. It would be impossible to enumerate the personal enquiries which have been made at our office as to the validity of the article, but they have been so numerous that further investigation of the subject was deemed necessary.

With this end in view a representative of this paper called on Dr. Henion, at his residence, when the following interview occurred: "That article of yours, Doctor, has created quite a whirlwind. Are the statements about the terrible condition you were in and the way you were rescued such as you can sustain?"

"Everyone of them and many additional ones. I was brought so low by neglecting the first and most simple symptoms. I did not think I was sick. It is true I had frequent headaches; felt tired most of the time; could eat nothing one day and was ravenous the next; felt dull pains and my stomach was out of order, but I did not think it meant anything serious.

"The medical profession has been treating symptoms instead of disease for years, and it is high time it ceased. The symptoms I have just mentioned, or any unusual action or irritation of the water channels indicate the approach of kidney disease more than a cough announces the coming of consumption. We do not treat the cough, but try to help the lungs. We should not waste our time trying to relieve the headaches, pains about the body or other symptoms, but go directly to the kidneys, the source of most of these ailments."

"This, then, is what you meant when you said that more than one-half the deaths which occur arise from Bright's disease, is it, Doctor?"

"Precisely. Thousands of diseases are torturing people to-day, which in reality are Bright's disease in some of its many forms. It is a Hydra-headed monster, and the slightest symptoms should strike terror to every one who has them. I can look back and recall hundreds of deaths which physicians declared at the time were caused by paralysis, apoplexy, heart disease, pneumonia, malarial fever and other common complaints which I see now were caused by Bright's disease."

"And did all these cases have simple symptoms at first?"

"Every one of them, and might have been cured as I was by the timely use of the same remedy. I am getting my eyes thoroughly opened in this matter and think I am helping others to see the facts and their possible danger also."

Mr. Warner, who was visited at his establishment on N. St. Paul street, spoke very earnestly:

"It is true that Bright's disease had increased wonderfully, and we find, by reliable statistics, that from '70 to '80 its growth was over 250 per cent. Look at the prominent men it has carried off, and is taking off every year, for while many are dying apparently of paralysis and apoplexy, they are really victims of kidney disorder, which causes heart disease, paralysis, apoplexy, etc. Nearly every week the papers record the death of some prominent man from this scourge. Recently, however, the increase has been checked, and I attribute this to the general use of my remedy."

"Do you think many people are afflicted with it to-day who do not realize it, Mr. Warner?"

"A prominent professor in a New Orleans medical college was lecturing before his class on the subject of Bright's disease. He had various fluids under microscopic analysis, and was showing the students what the indications of this terrible malady were. 'And now, gentlemen,' he said, 'as we have seen the unhealthy indications, I will show you how it appears in a state of perfect health,' and he submitted his own fluid to the usual test. As he watched the results his countenance suddenly changed—his color and command both left him, and in a trembling voice he said: 'Gentlemen, I have made a painful discovery; I have Bright's disease of the kidneys;' and in less than a year he was dead. The slightest indications of any kidney difficulty should be enough to strike terror to any one."

"You know of Dr. Henion's case?"

"Yes, I have both read and heard of it."

"It is very wonderful is it not?"

"No more so than a great many others that have come to my notice as having been cured by the same means."

"You believe then that Bright's disease can be cured."

"I know it can. I know it from my own and the experience of thousands of prominent persons who were given up to die by both their physicians and friends."

"You speak of your own experience, what was it?"

"A fearful one. I had felt languid and unfitted for business for years. But I did not know what ailed me. When, however, I found it was kidney difficulty I thought there was little hope and so did the doctors. I have since learned that one of the physicians of this city pointed me out to a gentleman on the street one day, saying: 'there goes a man who will be dead within a year.' I believe his words would have proved true if I had not fortunately used the remedy now known as Warner's Safe Cure."

"Did you make a chemical analysis of the case of Mr. H. H. Warner some three years ago, Doctor? was asked Dr. S. A. Lattimore, one of the analysts of the State Board of Health."

"Yes, sir."

"What did this analysis show you?"

"A serious disease of the kidneys."

"Did you think Mr. Warner could recover?"

"No, sir, I did not think it possible."

"Do you know anything about the remedy which cured him?"

"I have chemically analysed () and find it pure and harmless."

The standing of Dr. Henion, Mr. Warner and Dr. Lattimore in the community is beyond question, and the statements they make cannot for a moment be doubted. Dr. Henion's experience shows that Bright's disease of the kidneys is one of the most deceptive and dangerous of all diseases, that it is exceedingly common, but that it can be cured if taken in time.

TOLEDO, O., Jan. 10, 1887.

Messrs. F. J. Cheney & Co.—Gentlemen:—I have been in the general practice of medicine for most 40 years, and would say that in all my practice and experience have never seen a preparation that I could prescribe with as much confidence of success as I can Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by you. Have prescribed it a great many times and its effects is wonderful, and would say in conclusion that I have yet to find a case of Catarrh that it would not cure, if they would take it according to directions.

Yours truly,

A Princely Donation.

The magnificent gift of Baron Hirsch to the Hebrew emigrant, charity and aid fund of $9,400,000, has created much comment and considerable interest in philanthropic circles.

The deed of the munificent gift which had been drawn up and signed by Baron Hirsch, had been laid before the trustees, as was a letter from the baron, instructing them to draw upon him for the amount on March 1. The gift is not hampered by any restrictions whatever, and will be immediately invested in this country.

The income of the fund is expected to be $10,000 a month, this being the sum which has been paid by the transatlantic donor in monthly remittances for over a year. Baron Hirsch merely executes part of his avowed intention of distributing that portion of his fortune which he wishes devoted to philanthropic purposes during his lifetime. The income will be devoted entirely to the relief and education of Hebrew immigrants and their chidren.

GIRLS do have some advantages, anyway! Of 500,000 girl babies born in Massachusetts, 364,222 reach the budding age of fifteen. Of the same number of boys, only 350,430 reach that age. In the happy land of New Jersey, where there are fewer factories and more peaches and sweet potatoes, both babies have a better chance and the figures stand 368,311 and 378,293.

LADIES needing a tonic, or children who want building up, should take Brown's Iron Bitters. It is pleasant to take, cures Malaria, Indigestion, Biliousness and Liver Complaints, makes the blood rich and pure.

The man who spends much time in trying to please his enemies is one of the most foolish of spendthrifts.

"WHAT AN ASS AM I!"

The ass thought himself as fine looking as his neighbor, the horse, until he, one day, saw himself in the looking-glass, when he said "What an ass am I!"

Are there not scores of people who cannot see themselves as others see them? They have bad blood, pimples, blotches, eruptions, and other kindred disfigurements. All these annoying things could be entirely eradicated, and the skin restored to "lily whiteness," if that world-famed remedy, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, were given a fair trial.

It cures all humors, from the ordinary blotch, pimple or eruption to the worst scrofula, or the most inveterate blood-taints, no matter what their nature, or whether they be inherited or acquired. The "Golden Medical Discovery" is the only blood-purifier guaranteed to do just what it is recommended to, or money refunded.

MOTHERS' FRIEND

WORTH ITS WEIGHT IN GOLD.

If a price can be placed on pain, "Mother's Friend" is worth its weight in gold. My wife suffered more in ten minutes with either of her other two children than she did altogether with her last, having previously used four bottles of "Mother's Friend." It is a blessing to any one expecting to become a mother. Geo. F. Lockwood, Carmi, Ill.

Write The Bradfield Regulator Co., Atlanta, Ga., for particulars. Sent by express, charges paid, on receipt of price, $1.50 per bottle. Sold by druggists.

"Mother's Friend" is the greatest blessing ever conferred child-bearing women. I have been a mid-wife for many years and in each case where "Mother's Friend" had been used it has accomplished wonders and relieved much suffering. It is the best remedy for pain of the breast known, and worth the price for that alone. MRS. M. M. BROWER, Montgomery, Ala.

A BIG OFFERING!

CAHEEN,

2018 AND 2020 FIRST AVE., BIRMINGHAM, ALA.

We will produce an army of bargains, and an army of bargain seekers will come so characteristic of all our announcements. No piecemeal business in this! A Wholesale Slaughter of Every Department.

We Will Have No Dull Trade.

Our business last fall was very large. We are too active to allow business to stagnate. So to prevent a stagnation we are compelled to dispose of our big stock of Winter Goods, not considering profits or cost of goods. We want to sell our heavy stock very much, so much so that the prices will be giving away prices.

FLORIDA'S BUDGET

Newsy Notes and Pointed Paragraphs.

The Marion and Citrus Phosphate company, with a capital stock of $200,000, has been incorporated at Ocala.

Hardy Phillips, who murdered DeKalb Gibbs fifteen years ago, was convicted at Live Oak a few days ago. The jury was out a day and a night and rendered a verdict of murder in the first degree, without recommendation.

At a recent sale of five thousand boxes of Florida oranges at Boston, Mass., the prices ranged from twenty-five cents to $3.15, mostly $1.25 to $2.75; mandarines $2.25 to $2.37; tangerines, $2 to $4.62; grape fruit, $1.87 to $3 50.

On account of illness, Rev. Sam Jones has canceled his Ocala appointment. A tabernacle costing $1,200, with a seating capacity of 4,500 persons, has been erected at Pensacola by popular subscription, expressly for his engagements in that place.

A number of citizens met a few nights ago of St. Augustine to devise means to induce northern tanners to avail themselves of the economy and profits to be derived from the palmetto root. A committee was appointed to confer with the tanners and to send them samples of leather tanned with the palmetto acids.

It is reported that Umatilla will soon have a broad-gauge road direct from Jacksonville to Tampa. The connection of this road with the main line of J., T. & K. W. at Seville, bridging the river at that point, is to be completed soon. This will be the shortest route to the gulf, and secures the Cuban mail for the J., T. & K. W. system.

Seventy-seven quarts of strawberries were shipped from Lawtey a few days ago. Commission men and refrigerator agents are getting ready for the season's business in shipping strawberries. The total acreage in Bradford county is considerably reduced below last year's figures, but the outlook for the growers who have severed is excellent.

The debate on the postoffice appropriation bill in congress showed a disposition to cut down largely the appropriation for expediting the mail service between Boston and Tampa, or perhaps strike it out altogether, but the committee of the whole in the house adopted that feature of the postoffice appropriation bill appropriating $280,000 for expedited mail service from New York to Tampa.

The farmers in the vicinity of Wildwood are busy planting their crops. The acreage of watermellons will be large in that section—more than has been planted several years, and the prospects for a large crop of corn, cotton and vegetables is good. Cabbages and beets are being shipped to market. It is estimated that there will be from five to eight thousand tons of cabbages shipped from that center.

Calvin S. Brice, the politician and railroad magnate, who is to give up politics and devote his attention to his railroad interests, says that the reported purchase of the Monon route is not so, but that a close alliance of that road with others he is interested in has been perfected. The Monon route is the connecting line to Florida, and now a vestibuled train from Chicago through to Jacksonville is a certainty.

More cotton was raised and marketed at Welborn this season than ever before. Just six hundred bales of sea island are already been sold, and a good deal remains on hand. The price paid this year was very low, and will not average over $70 per bale, which would make a total of $42,000 paid for the staple at this place. The market price is now 15 cents per pound, and is below the cost of making it by at least 5 cents per pound. The acreage planted this year will probably be less than last.

The Illinois Central has a corps of engineers in the field from Jackson, Miss., to Birmingham, Ala., and is also making a Florida connection. If the connection is made, the Central will have a shortcut line from Chicago and St. Louis to Florida, and will be a strong rival to the L. & N., and also the Cairo short line. This latter road is now connected from Paducah, Ky., to Paris, Tenn., and in rapid process of building to Birmingham via Florence. Three roads from the West and three from the East after the southern territory, and the increasing traffic is evidence that the present great developments of the south are being keenly watched by the railroad magnates and northern capitalists.

Home Market.

The predictions of a former bulletin of the Orange and Vegetable Auction company at Jacksonville, that for the remainder of the season each successive week would show improved prices and a stronger market, was verified in their last reports. Prices are now good, and advice is given to ship steadily as long as fruit lasts. The report further says: Throughout the country there is not a sufficient supply for the demand, a condition likely to continue. Although shipments have greatly increased, with a spring market before us there is no possibility of over supply with the comparatively small quantity on hand. Fruit that has lost its juices by reason of frost or age is not wanted, and when large and coarse as well as light, is unsalable.

Will Benefit Florida.

The Georgia Southern and Florida railroad, leased by the Seaboard Air-Line, is the outcome of the fight against the Richmond and West Point Terminal. The Terminal has made a strenuous effort to break down the successes of the Robinson syndicate. The Robinson syndicate is now paralleling the Terminal through Virginia, the Carolinas and Georgia. The only gap in a through line owned by the Robinson syndicate is from Elberton to Macon, which is now being rapidly constructed. The new through line will make a strong rival to the Terminal, and also to the Atlantic Coast line, and the three competitors' fights cannot help being beneficial to Florida and the South.

Phosphate Deals.

George C. Stevens, of the Ocala and Blue River company, sold, for Messrs. Brooks, Kirk and others, between 600 and 700 acres of phosphate land in Hernando county to an agent for Hamburg parties for $100,000. Col. Livingston and Capt. James A. McDavid sold a two-thirds interest in 5,200 acres in Levy county, a short distance south of Archer in the line of the Taliaferro and Ambler railroad, to R. L. and H. L. Anderson, R. B. McConnell, of Ocala, and Owen J. Carpenter, of Covington, Ky., for $33,000. Beauregard Jenkins sold 130 acres at Sparr to Major Eugene C. Gordon, of Georgia, for $8,000. Jenkins bought it a year ago for $800. Hon. John F. Dunn sold a half interest in a twenty acre bearing orange grove at Citra, to his brother Henry G., for $17,000.

Gathering Statistics.

J. H. Hale of South Glastonbury, Conn., a special agent of the census bureau, visiting Florida in the interest of the bureau. Mr. Hale is charged with the duty of investigating nurseries, florists' seed farms, truck farms and semi-tropic fruits His special mission in Florida is to examine the citrus fruit acreage and production, as well as the possibilities of the development of the industry. He will be in the state for some time and the results of his labors will be of particular interest and great practical value to the people of Florida, especially in the way of inducing immigration. Mr. Hale is a practical fruit grower and nurseryman himself, and occupies the important position of horticultural editor of the Hartford Courant

Thrasher at Liberty.

Judge Wigg's speech to the jury at the close of the celebrated Thrasher case was a calm, dignified and dispassionate presentation of the law. The gist of his remarks were that the defendant would not be justified in killing his assailant should it appear that he (the defendant) brought on the assault, and that it was for the jury and not the defendant to judge the reasonable grounds of apprehension. The jury was to look into all the circumstances and facts in deciding upon the necessity for the killing. A breathless silence fell throughout the room, as the jurymen were asked if they had come to a verdict, and when their foreman handed up the little slip of paper that meant so much the instant of waiting grew into a postive pain. As the words "not guilty" were pronounced a wild shout rose as of one voice from the room. Not all the cries of "Order in court" from judge and sheriff could have smothered back the first glad expression from so many sympathizing hearts. The hands of the jury were eagerly grasped by Albert Thrasher, by each member of his family and by the many friends who have stood by him during fourteen weary months of imprisonment. Once outside of the courthouse, with arms around mother and wife, he walked to his home, a free man, amid the cheers, congratulations and kindly greetings of a crowd of friends.

PARNELL'S DENUNCIATION

Of the Irish Leaders---A Bitter Speech.

A cablegram from Roscommon, Ireland, says: In his speech in Market Square Sunday afternoon, Parnell, who was received with loud cheers, said:

"It is now eleven years since I addressed you here. We were then parting the ways between Whiggery and Irish nationality. We have no need to be ashamed of the decade's record. To-day we start with another parting of ways. On the road leading to independence you are threatened with delay. I am sure there will be no delay, but if there is we shall have the proud consciousness that we have not allowed the Irish nationality to be a trading post for pettifogging lawyers. [Shouts of 'Down with Healy and Cummins.'] Men who would sell your birthright for a mess of pottage and become the kept slaves of the English party, but they have reckoned without you and their plot has been spoiled."

Dispatches of Tuesday say that the steamer Craigside, from Galveston to Liverpool, with 5,000 bales of cotton, is stranded on the beach one mile south of Hatteras inlet.

The Pottsdown, Pa., Iron Company has posted a notice that, beginning on March 9, wages of puddlers will be reduced from $3.75 to $3.50 per ton of 2,240 pounds.

La grippe has taken possession of Fort Logan and is playing havoc with the soldiers. Eighty are in the hospital, and four deaths have occurred within a week from the disease.

A slowly but surely spreading stagnation is causing considerable alarm among the weaving establishments of East Lancashire, England, teams are already idle, and in Blackburn alone 3,000 operatives are idle.

A cablegram of Tuesday from London says: The Stevedores' Union men, numbering 5,000, have been ordered by their council to strike. This step is supposed to be taken as a means of compelling other labor unions to declare themselves.

The Kansas house of representatives, Wednesday afternoon, in committee of the whole, considered house bill 707 fixing maximum passenger rates. Mr. Brown, of Harvey, demanded that the original bill be read. The clerk could not find it. It had disappeared, he said, and is supposed to have been stolen.

A special train containing the remains of Senator Wilson, of Maryland, left Washington city at 11 o'clock Thursday, for Snow Hill, Md. Accompanying the remains were Mrs. Wilson, her son and two daughters, senate and house committees, and a number of members of the Maryland house of delegates.

A dispatch from Nova Scotia, regarding the Spring Hill mine horror, says: The last body was received Thursday evening—that of Manager Swift—making in all 123 victims, including three who have died from injuries. Aid is urgently required. There are fifty-six widows, 103 fatherless children, and seven widowed mothers deprived of the support of their sons.

The National Starch Manufacturing company, of Indianapolis, has sent out a circular to be signed by dealers, which binds them to handle only trust starch, not to cut prices, and allowing them 5 per cent reduction of yearly purchases. The circular was of a confidential nature and was so worded as to appear to be a proposition from the dealers to the company.

Reports received from Dublin, Ireland, Wednesday, say that preparations have been completed for the publication in Dublin of a daily paper devoted to the interests of the McCarthy faction. The paper will be entitled The National Press, and the first number will be issued on March 7th. The McCarthyites will begin a vigorous campaign in Ireland on March 8th.

A cablegram of Wednesday from London says: The Sailors and Firemen's Union has determined to fight to the bitter end, and shipworkers generally are furious at the surrender of the stevedores. They accuse the executive council of treachery, and members of the shipping federation are elated at the triumph of their cause, and the union is proportionately disheartened.

A London dispatch of Wednesday says: Mr. Parnell, in view of the fact that the McCarthyites are sending a deputation, composed of members of the Irish parliamentary party, to the United States to collect funds, is considering, upon the advice of friends, a proposition to send Parnellites to the United States. The Parnellite delegates will represent Mr. Parnell's policy and will collect funds for its furtherance.

At New York, Tuesday, James Dougherty, the insane lover of Mary Anderson, who shot and killed Dr. Lloyd, the physician of Flat Bush insane asylum, was sentenced to Sing Sing state prison for life. The lunacy commission reported in Dougherty's case that he was the most dangerous lunatic they had ever seen. Dougherty read a long statement to the court, claiming that he was justified in shooting Dr. Lloyd.

At an open air meeting, held in Calcutta, on Wednesday, 50,000 Bengalese protested against the government's bill introduced January 10 in the legislative council, to protect child wives by increasing the minimum age of girls consenting from ten to twelve years, at which age they are to be given in marriage. The Bengalese oppose the change, contending that the Hindoo scriptures authorize that marriage be consummated before twelve years of age.

A fire that started in the Clare-Speaker paint works at Minneapolis, Minn., Thursday night proved to be the most disastrous one the city has experienced in years. The greatest damage was done to the Lumber Exchange, a magnificent twelve-story block at Fifth street and Hennepin avenue. The Robinson block and the Russell block, the latter owned by Sol Smith Russell, the actor, were completely ruined. The total loss foots up $162,000, practically all insured.

The barbed wire manufacturers of the United States, after several months of struggling, have come to an agreement among themselves. At a meeting Wednesday, at Chicago, of their new organization—the Columbia Patent Company—papers for the transfers of the Washburn and Moen patents were all prepared and signed. This settles the matter, so far as members of the company are concerned. At an early date a committee will be appointed to confer with Washburn and Moen and, if possible, effect the transfer.

Superintendent Porter, of the census bureau, has prepared an introduction to a bulletin on the private indebtedness of individuals and corporations of the United States. The report issued is for Alabama and Iowa. In 1889, number of acres mortgaged were 1,744,420; total number of acres in the state, 32,985,600; per cent. acres mortgaged, 5.3, Interest charges range from 1 to 40 per cent. rate. The average life of mortgages with no allowance for partial payments is computed to be 2 73 in Alabama.

TO INVESTIGATE

Modern Spiritualism by Scientific Methods.

A movement has been started in Boston by men of high standing for the investigation and study of psychic phenomena. The prospectus states: "We only propose to concentrate our efforts on the narrower field of spiritualism, pure and simple. That modern spiritualism has votaries in all parts of our country, and that it has the power to influence the thought and action of those who believe its teachings, are indisputable facts. Is the movement founded on fact or delusion? Does the world know? And if it does not know, is it not time for a few truth-loving persons approaching the subject in a serious frame of mind to investigate it, guided by purely scientific methods? "Is it not in the best interest of humanity that this matter should be settled if possible, once for all? If it be delusion, the contagion has spread quite far enough and done damage enough already. If there be truth, the world would be benefited by the knowledge. With this feeling, the signers have decided to issue this appeal, asking you to join with them in carrying on the work of the Psychic Investigation Association."

SENATOR WILSON DEAD.

After a Brief Illness Death Relieves Him.

Senator E. K. Wilson, of Maryland, who has been indisposed for the past two days, died suddenly at the Hamilton house, in Washington, Tuesday evening from heart failure. Senator Wilson's illness was of short duration. He had been a sufferer from chronic gastro-intestinal catarrh, which finally led to heart depression, ending in death as stated. The sergeant-at-arms of the senate was immediately notified of Senator Wilson's death. He at once took charge of the body and gave directions to an undertaker to embalm the body, which was done. He also notified Vice President Morton of the senator's death.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

NEWS NOTES AND ITEMS FROM THE NATIONAL CAPITAL.

Without warning the republicans sprung the direct tax bill on the house Tuesday morning, and passed a resolution for the previous question at 2 o'clock. The southern democrats made a sturdy fight against it, but to no purpose. They then attempted to have adopted an amendment providing for the supreme court to decide upon the legality of the cotton tax, and as to whether or not it should be refunded. But the republicans would not hear to it, and rushed the direct tax bill through by a vote of 172 to 101. The bill has already passed the senate, but as there are a few immaterial amendments, it will go back. President Harrison has, however, agreed to sign it, and it will become a law. This is the bill which passed the last congress at just about this stage. Mr. Cleveland, however, vetoed it, sending a message to congress censuring it for the passage of such an "unjust and unfair measure." The bill refunds to the various states the amounts paid by individuals of each state into the public treasury on account of the direct tax levied on land in 1861, for the purpose of raising money to carry on the war. Many of the states paid all the tax levied upon them, while others paid comparatively little. The bill refunds all that was paid, and appropriates over $15,000,000 for that purpose. Congress, however, refuses to refund the tax levied and collected on cotton about the same time, and for the same purpose. Under the bill, New York gets over $3,000,000, Ohio $1,500,000, Pennsylvania about the same, Georgia gets $117,982, Alabama, $22,520; Arkansas, $154,701; Florida, $4,766; Louisiana, $385,886; Mississippi, $113,324; North Carolina, $377,452; South Carolina, $222,356; Tennessee, $392,004; Texas, $180,841. The money must be accepted by resolution of the various state legislatures. Then it will be paid to the governors. It is not possible that any state will decline to accept its quota.

Ex-Governor Foster's nomination to be secretary of the treasury, was confirmed in executive session Tuesday afternoon. An effort was made Monday to confirm the nomination, without sending it to the committee, but Senator Teller objected on the ground that such a formality had never been dispensed with, except as a matter of courtesy, when the nominee was an ex-senator. As a matter of fact there was mischief afoot when the nomination went over. The silver senators from the west, who want to harass the president as much as possible, got up a scheme to reject the nomination, and agreed to deliver twelve votes against his confirmation, which, with the democratic votes, would have been enough to defeat it. But the democrats refused to co-operate in such a conspiracy.

At its Wednesday evening session, the house went into committee of the whole on the agricultural appropriation bill. That congress was drawing to a close was manifest. There was a large number of members in attendance, and the scenes incident to the closing of a session were not absent. The best of humor prevailed, but even a member who addressed the chair was laughed at, irrespective of party lines. The disorder was great and incessant, and the chair was utterly unable to prevent it. Again and again he appealed to the members to preserve order, but his appeals, as well as the strong strokes of the gavel, were unavailable. As the hour grew later, the proceedings became more noisy, and it was with extreme difficulty that the chairman preserved the semblance of order. The scenes were not creditable to the dignity of the house. Consideration of the agricultural bill having been concluded, the committee of the whole resumed consideration of the general deficiency bill. The house passed the agricultural appropriation bill, but without disposing of the general deficiency bill, at 11 o'clock adjourned.

NOTES.

The senate has confirmed the nomination of Emerson Etheridge as collector of customs at Memphis, Tenn.

The house, on Wednesday, after a long discussion, adopted by a vote of 139 to 114, the resolution making the shipping bill the special order for Thursday and Friday. The immigration bill was then passed.

President Harrison, on Thursday, appointed Jim Hill, the colored man who contested General Catchings' seat in the congress, to be postmaster at Vicksburg, Miss. Vicksburg is the largest city in Mississippi. The postmaster's salary is $2,500.

The contested election cases in the house since 1869 have cost the government $600,000. This congress has been more expensive in this respect than any of its predecessors. The cases already settled involve an expense of $79,000, and three remain on the list undisposed of.

The subsidy bill provides a subsidy for every American vessel engaged in the foreign trade sailing to a foreign port 500 miles distant from the port from which it sails. The subsidy is given in proportion to the tonnage of the vessel, and the same amount is paid the vessel for each trip, whether she sails loaded or in ballast.

Secretary Foster was at the treasury department all day Thursday, familiarizing himself with his new duties and making the acquaintance of the other officials of the department. His callers were so numerous that he had to devote himself almost entirely to them, and he requested Assistant Secretary Nettleton to sign all the official mail as acting secretary.

The loss of Wednesday, by the senate will necessitate all the more haste in the consideration of appropriation bills. To avoid an extra session the legislative day of Saturday will have to be continued so as to embrace Sunday. The house Thursday morning proceeded to take up the shipping subsidy bill. No raid on the treasury has been so throughly backed since Dick Irwin and his pals succeeded in passing the Pacific Mail steal. Even doorkeepers and messengers who claimed to have influence with the members, drew thousands. If reports are true, the lobby behind this subsidy scheme, while not so brazen as the Pacific gang, have all the money they want, and the contingent fees will be enormous if the measure passes. The lobby claims to have polled the house and that the measure is safe.

There was a considerable breeze in the house Wednesday afternoon during the discussion of the agricultural appropriation bill. Mr. Funston, of Kansas, took occasion to make an attack upon Mr. Butterworth, of Ohio, charging him with taking more time to collect his salary as secretary of the world's fair than he devoted to working in the interest of the agricultural classes, and attending to his congressional duties. Immediately members crowded around to hear Butterworth's reply, cheering Funston on in order to get up a row. Both men being republicans the democrats were anxious to encourage the fight. In his reply Mr. Butterworth said that as chairman of the agricultural committee, Funston had neglected the interest of the farmers; that while a half million of them were urging him to call up the option bill, since the beginning of this congress he had not even moved in that direction, but stood trembling like an aspen leaf under the cower of the speaker. He was too cowardly to do his duty, but still was posing as the friend of the farmer. Funston flew into a rage and shook his fist at the Ohioan. For a time there was great excitement, but it soon quieted down. There were many spats of this kind during the evening, the house being in a bad humor. Consequently the bill was not finished.

HEGIRA OF FARMERS

From Illinois---Bound for Points Farther West.

A dispatch from Bloomington, Ill., says: The largest exodus from central Illinois in its history, perhaps, occurred Wednesday. One hundred and fifty people, comprising twenty-five families, left McLean county on three trains of thirty-three cars, of which seven were passenger coaches, taking with them their household goods, farm implements and live stock. Two trains go to Webster City, Iowa, and the other is bound for Nebraska. The emigrants comprise some of the best citizens of that section. They are induced to leave because of the cheap lands of other states. A large proportion of them were renters, although many sold their farms. Additions were made to the train at other points along the route, and in all about two hundred people have left the state.

GETTING READY.

Order is being rapidly developed out of chaos in the world's fair matter, and what has heretofore appeared confusion now assumes definite form and purpose. The managers of the affair have observed so much discreet secrecy that the abandonment of the lake front site came in the nature of a total surprise to the people, yet at no time for many months, it would appear, has the placing of any building on the lake front park been contemplated. The instructions given to the board of architects at the time of its formation did not provide for any of the buildings being placed there, but a contemplated grouping of all the named buildings, to the south of Midway Plaisance, in Jackson park, the land north of the plaisance being reserved for miscellaneous structures, such as state buildings.

SOUTHERN BRIEFS

DAILY OCCURRENCES IN THE SUNNY SOUTHLAND

Curtailed into Interesting and Newsy Paragraphs.

The Tombigbee river, in Alabama, is on a rampage, and the whole country for many miles on each side of the river is flooded.

The North Carolina Choral Association, composed of musical clubs in various towns in the state, will hold their second annual festival in Charlotte May 5th and 6th.

It is reported that the family of the late Rev. C. K. Marshall, of Vicksburg, Miss., has decided to present the library of the deceased to Millsaps College. It is said to be one of the most valuable collections of books and papers in the South.

It has been decided to unveil the confederate monument at Jackson, Miss., on June 3, which is the birthday of Mr. Davis. Miss Winnie Davis will be present. Adjutant General Henry has issued orders to the various companies composing the State National Guard to be ready to participate in the ceremonies.

A Norfolk dispatch says: A tornado swept over Sunbury, Gates county, N. C., Saturday night. The storm swept a space half a mile wide and carried everything with it. Two children were killed near Sunbury, and it is reported that a number of people were killed further east. The wires are all down and details are lacking.

In the United States court, at Charleston, S. C., Wednesday, judgment was rendered in favor of P. P. Dickerson, of New York, for $6,762 against the York township, in York county. The suit was brought to force the payment of the coupons of bonds issued in aid of the Charleston, Cincinnati and Chicago railroad.

A Raleigh dispatch says: There has been a long contest between several places for the location of the new colored agricultural and mechanical college. Thursday evening the committee decided to accept the proposition to locate the college at Louisburg, with a proviso that the proposition is bona fide. Louisburg offers $6,500 in cash, lands stated to be worth $10,000, and the necessary buildings.

Judge Morrison, of Scott county, Virginia, has appointed A. B. Harris, of New York, receiver of the Chicago, Cincinnati and Charleston railroad. Suit was brought by Newman Erb and others to recover an indebtedness of $200,000. Chancellor Smith has appointed a receiver for the Tennessee portion of the road; Judge Bond for the South Carolina portion, and proceedings have been titinsuted in Kentucky.

A Los Angeles telegram says: Up to noon, Wednesday, reports showed that at least six persons lost their lives in the flood. The family of Charles Watts is also missing from near Downey and is supposed to have been drowned. The Wells family, consisting of man, wife and babe, were drowned at Duart and the bodies of two Mexicans were found in the same neighborhood. S. Lawrens was drowned at Wilmington, while trying to rescue some cattle.

At a meeting of the Commercial and Industrial Association of Montgomery, Thursday night, it was unanimously resolved "that the Commercial and Industrial Association of Montgomery, Ala., approve and recommend the passage of one of the bankruptcy bills, known as the Torrey bill, now pending before the congress of the United States; and that our senators and representatives are hereby respectfully urged to support the same, and that copies of these resolutions be forwarded to them."

The state convention of the United Mine Workers of America convened at Birmingham, Ala., Wednesday, in secret session. Delegates were present from all over Alabama. The meeting was for the adoption of the scale of prices recently decided upon by the national convention in Columbus, O., which calls for a considerable advance of the present wages. It is understood that the mine operators will be asked to pay the advance when the present contracts expire in July. The enforcement of the demand will mean another miners' strike.

A Two-Bottle Hour-Glass.

The people of Sangir, an island of the Malay Archipelago, keep time by the aid of an hour-glass formed by arranging two bottles neck to neck. The sand runs out in half an hour, when the bottles are reversed. Once by them a day is struck, the whole being twelve times marked with notches from one to twelve, with a hooked stick, which is placed between the hour last struck and the next. One of these glasses keeps the time for each village, for which purpose [illegible]

The best recipe for going through life in an exquisite way with beautiful manners is to feel that everybody no matter how rich or how poor, needs all the kindness they can get from others in the world.

An Exchange says: "A man crossed the Mississippi river, recently on ice, and fearing it too thin, began to crawl on his hands and knees in great terror, but as he reached the opposite shore, all tired out, another man drove past him gaily sitting on a load of pig iron. And for all the world that is just the way most of us Christians go to the heavenly Canaan, trembling every step lest the promises break under our feet, when really they are secure enough for us to hold up our heads and sing with confidence as we march to the better land.

Indianapolis News: It must be admitted that Cleveland's courage is superb. One may not like the man, but he cannot deny him this quality. Four years ago, with the presidency in the balance, he struck the blow squarely for tariff reform. Now he as squarely strikes at the quite as prevalent popular belief, perhaps, of free silver. Ingersoll's famous figure of the Plumed Knight throwing his shining lance full in the face of the foe could better apply to Cleveland than to Blaine. Clearly Cleveland would rather be right than be President. Doubtless he would rather be both; but with the nomination popularly supposed to be awaiting him on a silver platter, he declares his unconpromising hostility to the free coinage doctrine. It is a splendid illustration of courage.

Mr. W. O. Monroe, editor of the Eutaw Whig, has been appointed circuit clerk of Greene county by Governor Jones to fill a vacancy. We are just beginning to realize what a liberal and broad-minded statesman we have in the Governor's office. Probably the sharpest adverse criticism during the whole of the last campaign appeared in Mr. Monroe's paper against Col Jones, and the Governor has shown by this appointment that he is not over-sensitive to public criticism. The effigy-burners of our very modern Athens might well consider this fact, and later on they may expect to hear of a second "fall of Athens," in this great western world where the money-devil is worshiped with grand sacrifices of effigy Governors and "cuss" words unmentionable.

Public Laws.

The legislature passed 619 bills 10 of which were vetoed by the Governor, leaving 609. The majority of these are local bills.

The bill known as the lottery bill which became a law fixes fines ranging from $25 to $100 against any person concerned in "setting up or carrying on any lottery or device of the kind, or any gift enterprise or any scheme in the nature of a lottery or gift enterprise."

The bill to prevent cock-fighting, publicly, fixes a fine of not less than twenty nor more than fifty dollars for each offense.

A mistaken impression prevailing concerning the new road law passed by the legislature we again call attention to the fact that it is not a general law. It applies to thirty-nine counties and Chilton was exempted from its provisions with 26 other counties. Whether it will be utilized by the counties to which it applies is a question left with the boards of revenue by the law.

AN ACT

To Establish an Industrial School in the State of Alabama for the Destitute Children, Descendants of Confederate Soldiers and Sailors.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Alabama, That there shall be established in this State an institute for the education in the industrial arts and sciences of the destitute children of the State, who are descendants of Confederate soldiers and sailors. Such institution shall be located at Springville, in St. Clair county, in this State, and shall be known as the Confederate Children's Industrial School.

AN ACT

To Provide for the refunding of Taxes improperly Paid.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Alabama, That any person who by mistake paid taxes which he ought not to have paid may apply to the Commissioners' Court to have said taxes refunded to him; and upon such application being made and the mistake or error being established to the satisfaction of said Court, they may direct and order the Probate Judge to draw a warrant on the County Treasurer in favor of such person for the amount of county taxes shown to have been so improperly paid; and said court may authorize the Probate Judge to certify to the Auditor such mistakes and the amount of State taxes which have been so improperly paid; and on the presentation of such certification to the State Auditor, and that officer shall find the same to be correct in fact and amount; it shall be the duty of the said Auditor to draw his warrant in favor of such person on the State Treasurer for the amount so certified by the Probate Judge, which warrant on both the State Treasurer and the County Treasurer shall be paid by them respectively out of any funds in either of said Treasuries not otherwise appropriated.

Approved February 18, 1891.

AN ACT

To make an appropriation for the benefit of the State Agricultural Society for the year 1891.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Alabama: That the sum of two thousand five hundred dollars ($2,500) be appropriated out of any money in the treasury to the credit of the Department of Agriculture, for the use of the Agricultural Society of the state, for the year 1891, to be used by the Executive Committee of said society for promoting the objects of said society.

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, That said sum may be drawn by the President of said society upon the order of the Commissioner of Agriculture upon the State treasury.

Approved February 18, 1891.

[OFFICIAL.] J. D. BARRON, Secretary of State

AN ACT

To prohibit Pools, Trusts, or Combines to regulate or control the prices of produce, goods, Wares or Merchandise in this State.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Alabama, That any person, corporation or association of persons who shall, within this State, engage or agree with other persons, corporations or association of persons, or enter into, directly, any combination, pool, trust or confederation to regulate or fix the price of any article or commodity to be sold within this State for speculation; and any person, corporation, or association of persons who shall enter into, become a member of or a party to, any pool, agreement, combination or confederation to fix or limit the amount or quanity of any article or commodity to be produced or manufactured, mined or sold in this State, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to indictment and punishment as herein provided.

Sec. 2. Be it further enacted, That it shall not be lawful for any corporation chartered under the laws of Alabama, or for any officer, stockholder, agent or employee of such corporation to enter into any combination with other persons or corporations, the purpose and effect of which are to place the management or control thereof in the hands of others, with the purpose or intent to limit or fix the price, or lessen the production or sale of any article of commerce, use or consumption or restrict or diminish the manufacture of such article.

Sec. 3. Be it further enacted, That any person or corporation violating the provisions of section one or two of this Act, within the State of Alabama, shall on conviction, be fined not less than five hundred dollars, nor more than two thousand; at the discretion of the jury trying the same; and any officer, agent or employee of such corporation guilty of violating either of the two preceeding sections of this Act may be imprisoned, in addition to the fine, not less than six months nor more than twelve months for every such offense; Provided, That nothing in this Act shall prevent the producers of agricultural products from holding the same for high prices; and provided, further, That nothing in this Act shall prevent the producer of any article of food or commerce from holding the same for high prices, provided he does not combine or confederate with others thus to raise or lower prices.

Sec. 4. Be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Judges of the Circuit and City Courts to give this Act in special charge to the several grand juries of the State.

Approved February 7, 1891.

He is Not Here.

From The Cumming, Ga., Clarion.

The man who could run a newspaper to suit everybody went to heaven long ago.

Representative Northington has a communication elsewhere. We havn't space to reply to it. We will state, however, that he is in error when he says our criticism was based upon the assumption that he opposed the survey in question. The quotation which he makes from our article is enough to show that our criticism was upon those who opposed the increased appropriation, as we think the additional $2,500 will prove a wise and remunerative investment for the State. Two-thirds of the house of representatives thought likewise, and the increase asked for was granted. The recent discovery of oil in north Alabama and coal and iron near Mobile, should convince any one that the mineral and geological possibilities of this section are illimitable. Mr. N. admits that such discoveries benefit all the tax payers. That is even more than we claimed, when we said that "the farmers reaped their proportion of the benefits." The VIEW made no such proposition as he alleges. He should read its article again, and he will discover that his communication was not called for by anything in the article. His explanation of his vote is full and explicit, but unnecessary. The castigation part of our article was confined to Mr. Brewer's "watch-dog of the treasury" hobby, and would hit only those who aspire to that distinction. We are not well enough acquainted with Mr. Northington's political history to place him in that category, and did not do so for that reason. We merely mentioned how he voted on an important public measure, in compliance with a written request which he made of us in the early part of the session.

Verbena, Ala., Feb'y 25, 1891.

MR. EDITOR:—In your issue of the 12th inst., you state among other things "A bill has passed making an appropriation of $7,500 for continuing our present State geological survey. An amendment was offered cutting the appropriation down to $5,000. Mr. Northington supported the amendment as did also Mr. Brewer, of Lowndes."

Now, Mr. Editor, when you undertake to give me a whipping over the shoulders of Mr. Brewer, I do object to receiving it after that style. I much prefer to receive it direct. Your whole argument is based upon the assumption that I opposed the geological survey by the State, which assumption was and is wholly false. The legislature has usually appropriated $5,000 for that purpose and no one objected to that amount. It was $2,500 additional that was objected to. Gov. Jones had sent in a special message, cautioning the Legislature about making extra appropriations, &c. Besides the State geologist is a personal friend, and I had conversed with him on the subject, and he told me that the $15,000 appropriation was sufficient to carry on the geological survey as he had been doing in the past, but he wished to start out another surveying party, was the reason for asking for the additional $2,500. With a depleted treasury and the caution of the Governor before me, I did not think it the time to make additional appropriations to commence new lines of survey. You can never establish the proposition that farmers as a class are benefitted by the geological survey. I do not suppose there is one farmer in twenty, who owns coal or mineral lands, then would it be just to tax the nineteen farmers to develop the coal or iron of the one farmer? The only ground upon which it can be sustained, and I think this is sufficient, is that it benefits all the people of the State, by developing the wealth of the State, and lessening the rate of taxation.

Yours Truly,
G. A. NORTHINGTON.

A New Word for the Dictionaries.

McKINLEYED—Past participle of the transitive—McKINLEY—to raise, to advance to increase.

This word, which will probably be found in forthcoming dictionaries, is composed of the Gaelic or gall-ic word McKinley, with the participal ending "ed," denoting that which is gone—especially up.

Testimony is being taken in the contested election case in the Fourth District at Greensboro, and the Watchman tells of an interesting incident which occurred, giving a negro's reasons for belonging to the republican party, which is about on a par with all their other reasons therefor. It says:

The work of taking testimony in the McDuffie-Turpine contested election case is still progressing in Greensboro. Commissioner T. E. Knight, before whom the evidence is being taken, says that two of McDuffie's most intelligent witnesses were asked why they belong to the Republican party, and they stated that it was because that party was in favor of a high tariff. Being asked how that benefitted them, they said a high tariff gave this country free trade with England, and thereby made goods cheap.

The Public Roads.

Before the assembly of the Legislature which has just adjourned, no question of public importance was ever more thoroughly discussed or had such unanimity of popular favor as was the necessity for an improvement of the public road system and the demand for a change in the present laws was made by the press and people in all parts of the State. A joint committee consisting of some of the ablest and most practical senators and members considered the subject carefully, heard argument on many different plans, but none could be devised which would be generally received, and many counties were excepted from the bill which was finally passed. Those counties trying it may find it so satisfactory as to induce all to accept it two years hence—anything to secure good roads is our motto.—Montgomery Advertiser.

Some Words to the Wise.

[Las Vegas (N. M.) Optic.]

A newspaper is the largest factor in the development of any city; but no newspaper can be a success without the backing of the community in which it is published.

The newspaper is the reflection of the community in which it is published. All thinking men realize this fact; and the man who is contemplating removal to a new community had rather have several copies of the paper or papers published in that community, from which to get a correct idea of the place, than to have any number of boom pamphlets and immigration documents. The latter are made for a set purpose; and whether the writers desire it or not, such purpose will tinge the facts set forth in the boom article. The picture drawn will be like a painting—every one will recognize the likeness; but the skill of the artist will be employed to make it what he would have it be, rather than what it really is. All know these facts, and consequently all thinking people receive immigration and boom literature with many grains of salt.

The local paper is not and cannot be opened to this suspicion. It is the reflection of that community in its actuality and daily life. It is not the painting, in which the ideal of the artist is ingeniously blended with the general outlines of the reality; but it is the photograph, caught from nature's own self, with all things in due order and proper proportions—nothing introduced which is not there, nothing omitted which is there. Such is, and must be the local paper—an epitome of the life, happenings, character, resources, advantages, thoughts, of the community in which it is published. The observant reader by the perusal of its pages from week to week can form his own opinions of the climate, the healthfulness, the morality, the intelligence, the business activity, the prices, the natural and acquired advantages—in a word, he can form a correct idea, of the place, and knows for himself whether it is the place to which he desires to migrate.

LOCAL LACONICS.

Mrs. W. L. Sampey is visiting relatives in Tuskegee.

Mr. and Mrs. Dr. Green, of Montgomery visited relatives here this week.

Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Briggs have returned home after a visit to Prattville.

Mr. and Mrs. Timberlake, of Louisville, are visiting the family of Mr. W. H. Foshee.

Miss Anna Logan, of Verbena, visited Miss Nannie and Delaney Duke, of this place, Monday.

The first snow of the winter with us fell Thursday last. The ground was so wet it melted as fast as it fell.

Mrs. W. R. Robinson has moved into Mr. John Aldridge's new house next to Mr. W. L. Sampey's residence.

We learn that Mr. J. C. Woolley, formerly of Clanton and Helena, is now with the Birmingham Tea and Coffee Co.

"A railroad engineer has invented a pump with which to squirt water on deaf persons who walk on railroad tracks."—Illinois Deaf-mute Advance.

Married, at the residence of the bride's mother near Clanton, on the 4th inst., Mr. Ben Keel and Miss Georgia Lowe. Squire A. G. Dake officiated at the ceremony in his usual impressive manner.

Come! Come!! Come!!!

Come to the Courthouse Friday night March 13, for the Baptist ladies are going to give a supper that will please everybody. The money made will be appropriated towards building a new Baptist Church in Clanton—a thing much needed.

Rev. J. M. Kailin, formerly of Maplesville, has taken charge of the Linden and Jefferson Baptist Churches in Marengo county as their pastor. The good wishes of his old time friends in Chilton go with him.

The Southern Lumber Manufacturers' association met at Memphis on Wednesday and continued in session on yesterday. Alabama is well represented by some of her leading saw mill men, among them Mr. W. W. Wadsworth, of Autauga county, who operates large mills on the Louisville and Nashville road. The Memphis Commercial gives the portraits of some of the leading figures in the association, and among them is Mr. Wadsworth. He makes a handsome picture, too.—Age-Herald: 20th.

Mr. Editor, as you did not publish my other letter I will try again. My father has been a subscriber for your paper for nine years, and is still taking it. It is always the first paper to be read.

We are having some bad weather now, and farmers have done but little towards making a crop.

There have been several cases of la grippe and some of measles here lately.

Prof. S. A. Douglas has a flourishing school at Isabella church.

We are glad to know that our young friend, Miss Mattie Lenoir, is recovering from a few weeks sickness.

Mr. Ruben Thomas is suffering considerably from the effect of a broken rib. Not long since he was leaning over the fence to get an ear of corn when the plank on which his foot rested gave way letting his full weight upon his breast. He knew not the effects of the fall until he called in a physician who after a careful examination, found that his condition was due to a broken rib.

Mr. Curtis Moore who has been very nearly blind from la grippe settling in his eyes, is now improving and thinks he will entirely recover.

Mr. William Moore has been very ill for the past week, but is slightly improving.

About one mile east from his father's, Mr. D. S. Roberson is building his neat little cottage which he and his happy bride will soon occupy.

It may be well enough to call attention to the zeal, energy and liberality of the colored Baptists of Tuscumbia, who went to work last summer and built and paid for a large brick church, the largest, we believe, or second largest in town, and half of our members knew nothing about it until it was done. This should bring shame and confusion to every church member in Tuscumbia who is not coming up to the full measure of his duty in this regard, and many of them are not. If this hits any Presbyterians, Methodists or Baptists, let them get from under fire by doing better, and right now is the time to commence.—North Alabamian.

Attention is called to the advertisement of seventy thousand acres of land for sale, by Maj. John L. Harrell, agent of the Magnetic Ore Co. These are valuable lands. Read the advertisement.

A Soft Answer.

We were married thirty-seven years. In all that time my wife never gave me a cross word. I shall never forget the first time I found fault with her. It was on a Sunday morning, when we had been married about two years. I found a button off my shirt and threw it in great anger clean across the room.

"Sew a button on there," I said, in a brutal voice.

"What did she say?" asked a small woman with snapping eyes.

"She asked my pardon, saying she had a great deal to do, and had forgot it. Her gentle words almost broke my heart. I could have gone down on my knees to ask her forgiveness. She made a different man of me."

The Best Return.

The true philosophy of advertising is to get the best possible returns for the money expended. The best way to do this is to keep the public attention constanly attracted to the advertisement. There are advertisements in New York papers and papers of other large cities, which are read by everybody while other advertisments in the same papers are only casually glanced at. Why is this? Because the advertisers give time and thought and attention to their advertisements, and make them veritable news items of business and trade. People turn naturally to them to see what is said that is fresh and interesting about those particular lines of business.

St. Joseph News: "Say, Patsy, dis yere British bloke wot died, Bradlaugh his name is, wot did dey say his profesh was? "He, oh, he's er—lemme see—he's er 'iconclast.' Ain't dat tuff? Land, if a fellow call me dat! Say, a man once called me er Caucasian, and he's er cripple now."

When you make a mistake don't look back at it long. Take the reason of the thing into your mind and then look forward. Mistakes are lessons of wisdom. The past cannot be changed. The future is yet in your power.

ALLIANCE NOTES.

NEWS OF THE ORDER FROM ALL SECTIONS.

Items of Interest to Alliancemen Everywhere.

HISTORY OF THE ALLIANCE.

The history of the origin and objects of the Farmers' Alliance, which has grown to such mammoth proportions and wields such great influence on the questions of the day, has been printed over and over again, but as new accessions to the order are constantly being made, the story will bear repetition for the benefit of new members.

The first Farmers' Alliance was organized in Lampasas county, Texas, in 1876. The objects were to resist the unlawful depredations of cattle and land thieves and bring the law-breakers to justice.

This organization was very defective. W. T. Baggett, who was a member of this organization, moved to Poolville, in Parker county, and organized the first Alliance in Parker county in 1879. The organization from the beginning rapidly spread out, and the first State Alliance was organized as Central, in Parker county, in 1879, under the name and style of "Farmers' Alliance." The name was changed to the Farmers' State Alliance in 1881. The organization continued to grow and spread throughout North and Central Texas until at the meeting held in Cleburne, Johnson county, Texas, on August 6, 1886, eighty-four counties were represented. At this meeting the declaration of purposes of the order were perfected, as follows:

Profoundly impressed that we, the Farmers' Alliance, united by the strong and faithful ties of financial and home interests, should set fourth our declarations of intents; we therefore resolve,

1. To labor for the education of the agricultural classes, in the science of economical government, in a strictly non-partisan spirit.

2. To indorse the motto, "in things essential, unity; and in all things, charity."

3. To develop a better state, mentally, morally, socially and financially.

4. To create a better understanding for sustaining civil officers in maintaining law and order.

5. To constantly strive to secure entire harmony and good will among all mankind and brotherly love among ourselves.

6. To suppress personal, local, sectional and national prejudices; all unhealthy rivalry and all selfish ambition.

7. The brightest jewels which it garners are the tears of widows and orphans, and its imperative commands are to visit the homes where lacerated hearts are bleeding; to assuage the sufferings of a brother; bury the dead; care for the widows and educate the orphans, to exercise charity toward offenders, to construe words and deeds in their most favorable light granting honesty of purpose and good intentions to others; and to protect the principles of the Alliance unto death. Its laws are reason and equity; its cardinal doctrines inspire purity of thought and life; its intentions are "peace on earth and good will toward men."

The adoption of the first declaration of purposes caused considerable confusion, which necessitated a called meeting of the State Alliance, which was held at Waco, Texas, on January 17, 1887. At this meeting perfect harmony was secured, the membership numbering over 100,000. This meeting selected delegates to meet with delegates sent by the Farmers' Union of Louisiana for the purpose of organizing a national Alliance of the States comprising the cotton belt. Those delegates met in the city of Waco, Texas, on January 18, 1887, and organized.

The Progressive Farmer (Raleigh, N. C.,) under the significant heading of "A Day of Reckoning Will Come," says: "At the expiration of the Fifty-first Congress, that body will have been in session thirteen months. What measure has it adopted for the relief of the people? It has appropriated hundreds of millions of dollars, and much of this vast sum of the people's money has been squandered. Millions and millions have gone to the erection of costly buildings for cities, towns and even villages, where they are not needed. Millions and millions are used as bribe money in the name of pensions, while the people who e honest toil produces this money cry for relief, and are consumptuously ignored. Again the sub-treasury bill was introduced nearly twelve months ago, and was securely stowed away in a pigeon-hole in the senate committee room, where it lies today. Under the rules of that body any senator could introduce a resolution instructing that committee to report that bill. Has any senator introduced such a resolution? If not, why not? Have not the people, to the number of hundreds of thousands, sent in their petitions in favor of that measure? Are the people thus to be ignored and spurned? We predict that the present Congress will adjourn on the 3rd of March, and the whole file of the Congressional Record for these thirteen months will not contain a single measure that has been adopted in the interest of the people. And do men imagine that the people will endure and suffer and toil and beg and plead forever? Do they wonder that discontent and complainings and unrest exists? We say we predict that Congress will adjourn without giving the people relief. Will it persist in 'sowing to the wind?' If so, it will surely 'reap the whirlwind,' for a day of reckoning will come."

***

The Meridian (Miss.) Standard says: "Much is being and has been said of the sub-treasury scheme. It is a bill proposed for the relief of the agricultural classes. The very fact of its proposal and the radical change it suggests in government policy, furnishes the highest evidence of the sufferings of the class it is intended to relieve. The necessity of relief to the overburdened masses of the people engaged in tilling the soil is too patent to require elaborate argument. When we see crops pledged on cruel terms in advance to obtain supplies to make them; farms mortgaged to secure debts contracted, at usurious and ruinous rates of interest, in tilling them; household goods sold for a song under the cry of the auctioneer when foreclosures of trust deeds are ordered; happy homes destroyed and wails of distress heard on every side from myriads digging the ground in the sweat of agony to secure the rations of daily bread, while capital in untold millions is piling up in the vaults of the few under the inequalities —the injustice and wrong—of a robber tariff, and the oppressions and tyranny of so-called popular government in other departments, surely it is time for men of every class and calling to come to a halt and consider what can and ought to be done to end so horrible a state of affairs.

***

The Advocate (Topeka, Kan.) says: The Southern Alliance is not strongly opposed to a third party, and will unite with the Northern Alliance at the proper time, making a solid West and South against the corporations and monopolies of the East. The Alliance third party movement will also settle the race question of the South, and black and white will vote together for the common interest of all. The declaration of the Ocala convention upon this subject is worth more than force bills, and will be far more effectual. Be patient and await developments. The world moves rapidly in these latter days.

***

The Alliance has now reached the danger line of its existence. It is too strong to be injured, and its principles are too just to be fairly and openly contested. Trickery and special pleadings on the part of its enemies are the only effective weapons that can now be used. The order should be prepared for this, and remember that unity of action and faith in each other is the only defense against such attacks. Let the membership stand together as one man, and make the fight for home and family.—National Economist.

***

For the information of our readers we give the following brief review concerning the National Farmers' Alliance that has recently been in session at Omaha. This organization was started in Chicago about the same time the Alliance was started in Texas. It is an agricultural organization, but it has no secret work. It is confined to the Western States, with its principal membership in Nebraska, Iowa and Minnesota. Its aims and purposes are about the same as the National Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union, but its methods are somewhat different.

***

Alliance Eagle (Ellisville, Miss.,) says: "The Alliance, as an organization, is neither for nor against the Democratic or Republican party, but are fighting for personal rights, and a government of and by the people. If any person or party wants to 'fall by the wayside,' let him step in the way of the Alliance. They have started out to right some of the wrongs that have existed too long already."

***

The proclamation of President Polk, authorizing the formation of a State Alliance in Iowa, is soon to be followed by like action in Ohio, the latter State already having membership to justify the call.

STRUCK BY LIGHTNING.

I was once struck by lightning, and yet am alive to tell the tale, says Captain King in the Philadelphia Press. It was late in May, 1865, a warm, beautiful, sunshiny afternoon, and when the drum beat for battalion drill, in front of the old gray barracks at West Point. The long ranks of gray uniforms, with their glistening brasses, the white cross belts, and the burnished steel of the rifle barrels that we used in those days, stood motionless as statues, while our soldierly Adjutant, Harry Hall, of Ohio, marched out with a quick, nervous step, then rung out the command that brought us with a simultaneous clash of steel to the "present" to our commander.

The sun was peeping under the visor of my shako. I remember, as we faced westward the first time, but the next thing I knew, as we were moving briskly about from one position to another, changing front on the flank company, playing into close column, forming square or "column against cavalry," as the tactics of the old war days provided, it seemed to be suddenly growing darker.

The sun was still shining, but dense, black clouds were gathering overhead, and far up the gorge of the Hudson toward Newburg the rain seemed pouring in torrents. We couldn't see what was going on overhead, because, being in ranks, it was our business to keep our eyes straight to the front, but I couldn't help noting that once or twice our Colonel glanced inquiringly aloft as though estimating whether a sudden shower was about to fall or not. Some of the visitors evidently thought one was, and began to seek shelter, but we went right on.

And now, to explain what follows, let me give you a leaf from the tactics. Two adjoining companies constitute a division on battalion drill, and the most compact formation in which a regiment can be massed on given ground is "close column by division." Then the four or five divisions are placed one exactly behind the other, and so close together that the guides on each flank are but six yards apart.

For this was how we were standing just about 5 o'clock on this warm, moist May afternoon. We had just formed "close columns by division." Each Cadet Captain, after aligning his division, had ordered "support arms," and there stood the battalion of cadets with 200 steel-tipped-glistening tubes resting on their left forearms, and in as compact a mass as you could get them, pointing straight up into a dense black thunder-cloud right overhead.

It was too much for Jupiter Tonans.

There was a crash like 100 twelve-pounders going off at once, a blinding, dazzling gleam of intense blue light, in the midst of which I saw the Colonel's great black horse fall to his knees. I felt a sudden jar along my arm. The whole battalion seemed to quiver and shake. Two cadets fell flat on their faces, half a dozen staggered out of ranks, dropping their rifles and grabbing their left arms just where the hammer had rested, and contorting their faces with odd expressions of shock and pain.

Tall Bill Butler, of Kentucky, our color-bearer, reeled to and fro an instant, the silken colors and silver-tipped lance swaying downward, but he rallied, raised them pluckily aloft, and, in another instant, except the three or four, too badly stunned to pick up their guns, and the two who had been knocked flat, every man was ready in his place; every rifle at the support (except the guides) every eye to the front, and, true to its splendid discipline, there stood the battalion of cadets. It had been struck by lightning and never flinched.

Now any one, or any two, or three, or four, out there at that time, would have had the full force of the belt and been knocked dead, but the electric fluid had been distributed over some 220 points, you see, and thus weakened. Many a fellow had a sore left arm for a day or two, and all of us, I fancy, looked a little "white around the gills" for a moment, and it took considerable coaxing to "bring to" the fellows who were flat-tened out, but in five minutes the drill was going on as though at West Point it was not every day occurrence to be struck by lightning.

How to Fold a Shirt.

Few things put a man in a temper more than a badly folded shirt, no matter how well it is laundered. There is a certain art in the method of "folding" that if carefully followed insures stiff cuffs and an unruffled front. Spread the shirt on a table or bed, fold over the two sides lengthways, so that they lie one over the other upon the bosom. Turn the sleeves back half way from the shoulders, doubling the sleeve gussets in half and allowing them to lie straight down on the folded body. Then take the whole and give it a cross fold upward, so that the lower part of the shirt which is turned over shall cover the upper part of the sleeves and bosom.—Yankee Blade.

There are thousands and thousands of wives and mothers in New York who make ends meet by sewing on overalls that pay 75 cents, shirts 60 cents, vests 95 cents, trousers $3, flannel shirts $1 a dozen. They are obliged to find their own thread for the overalls and shirts, and carry the work to and from the shop. If they take a street car one-tenth of their earnings is gone.

Big Inducement for Druggists.

The druggists throughout the country are making a specialty of handling Hawkes' Crystallized Lenses. They write that they make more money, in proportion, out of this line than anything else they carry in stock. These fine glasses have been advertised extensively for many years, and have received the endorsement and approval of thousands of the best citizens of the United States. They are eagerly sought after by spectacle-wearers every where, and it will pay druggists and general merchants to put in a stock of these goods. Exclusive sale is given to one firm in each town. The trade can be built up, and the entire spectacle business of a large section can be monopolized with these goods. Factory, Decatur St., and salesroom, Whitehall St., Atlanta, Ga. For terms and prices address A. K. Hawkes, 13 Whitehall St., Atlanta.

The largest foreign landholder in the United States is the English Syndicate No. 1, in Texas, with 4,500,000 acres.

"German Syrup"

G. Gloger, Druggist, Watertown, Wis. This is the opinion of a man who keeps a drug store, sells all medicines, comes in direct contact with the patients and their families, and knows better than anyone else how remedies sell, and what true merit they have. He hears of all the failures and successes, and can therefore judge: "I know of no medicine for Coughs, Sore Throat, or Hoarseness that had done such effective work in my family as Boschee's German Syrup. Last winter a lady called at my store, who was suffering from a very severe cold. She could hardly talk, and I told her about German Syrup and that a few doses would give relief; but she had no confidence in patent medicines. I told her to take a bottle, and if the results were not satisfactory I would make no charge for it. A few days after she called and paid for it, saying that she would never be without it in future as a few doses had given her relief." ①

HOUSEHOLD MATTERS.

LIQUID BLUEING.

USE A SOAPSTONE GRIDDLE.

The best griddles are soapstone, upon which no fat has ever been used. Lacking this, wash an iron griddle with soap and then with clean water and rub it with coarse salt upon a dry rag until it is quite smooth. Heat the iron griddle, wipe it with a dry cloth and then rub over it a piece of fat salt pork set on a fork, using as little as possible. Bake a couple of cakes to test the heat, etc.; bake the cakes brown quickly, but do not dry them out on the upper side before turning them.—Chicago News.

CHOCOLATE FROM MEXICO.

Of the many methods employed by the native Mexicans in preparing chocolate we will take that which yields a rich, creamy fluid that is both food and drink, which the writer learned from a native Mexican. The sweet chocolate, being grated, is mixed over a gentle heat with water to about the consistency of double cream, or about as thick as the old-fashioned New Orleans molasses; to this enough milk is added to reduce it to a fluid state again, about as thick as cocoa; in this condition it is allowed to boil thoroughly; just before serving the chocolate the pot containing it is removed to the side of the fire where it cannot boil; then to each quart the yelks of four raw eggs beaten to a cream are added, the chocolate stick being vigorously whirled about while mixing in the egg yelks and the possibility of boiling being avoided; the whites are first beaten to a stiff froth, and then beaten into the chocolate, until a smooth, thick, foaming drink is produced. If the sweet chocolate is permitted to boil after the eggs are added they will be sure to become hardened in little strings and lumps throughout the drink and it will be unpleasant.—Juliet Corson.

CAKES OF MANY KINDS.

New England Griddle Cakes—Add to a pint of sour milk about an even teaspoonful of soda; or enough to remove the acidity, the same measure of salt, a tablespoonful of molasses and sufficient sifted flour to make a stiff batter for baking on the griddle.

Rice Griddle Cakes—Beat soft boiled rice to a smooth paste and allow for each cupful two eggs beaten light, a pint of milk and enough prepared flour to make a batter of the right consistency for griddle cakes; heap the baked cakes on a hot plate, dust them with powdered sugar and serve them hot.

Orange Cakes—Soften white bread in orange juice with enough sugar to sweeten; to each cupful allow two yelks beaten to cream, a teaspoonful of flour mixed smoothly with a little milk and two whites of eggs beaten stiff; bake as soon as the batter can be made on a hot griddle and serve dusted with powdered sugar.

Velvet Cakes—Beat the yelks of three eggs smoothly, stir with them one pint each of cream and milk and a teaspoonful of salt; smoothly mix in enough rice flour to make a stiff batter, and finally add the whites of three eggs beaten to a stiff froth; bake the cakes on a hot griddle as soon as the beaten whites are added to the batter.

Flannel Cakes—Add a tablespoonful of melted butter to a quart of sweet milk; add the beaten yelks of two eggs and a teaspoonful each of salt, baking-soda and cream of tartar, sifted with a quart of flour; finally beat two whites of egg to a stiff froth, gently add them to the above batter, and bake it at once upon a hot buttered griddle.

Sugar pancakes—For each person allow one egg, beaten separately, adding to the yelk a teaspoonful of fine sugar, a pinch of salt, a gill of sweet milk and enough prepared flour to make the proper batter; bake the cakes as large as the pan will allow, dust them with sifted sugar, rolling each as it is done, and serve them heaped on a hot dish dashed with sifted powdered sugar.

Pink Pancakes—Soak a cupful of inside bread crumbs in the same measure of boiling milk, and beat them to a smooth batter; beat the yelks of four eggs to a cream with two tablespoonfuls of sifted sugar and half a glass of bright currant jelly; mix a teaspoonful of corn starch with the bread and milk, add the other ingredients and then the whites of four eggs beaten stiff, and bake like other pancakes; pile them high on a hot dish and dust them with sifted sugar.

A Two-Twenty Gait.

It is now more than thirty-one years since a trotting horse made a record of 2:20 or better in harness, says the Omaha World-Herald. The distinguished animal which performed the feat was the mare Flora Temple, and she trotted her mile October 15, 1859. That event made Flora Temple the talk of the country and most persons predicted that her record would never be beaten. Yet since then 375 other trotters have beaten the 2:20 record and each year the number greatly increases. In 1890 it was increased over twenty-five per cent., the number for the year being ninety-one. This wonderful increase in speed of our racing horses is one of the evidences of the marvelous perfection of modern methods. It is impossible to read a history of the turf even for a single year without being struck by the great advance, here as elsewhere. What seemed an impossibility thirty years ago was accomplished by nearly one hundred young horses last year. In view of this great increase in average speed of our racers, who shall say that the record of a mile in 2:08¼ by Maud S. will long remain the best?

Bancroft a Sun Worshiper.

George Bancroft, the historian, was almost a sun worshiper; he believed in the health-giving powers of the sun. He preferred a bed-room in which the sun poured all day. His large house on A street faced the sun; his work-room had a large window through which the sun might pour all day. The only other heat in this work-room was an occasional wood fire. Mr. Bancroft believed that the people were too afraid of out-door air, and that our overheated houses were responsible for the delicacy of our people. He was an enemy to furnace heat and to coal fires giving out poisonous gases.—New York Tribune.

Vanderbilt's Billions.

Mr. Vanderbilt was worth $200,000,000. If this sum were in standard silver dollars it would present such features as this:

Put lengthwise, dollar after dollar, it would stretch a distance of 4,670 miles, making a silver streak from New York across the ocean to Liverpool.

Piled up, dollar on dollar, it would reach a height of 355 miles.

The weight of this mass of silver would be 7160 tons.

To transport it would require 358 cars, carrying twenty tons each (this is the capacity of the strongest freight cars), and making a train just about two and one-half miles long.

In one dollar bills this $200,000,000 fortune would assume such shapes as this:

The bills stretched lengthwise would extend 23,674 miles, or nearly the circumference of the earth at the equator.

Piled up one on another, close as leaves in a new book, they would reach a height of twelve miles.

Spread out on the ground they cover 746 acres, or nearly the whole surface of Central Park, in New York City, including ponds and reservoirs.

There's a good deal of guarantee business in the store keeping of to-day. It's too excessive. Or too reluctant. Half the time it means nothing. Words—only words.

This offer to refund the money, or to pay a reward, is made under the hope that you won't want your money back, and that you won't claim the reward. Of course.

So, whoever is honest in making it, and works—not on his own reputation alone, but through the local dealer whom you know, must have something he has faith in back of the guarantee. The business wouldn't stand a year without it.

What is lacking is confidence. Back of that, what is lacking is that clear honesty which is above the "average practice."

Dr. Pierce's medicines are guaranteed to accomplish what they are intended to do, and their makers give the money back if the result isn't apparent.

Doesn't it strike you that a medicine which the makers have so much confidence in, is the medicine for you?

ALLIANCE NOTES.

NEWS OF THE ORDER FROM ALL SECTIONS.

Items of Interest to Alliancemen Everywhere.

HISTORY OF THE ALLIANCE.

The history of the origin and objects of the Farmers' Alliance, which has grown to such mammoth proportions and wields such great influence on the questions of the day, has been printed over and over again, but as new accessions to the order are constantly being made, the story will bear repetition for the benefit of new members.

The first Farmers' Alliance was organized in Lampasas county, Texas, in 1876. The objects were to resist the unlawful depredations of cattle and land thieves and bring the law-breakers to justice.

This organization was very defective. W. T. Baggett, who was a member of this organization, moved to Poolville, in Parker county, and organized the first Alliance in Parker county in 1879. The organization from the beginning rapidly spread out, and the first State Alliance was organized as Central, in Parker county, in 1879, under the name and style of "Farmers' Alliance." The name was changed to the Farmers' State Alliance in 1881. The organization continued to grow and spread throughout North and Central Texas until at the meeting held in Cleburne, Johnson county, Texas, on August 6, 1886, eighty-four counties were represented. At this meeting the declaration of purposes of the order were perfected, as follows:

Profoundly impressed that we, the Farmers' Alliance, united by the strong and faithful ties of financial and home interests, should set fourth our declarations of intents; we therefore resolve,

1. To labor for the education of the agricultural classes, in the science of economical government, in a strictly non-partisan spirit.

2. To indorse the motto, "in things essential, unity; and in all things, charity."

3. To develop a better state, mentally, morally, socially and financially.

4. To create a better understanding for sustaining civil officers in maintaining law and order.

5. To constantly strive to secure entire harmony and good will among all mankind and brotherly love among ourselves.

6. To suppress personal, local, sectional and national prejudices; all unhealthy rivalry and all selfish ambition.

7. The brightest jewels which it garners are the tears of widows and orphans, and its imperative commands are to visit the homes where lacerated hearts are bleeding; to assuage the sufferings of a brother; bury the dead; care for the widows and educate the orphans, to exercise charity toward offenders, to construe words and deeds in their most favorable light granting honesty of purpose and good intentions to others; and to protect the principles of the Alliance unto death. Its laws are reason and equity; its cardinal doctrines inspire purity of thought and life; its intentions are "peace on earth and good will toward men."

The adoption of the first declaration of purposes caused considerable confusion, which necessitated a called meeting of the State Alliance, which was held at Waco, Texas, on January 17, 1887. At this meeting perfect harmony was secured, the membership numbering over 100,000. This meeting selected delegates to meet with delegates sent by the Farmers' Union of Louisiana for the purpose of organizing a national Alliance of the States comprising the cotton belt. These delegates met in the city of Waco, Texas, on January 18, 1887, and organized.

***

The Progressive Farmer (Raleigh, N. C.,) under the significant heading of "A Day of Reckoning Will Come," says: "At the expiration of the Fifty-first Congress, that body will have been in session thirteen months. What measures has it adopted for the relief of the people? It has appropriated hundreds of millions of dollars, and much of this vast sum of the people's money has been squandered. Millions and millions have gone to the erection of costly buildings for cities, towns and even villages, where they are not needed. Millions and millions are used as bribe money in the name of pensions, while the people who e honest toil produces this money cry for relief, and are contemptuously ignored. Again the sub-treasury bill was introduced nearly twelve months ago, and was securely stowed away in a pigeon-hole in the senate committee room, where it lies today. Under the rules of that body any senator could introduce a resolution instructing that committee to report that bill. Has any senator introduced such a resolution? If not, why not? Have not the people, to the number of hundreds of thousands, sent in their petitions in favor of that measure? Are the people thus to be ignored and spurned? We predict that the present Congress will adjourn on the 3rd of March, and the whole file of the Congressional Record for these thirteen months will not contain a single measure that has been adopted in the interest of the people. And do men imagine that the people will endure and suffer and toil and beg and plead forever? Do they wonder that discontent and complainings and unrest exists? We say we predict that Congress will adjourn without giving the people relief. Will it persist in 'sowing to the wind?' If so, it will surely 'reap the whirlwind,' for a day of reckoning will come."

***

The Meridian (Miss.) Standard says: "Much is being and has been said of the sub-treasury scheme. It is a bill proposed for the relief of the agricultural classes. The very fact of its proposal and the radical change it suggests in government policy, furnishes the highest evidence of the sufferings of the class it is intended to relieve. The necessity of relief to the over-burdened masses of the people engaged in tilling the soil is too patent to require elaborate argument. When we see crops pledged on cruel terms in advance to obtain supplies to make them; farms mortgaged to secure debts contracted, at usurious and ruinous rates of interest, in tilling them; household goods sold for a song under the cry of the auctioneer when foreclosures of trust deeds are ordered; happy homes destroyed and wails of distress heard on every side from myriads digging the ground in the sweat of agony to secure scant rations of daily bread, while capital in untold millions is piling up in the vaults of the few under the inequalities—the injustice and wrong—of a robber tariff, and the oppressions and tyranny of so-called popular government in other directions, apply in time for men of every class and calling to come to a halt and consider what can and ought to be done to end so horrible a state of affairs.

***

The Advocate (Topeka, Kan.) says: The Southern Alliance is not strongly opposed to a third party, and will unite with the Northern Alliance at the proper time, making a solid West and South against the corporations and monopolies of the East. The Alliance third party movement will also settle the race question of the South, and black and white will vote together for the common interest of all. The declaration of the Ocala convention upon this subject is worth more than force bills, and will be far more effectual. Be patient and await developments. The world moves rapidly in these latter days.

***

The Alliance has now reached the danger line of its existence. It is too strong to be injured, and its principles are too just to be fairly and openly contested. Trickery and special pleadings on the part of its enemies are the only effective weapons that can now be used. The order should be prepared for this, and remember that unity of action and faith in each other is the only defense against such attacks. Let the membership stand together as one man, and make the fight for home and family.—National Economist.

***

For the information of our readers we give the following brief review concerning the National Farmers' Alliance that has recently been in session at Omaha. This organization was started in Chicago about the same time the Alliance was started in Texas. It is an agricultural organization, but it has no secret work. It is confined to the Western States, with its principal membership in Nebraska, Iowa and Minnesota. Its aims and purposes are about the same as the National Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union, but its methods are somewhat different.

***

Alliance Eagle (Ellisville, Miss.,) says: "The Alliance, as an organization, is neither for nor against the Democratic or Republican party, but are fighting for personal rights, and a government of and by the people. If any person or party wants to 'fall by the wayside,' let him step in the way of the Alliance. They have started out to right some of the wrongs that have existed too long already."

***

The proclamation of President Polk, authorizing the formation of a State Alliance in Iowa, is soon to be followed by like action in Ohio, the latter State already having membership to justify the call.

STRUCK BY LIGHTNING.

I was once struck by lightning, and yet am alive to tell the tale, says Captain King in the Philadelphia Press. It was late in May, 1865, a warm, beautiful, sunshiny afternoon, and when the drum beat for battalion drill, in front of the old gray barracks at West Point. The long ranks of gray uniforms, with their glistening brasses, the white cross belts, and the burnished steel of the rifle barrels that we used in those days, stood motionless as statues, while our soldierly Adjutant, Harry Hall, of Ohio, marched out with a quick, nervous step, then rung out the command that brought us with a simultaneous clash of steel to the "present" to our commander.

The sun was peeping under the visor of my shako. I remember, as we faced westward the first time, but the next thing I knew, as we were moving briskly about from one position to another, changing front on the flank company, playing into close column, forming square or "column against cavalry," as the tactics of the old war days provided, it seemed to be suddenly growing darker.

The sun was still shining, but dense, black clouds were gathering overhead, and far up the gorge of the Hudson toward Newburg the rain seemed pouring in torrents. We couldn't see what was going on overhead, because, being in ranks, it was our business to keep our eyes straight to the front, but I couldn't help noting that once or twice our Colonel glanced inquiringly aloft as though estimating whether a sudden shower was about to fall or not. Some of the visitors evidently thought one was, and began to seek shelter, but we went right on.

And now, to explain what follows, let me give you a leaf from the tactics. Two adjoining companies constitute a division on battalion drill, and the most compact formation in which a regiment can be massed on given ground is "close column by division." Then the four or five divisions are placed one exactly behind the other, and so close together that the guides on each flank are but six yards apart.

For this was how we were standing just about 5 o'clock on this warm, moist May afternoon. We had just formed "close columns by division." Each Cadet Captain, after aligning his division, had ordered "support arms," and there stood the battalion of cadets with 200 steel-tipped-glistening tubes resting on their left forearms, and in as compact a mass as you could get them, pointing straight up into a dense black thunder-cloud right overhead.

It was too much for Jupiter Tonans.

There was a crash like 100 twelve-pounders going off at once, a blinding, dazzling gleam of intense blue light, in the midst of which I saw the Colonel's great black horse fall to his knees. I felt a sudden jar along my arm. The whole battalion seemed to quiver and shake. Two cadets fell flat on their faces, half a dozen staggered out of ranks, dropping their rifles and grabbing their left arms just where the hammer had rested, and contorting their faces with odd expressions of shock and pain.

Tall Bill Butler, of Kentucky, our color-bearer, reeled to and fro an instant, the silken colors and silver-tipped lance swaying downward, but he rallied, raised them pluckily aloft, and, in another instant, except the three or four, too badly stunned to pick up their guns, and the two who had been knocked flat, every man was ready in his place; every rifle at the support (except the guides) every eye to the front, and, true to its splendid discipline, there stood the battalion of cadets. It had been struck by lightning and never flinched.

Now any one, or any two, or three, or four, out there at that time, would have had the full force of the belt and been knocked dead, but the electric fluid had been distributed over some 220 points, you see, and thus weakened. Many a fellow had a sore left arm for a day or two, and all of us, I fancy, looked a little "white around the gills" for a moment, and it took considerable coaxing to "bring to" the fellows who were flattened out, but in five minutes the drill was going on as though at West Point it was not every day occurrence to be struck by lightning.

How to Fold a Shirt.

Few things put a man in a temper more than a badly folded shirt, no matter how well it is laundered. There is a certain art in the method of "folding" that if carefully followed insures stiff cuffs and an unruffled front. Spread the shirt on a table or bed, fold over the two sides lengthways, so that they lie one over the other upon the bosom. Turn the sleeves back half way from the shoulders, doubling the sleeve gussets in half and allowing them to lie straight down on the folded body. Then take the whole and give it a cross fold upward, so that the lower part of the shirt which is turned over shall cover the upper part of the sleeves and bosom.—Yankee Blade.

There are thousands and thousands of wives and mothers in New York who make ends meet by sewing on overalls that pay 75 cents, shirts 60 cents, vests 95 cents, trousers $3, flannel shirts $1 a dozen. They are obliged to find their own thread for the overalls and shirts, and carry the work to and from the shop. If they take a street car one-tenth of their earnings is gone.

Big Inducement for Druggists.

The druggists throughout the country are making a specialty of handling Hawkes' Crystallized Lenses. They write that they make more money, in proportion, out of this line than anything else they carry in stock. These fine glasses have been advertised extensively for many years, and have received the endorsement and approval of thousands of the best citizens of the United States. They are eagerly sought after by spectacle-wearers everywhere, and it will pay druggists and general merchants to put in a stock of these goods. Exclusive sale is given to one firm in each town. The trade can be built up, and the entire spectacle business of a large section can be monopolized with these goods. Factory, Decatur St., and salesroom, Whitehall St., Atlanta, Ga. "German Syrup"

G. Gloger, Druggist, Watertown, Wis. This is the opinion of a man who keeps a drug store, sells all medicines, comes in direct contact with the patients and their families, and knows better than anyone else how remedies sell, and what true merit they have. He hears of all the failures and successes, and can therefore judge: "I know of no medicine for Coughs, Sore Throat, or Hoarseness that had done such effective work in my family as Boschee's German Syrup. Last winter a lady called at my store, who was suffering from a very severe cold. She could hardly talk, and I told her about German Syrup and that a few doses would give relief; but she had no confidence in patent medicines. I told her to take a bottle, and if the results were not satisfactory I would make no charge for it. A few days after she called and paid for it, saying that she would never be without it in future as a few doses had given her relief." ⑦

HOUSEHOLD MATTERS.

LIQUID BLUEING.

USE A SOAPSTONE GRIDDLE.

The best griddles are soapstone, upon which no fat has ever been used. Lacking this, wash an iron griddle with soap and then with clean water and rub it with coarse salt upon a dry rag until it is quite smooth. Heat the iron griddle, wipe it with a dry cloth and then rub over it a piece of fat salt pork set on a fork, using as little as possible. Bake a couple of cakes to test the heat, etc.; bake the cakes brown quickly, but do not dry them out on the upper side before turning them.—Chicago News.

CHOCOLATE FROM MEXICO.

Of the many methods employed by the native Mexicans in preparing chocolate we will take that which yields a rich, creamy fluid that is both food and drink, which the writer learned from a native Mexican. The sweet chocolate, being grated, is mixed over a gentle heat with water to about the consistency of double cream, or about as thick as the old-fashioned New Orleans molasses; to this enough milk is added to reduce it to a fluid state again, about as thick as cocoa; in this condition it is allowed to boil thoroughly; just before serving the chocolate the pot containing it is removed to the side of the fire where it cannot boil; then to each quart the yelks of four raw eggs beaten to a cream are added, the chocolate stick being vigorously whirled about while mixing in the egg yelks and the possibility of boiling being avoided; the whites are first beaten to a stiff froth, and then beaten into the chocolate, until a smooth, thick, foaming drink is produced. If the sweet chocolate is permitted to boil after the eggs are added they will be sure to become hardened in little strings and lumps throughout the drink and it will be unpleasant.—Juliet Corson.

CAKES OF MANY KINDS.

New England Griddle Cakes—Add to a pint of sour milk about an even teaspoonful of soda; or enough to remove the acidity, the same measure of salt, a tablespoonful of molasses and sufficient sifted flour to make a stiff batter for baking on the griddle.

Rice Griddle Cakes—Beat soft boiled rice to a smooth paste and allow for each cupful two eggs beaten light, a pint of milk and enough prepared flour to make a batter of the right consistency for griddle cakes; heap the baked cakes on a hot plate, dust them with powdered sugar and serve them hot.

Orange Cakes—Soften white bread in orange juice with enough sugar to sweeten; to each cupful allow two yelks beaten to cream, a teaspoonful of flour mixed smoothly with a little milk and two whites of eggs beaten stiff; bake as soon as the batter can be made on a hot griddle and serve dusted with powdered sugar.

Velvet Cakes—Beat the yelks of three eggs smoothly, stir with them one pint each of cream and milk and a teaspoonful of salt, smoothly mix in enough rice flour to make a stiff batter, and finally add the whites of three eggs beaten to a stiff froth; bake the cakes on a hot griddle as soon as the beaten whites are added to the batter.

Flannel Cakes—Add a tablespoonful of melted butter to a quart of sweet milk; add the beaten yelks of two eggs and a teaspoonful each of salt, baking-soda and cream of tartar, sifted with a quart of flour; finally beat two whites of egg to a stiff froth, gently add them to the above batter, and bake it at once upon a hot buttered griddle.

Sugar pancakes—For each person allow one egg, beaten separately, adding to the yelk a teaspoonful of fine sugar, a pinch of salt, a gill of sweet milk and enough prepared flour to make the proper batter; bake the cakes as large as the pan will allow, dust them with sifted sugar, rolling each as it is done, and serve them heaped on a hot dish dashed with sifted powdered sugar.

Pink Pancakes—Soak a cupful of inside bread crumbs in the same measure of boiling milk, and beat them to a smooth batter; beat the yelks of four eggs to a cream with two tablespoonfuls of sifted sugar and half a glass of bright currant jelly; mix a teaspoonful of corn starch with the bread and milk, add the other ingredients and then the whites of four eggs beaten stiff, and bake like other pancakes; pile them high on a hot dish and dust them with sifted sugar.

A Two-Twenty Gait.

It is now more than thirty-one years since a trotting horse made a record of 2:20 or better in harness, says the Omaha World-Herald. The distinguished animal which performed the feat was the mare Flora Temple, and she trotted her mile October 15, 1859. That event made Flora Temple the talk of the country and most persons predicted that her record would never be beaten. Yet since then 375 other trotters have beaten the 2:20 record and each year the number greatly increases. In 1890 it was increased over twenty-five per cent., the number for the year being ninety-one. This wonderful increase in speed of our racing horses is one of the evidences of the marvelous perfection of modern methods. It is impossible to read a history of the turf even for a single year without being struck by the great advance, here as elsewhere. What seemed an impossibility thirty years ago was accomplished by nearly one hundred young horses last year. In view of this great increase in average speed of our racers, who shall say that the record of a mile in 2:08¼ by Maud S. will long remain the best?

Bancroft a Sun Worshiper.

George Bancroft, the historian, was almost a sun worshiper; he believed in the health-giving powers of the sun. He preferred a bed-room in which the sun poured all day. His large house on A street faced the sun; his work-room had a large window through which the sun might pour all day. The only other heat in this work-room was an occasional wood fire. Mr. Bancroft believed that the people were too afraid of out-door air, and that our over-heated houses were responsible for the delicacy of our people. He was an enemy to furnace heat and to coal fires giving out poisonous gases.—New York Tribune.

Vanderbilt's Millions.

Mr. Vanderbilt was worth $200,000,000. If this sum were in standard silver dollars it would present such features as this:

Put lengthwise, dollar after dollar, it would stretch a distance of 4,679 miles, making a silver streak from New York across the ocean to Liverpool.

Piled up, dollar on dollar, it would reach a height of 355 miles.

The weight of this mass of silver would be 7160 tons.

To transport it would require 358 cars, carrying twenty tons each (this is the capacity of the strongest freight cars), and making a train just about two and one-half miles long.

In one dollar bills this $200,000,000 fortune would assume such shapes as this:

The bills stretched lengthwise would extend 23,674 miles, or nearly the circumference of the earth at the equator.

Piled up one on another, close as leaves in a new book, they would reach a height of twelve miles.

Spread out on the ground they cover 746 acres, or nearly the whole surface of Central Park, in New York City, including ponds and reservoirs.

There's a good deal of guarantee business in the store keeping of to-day. It's too excessive. Or too reluctant. Half the time it means nothing. Words—only words. This offer to refund the money, or to pay a reward, is made under the hope that you won't want your money back, and that you won't claim the reward. Of course.

So, whoever is honest in making it, and works—not on his own reputation alone, but through the local dealer whom you know, must have something he has faith in back of the guarantee. The business wouldn't stand a year without it.

What is lacking is confidence. Back of that, what is lacking is that clear honesty which is above the "average practice."

Dr. Pierce's medicines are guaranteed to accomplish what they are intended to do, and their makers give the money back if the result isn't apparent.

Doesn't it strike you that a medicine which the makers have so much confidence in, is the medicine for you?

ALLIANCE NOTES.

OFFICIAL.

National Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union.

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT.

WASHINGTON, D. C, Feb. 10, 1891.

To the Membership of the National Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union:

In compliance with instructions from the national legislative council of the National Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union, I present herewith a plan for the organization of a lecture system throughout our entire order, which was adopted by the council at its meeting in the city of Washington, Feb. 4, 1891.

I was further, instructed to designate the date on which the first meetings of the county and district legislative councils should be held. All lecturers of the subordinate bodies of our order, together with the county lecturer of their respective counties, will meet at the same time and place at which their county meeting is held in the month of April next.

All county lecturers will meet on Wednesday, the 6th of May, next, at such place within their respective congressional districts as may be designated by the State president, for the purpose of electing a lecturer for their respective congressional districts and for the transaction of such other business as may come before them.

The presidents of the States will at once designate to the county legislative councils the place at which the district legislative councils respectively will meet on the 6th day of May next, and will also indicate to the district councils at their meeting the place and the date at which the State legislative council will meet.

Believing that the plan adopted will prove an efficient and powerful auxiliary in our work as a great and active educational agency, the national legislative council cordially and earnestly recommend it to the entire brotherhood throughout the United States for immediate adoption. It is commended as absolutely essential to the success of our cause.

Let us resolve that the year 1891 shall be distinguished above all the years of our history for vigorous, active, successful work. Let our great order be thoroughly aligned on the principles we have enunciated, and assured victory will be ours.

Select the member best qualified in subordinate, county and district bodies for this important and responsible work. Have this plan read and discussed in every organization belonging to our order.

Let the watchword "Forward" pass along the lines. L. L. POLK,

President N. F. A. and I. U.

Plan for Organizing a Lecture System and Legislative Councils.

COUNTY LEGISLATIVE COUNCILS.

The lecturers of sub-ordinate bodies of the National Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union, in counties having county organizations, shall constitute the County Legislative Council, of which the County Lecturer shall be ex-officio chairman.

DISTRICT LEGISLATIVE COUNCILS.

The lecturers of the several counties composing a congressional district shall constitute the District Legislative Council, of which the District Lecturer shall be ex-officio chairman.

STATE LEGISLATIVE COUNCILS.

The president of the State Alliance, the State Executive Committee, the State Lecturer (where such office exists) and the District Lecturers of the congressional districts of the State shall constitute the State Legislative Council, of which the State President shall be ex-officio chairman.

DUTIES OF STATE LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

It shall be the duty of the State Legislative Council to meet at the call of the State president, and to provide means for the dissemination of Alliance literature among the brotherhood in their respective States, and to promote and advance the demands of the State Alliance and of the Supreme Council. It shall prescribe the term of service, the compensation for the same, and provide its payment for each of the district lecturers within the State. It shall co-operate with the National Legislative Council in all measures and methods for securing such legislative reforms as may be indicated in the demands of the national body; provided, that no State Legislative Council shall advocate any measures which may conflict with the constitution or laws of the order, or demands of the State Alliance and Supreme Council.

DUTIES OF DISTRICT LEGISLATIVE COUNCILS.

It shall be the duty of the District Legislative Council to convene at such time and place as may be designated by its chairman, within its district, to receive and consider such matters as may be communicated to it by the State and National Legislative Councils, to exemplify the unwritten work of the order, to secure and provide for the service of the lecturers, and for the dissemination of Alliance literature in conjunction with the State and County Legislative Councils for each county within its jurisdiction. It shall give active co-operation in disseminating all matter of information or Alliance literature designed for the membership, and for securing an efficient lecture service for its county; provided, that no County Legislative Council shall advocate any measure in conflict with the constitution, laws or demands of the State or National bodies.

For the purpose of organizing this system, the National President shall designate and publish to the order the date on which the county and district legislative councils in the various States shall convene. The State presidents shall designate and publish to the order in their respective States the place at which each district legislative council will convene within its district.

At the first meeting of the district legislative council, it shall elect, by ballot, a lecturer for said district, unless such lecturer has been otherwise provided, and shall report the name and postoffice address of such lecturer promptly to the State president, the State secretary and the national president, each of whom shall keep a correct list of the same.

Ottumwa (Iowa) World says: "Some of the mercenary subsidized papers of the old parties think to heap ridicule on the sub-treasury plan by calling it the 'government pawn shop.' Now, since they have mentioned it, what is the difference between a government pawn shop for wheat or cotton and a government pawn shop for storing bonds or whisky? Our kind, paternal government stores bonds and gives the owners 90 per cent of the face in money, at 1 per cent interest. The farmers ask this same government to occasionally store non-perishable products and give them 75 or 80 per cent. of the value at 2 per cent. interest. If the drones, who live off the labor of the workers, can be accommodated at a "government pawn shop;" if those who never produced enough in their whole lives to keep their worthless souls and bodies together a week can be furnished with storage for bonds and whisky, why cannot the producers of all wealth, the foundation of the prosperity of the republic, be allowed the same privilege? Why?"

Colonel L. L. Polk, the National Alliance president, has written Georgia's governor a letter in which he commends him for refusing to take part in the reception of Jay Gould. The letter is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 11, 1891.

Governor W. J. Northen: My Dear Sir—Official dignity, when supported by the dignity of true manhood, always commends itself on the approval of the American people. Toadyism in official life they condemn and despise. Please accept the cordial grasp of my right hand, after reading your letter on the Gould reception, and accept my sincere wishes for the success of your hopes and prospects.

Yours very respectfully and truly,

L. L. POLK.

The Southest Enterprise (Popular Bluff, Mo.) says: "The Ripley County Farmers' and Laborers' Union met in Doniphan last Friday and Saturday, and among much other business, unanimously adopted the platform of the National Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union, formulated and adopted at Ocala, Fla. The sub-treasury plan was thoroughly discussed, and after the imaginary "Hall-Chew" arguments were answered, it was unanimously adopted."

The Farmers' Alliance editors of Kansas met at Hutchinson a few days ago and organized the Reformed Press association of Kansas. Resolutions were passed demanding the formation of a National Farmers' Alliance party; recommending an eternal severance from all other parties; demanding that all classes of labor be accorded equal privileges in the People's party, and demanding the passage by congress of the service pension bill.

Kansas Courier (Wichita Kan.) says: "Pure Alliance reform is simply this. The organization is not fighting Democrats or Republicans; but has organized for self protection. When either party, or the leaders of either party, do not work in the interests of the laboring mass, then, through the pure reform education instilled into the minds of its members, they will receive a rebuke that will be a lesson worth remembering.

The Alliance Vindicator (Sulphur Springs, Tex.) says: "Alliance men are becoming more determined every day to stand square to the front and demand their rights at the polls. That is the place to show faith by works. Demands through petition or otherwise will never be worth an iota until emphasized at the polls by honest ballots cast for men representing measures and not party."

The Alliance Free Lance (Springfield, Ills.) says: "The question of the organization of the new party is being extensively discussed in Alliance papers. As the great Cincinnati meeting which will settle this matter does not occur for over a year, there will be abundance of time to get all the pros and cons in regard to this matter fully before the people. Let the agitation go on."

THE LINES TIGHTENING.

The Italian Suspects Identified as the Hennessey Assassins.

The Hennessey trial, which is in progress at New Orleans, devoted Tuesday strictly to the taking of testimony, and in a sitting of over seven hours about twenty witnesses were examined. A man named Politz was identified as one of the men who brought some guns in sacks to the Italian grocery store on Poydras street two days before the shooting. He was also identified as being present at the shooting, and slipping and falling while running away, his gun going into the gutter, where it was picked up the next day. Bagnetto and Scoffedi were identified as having been present at the shooting. Scoffedi was further identified as the man in the oil cloth coat, who stood at the corner and fired at Hennessey, and Scoffedi, Politz, Sincari and Natali were recognized as the men who stole away in the darkness in the direction of New Canal. The finding of guns and shells along the route taken by the fleeing murderers was proven, and the weapons identified. They were double-barrelled shotguns, with sawed-off barrels; two with skeleton stocks working on hinges, folding away into small compasses. Some of the experts in firearms testified that they never saw such guns before.

BUTCHERY IN MADAGASCAR.

Two Hundred and Seventy-Eight People Massacred.

News of a horrible massacre comes from Madagascar. Ramiasatra, governor of the province of Belanond, resenting a petition from the populace to the government to defend them from cruelties, massacred 278 persons, including men, women and children belonging to leading families. The slaughter continued for several days. The agonies of the victims were, in many cases, protracted. Sometimes their limbs were gradually dismembered, their heads were sawed off and their bodies were thrown to the dogs. The survivors were forced to erect a trophy composed of the heads of the victims. Popular fury has caused the government to announce that the offenders will be punished.

THREATENED DISASTER.

Fears Entertained at the Rapid Rise of the Mississippi.

A New Orleans dispatch of Sunday says: Concerning the condition of the levees an uneasy feeling has been produced along the lower Mississippi by the continued rise of the water. Information has been received to the effect that the present condition of the Mississippi river and tributaries threatens a disastrous overflow from Memphis to New Orleans. The main river, as well as the tributaries, are higher than at this date last year. The greatest apprehension is felt by all living in the Mississippi valley. The hard fight of 1890 is now being repeated with the rivers higher than last year, and still rising at an alarming rate.

Content.

My days have been so filled with happiness,
That should the balance of my life be spent
In naught but woe and unrelieved distress,
I still should live in sweet and blest content.

The pleasures I have tasted cannot die—
The memory of my joys must ever last;
Nor can fate wring from me one bitter cry,
Who find pure bliss in living o'er the past.

Victim of a Valentine.

"It's beautiful!" said Felix, "beautiful."

On his way to the mill where he was the director of a half a hundred hands, he had suddenly paused. The drug store was the only place in town where valentines were sold, and it was at the window of the drug store he stood. Within the cardboard box lay the article which had won his admiration. It was of blue plush. It was veiled with lace paper. There was a good deal of narrow, pink satin ribbon about it. Some artificial rosebuds were pinned in one corner, and the verse in gold script upon it said all the most diffident lover could desire to say, or have said for him.

"It would tell her everything," said young Denslow, "everything."

By the pronoun it will perhaps be perceived that there was only one woman in the world for the handsome young foreman of the Meadowlark Mills.

Through the dingy glass he re-read the lines which seemed so admirably to voice his sentiments:

"I dare not speak the love I feel,
But may this valentine reveal
The truth to you,
Whose eyes of blue
Have pierced my poor heart
Through and through."

Perhaps a critic might have protested that the verse lacked poetic excellence, that it did not possess the lilting meter of Locker, or the silvery ripple of Dobson. But Felix Denslow was not a critic. He went into the drug store.

"How do, Tom?" he said, with a friendly nod to the clerk, with whom he was acquainted. "Let me see some valentines."

Though his mind was quite made up, he glanced through the contents of the tray set before him. And then, with all the indifference he could muster, said he guessed he would take the one in the window. Suddenly he was struck with a sinister doubt. What if Effie should think it was sent by that idiot of a Dick Griffith, who was ridiculously devoted to her, and would be sure to send her a valentine? But he would not have the presumption to send one which so openly expressed adoration. That he might be considered presumptious for so doing, never occurred to Felix, which proves how unreasonably in love that young fellow was.

He threw the clerk five dollars to take the change out of, and stood leaning against the counter, knitting his straight black brows, and pulling perplexedly at his mustache. "She is so sweet," he said to himself, "no end of impudent chaps will be sending her valentines. And I want her to know this is from me. I have it! I'll write my name on the back. It isn't customary to do so on a valentine, I know. But it is the only sure way."

He took out his pencil, turned the big card over and wrote his name boldly on the back. Then he replaced it in the box, put on the lid and handed it to the clerk to wrap up. Just then a boy, breathless and scared, came tearing in.

"Oh Mr. Denslow!" he cried, "I've been a-huntin' you. There's been a accident up to the mill. Jerry Gregg, he's been caught in the machinery, an' the boss he wants you as a doctor right away."

Felix started up.

"All right. Here, Tom, address that and send it for me, will you? I can't wait."

Tom nodded.

Denslow fumbled through his pocket, jerked out a square of cardboard, and tossed it on the counter. "That's the name and address," he said.

He dashed out, and off toward the mill as fast as his legs could take him.

And Tom Dixon, with pen in hand, stood staring at the card he held. At first his look was one of blank amazement, that gradually changed to a grin. He chuckled as he copied on the ... the name and number on the card.

"Going in for her, is he? I did think Denslow was the kind ... fellow to sell himself, but one can't always exactly tell."

"Send that, Tom?"

Very peculiarly Tom acted. He winked. He sidled towards his questioner. He gave him a sly dig in the ribs.

"Yes, I sent it. Oh, you rascal! I'd never have thought it!"

"You're deucedly stupid, then," retorted Felix, in exasperation. "It has been plain as the nose on your face—and that's plain enough—this many a day. Oh, stop your guying!" And he flung out and off, leaving Tom laughing at his touchiness.

The following day was gloomy, murky, and threatened rain. But Denslow's dreams were all rose-colored. It was St. Valentine's Day. Effie Terrisford would receive his valentine. He would meet her at the dance that evening, and endeavor to discover, from her reception of him, what his chances were. The valentine would have said so much for him that, if he fancied she was not displeased, he would pluck up courage and "speak right out."

It would be hard to find a handsomer specimen of manhood than Felix Denslow, when, that evening, he got his stalwart self into his snowy linen and black diagonal.

He was a little late arriving at the hall, where the annual dance, in honor of the saint of lovers, was to be held. Instantly his glance sought and found pretty Effie Terrisford.

She was a plump girl of eighteen or twenty. She had rosy cheeks, brown hair and velvety blue eyes. And she wore a dainty new gown of creamy lace and pale gold ribbons.

How very charming she did look, Denslow thought. But she was talking with that abominable Dick Griffith. Well, he would soon take her from him. He crossed the hall to them. He bestowed a slight nod of recognition on Griffith, and then turned smilingly to Effie, and asked her for a dance.

But Effie, who ordinarily blushed and dimpled at his coming, acknowledged his greeting with a most frigid bow.

She did not offer to show him her programme.

"What?" stammered Denslow aghast, "already?"

"I only dance the square dances, you know," she said, "and I've promised two of those to Mr. Griffith, and the others to Will Davis, and my cousin."

Denslow became conscious he was staring at her in a fashion she might resent. Indeed he was dazed. She must be angry with him for presuming to send her a valentine. She probably considered it an impertinence. He did not look at Dick Griffith, but he could fancy the exultation in his little, twinkling eyes. He crimsoned, bowed, moved away.

He felt that he had made a mistake, that the evening he had looked forward to was to be a failure, and was, moreover, convinced that life—his life—was not worth living.

He passed unheeding many bright faces which would have willingly smiled upon the prosperous young foreman of the Meadowlark Mills. He found himself a secluded seat and took possession of it. He resigned ... melancholy reverie.

...How! have I found ...made you so very ...arply bland voice ...ink of sweetened ...

"I've ... ...o much to see you," she said, dropping her voice to a confidential purr, "to thank you for the charming valentine you sent me."

And she beamed upon him with an affectionate gratitude that was embarrassingly sincere.

"The—eh—what?" he stammered.

"The valentine,"—still more sweetly; "and the sentiment upon it was so so beautiful."

Denslow groaned. The truth had flushed across his brain. Some weeks previous Miss Skelton had given him the card of her restaurant, requesting that he send there any of the mill hands who wished board. For though a rich woman, as wealth was estimated in Delphos, Miss Skelton was an exceedingly avaracious one, and worked hard to add to her store; perhaps to have ample means to buy a husband if she were unable to win one. And Felix now knew that in his haste he must have flung that card to Tom Dixon, instead of the one Effie Terrisford had left at his house when she called on his sister, and which he had taken because the name upon it had been written by his sweetheart.

"I hope," cooed on Celestia Skelton, timidly lifting her eyes, "you will not think me lacking in maiden modesty if I confess that I have long hoped for, indeed expected, a revelation of the —the secret."

"Great Scott! You have!"

"Yes—Felix. And."—trying her best to blush, "I need not say that the —the affinity expressed in the exquisite verse is reciprocated."

"But," cried Denslow, making a bold break for liberty, and feeling that he must escape emeshment at any price, "I didn't send you any valentine."

"Sir!"

"I'm awfully sorry," blurted on Felix, "but I was in a rush, and I asked Tom Dixon to address the box for me, and I gave him the wrong card in mistake. I meant to send it to Effie Terrisford."

"What?" quavered Celestia, "that little snip! Why I showed her the—the valentine, and—"

"Oh, you did!"

Now the reason of Effie's coolness was apparent.

"Yes, sir. And if you consider your conduct a joke, sir, I don't, sir. It is unbecoming a gentleman, sir. Never presume to address me again, sir. Good-evening, sir!"

Off she flounced. Denslow sought out Effie. He insisted on a hearing. He explained the mistake of the valentine. He offered himself then and there. And he was accepted.

"But if you only knew how I felt," declared Effie, half tearfully, half smilingly, "when that horrid old thing was showing off her valentine—oh dear!"

"And if you could appreciate my feelings when I saw you with this detestable Griffith—darling!"

But neither wasted any sympathy on the unfortunate victim of their valentine—Miss Celestia Skelton.—[The Ledger.

A CREE INDIAN CUSTOM.

A Medicine Man's Communication With the Great Spirit.

Among the Cree Indians of Moose Mountain, in the province of Assiniboia, Northwest Territory, there exists, says Mr. Wilson, a custom strangely resembling the performance of the Davenport Brothers. It was witnessed in the spring of 1889, by Mr. Campbell, the Indian Agent at that place. An Indian named Ee-tan was sick, and the medicine man, Kapechegahbowh, at that time nearly eighty years of age, undertook to ascertain from the Great Spirit whether the patient should live or die. When Mr. Campbell arrived at the sick man's tepee, about nine o'clock in the evening, he found it crowded with Indians; and in the centre were four upright stakes, planted firmly in the ground in the form of a square, about two and a half feet apart. Around this framework were wrapped prepared skins, dry, and without any hair on them, to about six feet from the ground. Kapechegahbowh then appeared on the scene, divested of all his clothing with the exception of his breechclout, and after lighting the sacred pipe at a fire in the tepee and presenting it to the four points of the compass, and offering a prayer which lasted ten minutes, he went outside and called loudly on the Great Spirit to come down to converse with him. Then, at a given signal, Kapechegahbowh was taken and bound hand and foot by several young men in attendance. First his hands and fingers were secured with sinews; then his feet; then his arms were bound behind his back with half-inch ropes well knotted; his knees and ankles were bound in the same manner; then with other ropes he was drawn and held together in a squatting position, his knees drawn up to his breast. In this utterly helpless condition he was then placed inside the narrow, chimneylike inclosure in the centre of the tepee, the lower skin covering being telescoped upward to allow for his entrance. There was only just room for him to squat inside. The skin covering was then drawn down, the fire in the tepee was put out, all smoking was forbidden, silence was enjoined, and the tomtoming of the drums was kept up at intervals.

In the centre of the narrow inclosure where Kapechegahbowh was confined the sacred medicine stone—a smooth, oval-shaped stone about eight inches long—had been already deposited, and the bound man had a bone whistle placed in his mouth. He kept alternately blowing on this whistle and calling on the Great Spirit to come down to him, and in a very few minutes after he had been shut up there began a rapid scrabbling up and down upon the inside of the skin walls of the little prison, accompanied by a sharp barking sort of noise, and in another moment one of the ropes was thrown over the top of the inclosure, then another rope, then another, and the old man was heard calling loudly, first for the Great Spirit, then for the spirit of the sick man, to come to him. His prayers, it appeared, were answered, for soon after he was heard talking and expostulating with the Great Spirit and then the spirit of the sick man started up a lively conversation with the Great Spirit, and the end of it was the Great Spirit consented to remove the sickness from the sick man. It was nearly 2 o'clock in the morning before the performance was over, and there being no fire allowed, the white persons who had been allowed to be present were getting very stiff and cold and were glad to get back to the comforts of their own homes. Mr. Campbell on inquiry found that this custom had been in vogue among these Indians for many generations.—[New York Times.

Dashaway—Oh, that's all right. (A moment later, to the older Miss Curtis) —My dear Miss Curtis, I am going to escort your sister home; I will be back for you in half an hour.—[New York ...

A Good Old Mule.

Calera, Ala., correspondence of the Globe-Democrat: Tobe Nelson, a negro living in the lower end of this (Shelby) county, made a crop this year with a gray mule that is believed to be 44 years old. The mule has a large "U. S." brand on his right shoulder, and, during the war, belonged to Sherman's army. While Sherman was on his march to the sea this animal was abandoned near Jonesboro, Ga. The animal's shoulders and back were very sore from work, and he was unfit for further service at that time. Soon after the mule was turned adrift, he was picked up by Nelson, who cured up the sores, and by good feeding made him a first-class mule in a few months. Good judges of the mules age pronounced the animal 18 years old at that time—1864. Nelson named the mule "Cumsah," and has made a crop with him every year since the war.—The Messenger.

The Report of the Committee on Finance and Ways and Means.

Jesse Seligman, of New York has written a strong article in the North American Review against the free coinage of silver.

The above extract taken from an Exchange, brings back to our recollection the Seligmans away back somewhere in the 40's. The three brothers, Joe, Bill and Jesse came to Greene county and [illegible] ced business by peddling [illegible] their pack on their backs; in a short time they got a horse and peddled on horse back, and it was not long before they were able to go in a two-horse wagon. Having made considerable money they opened a store in the block where now the Mirror is printed, and if we mistake not in the same building. Afterwards their business increased [illegible] opened a large store on the [illegible]c square, about where [illegible]y and Brothers are doing business after a few years their business increasing they found Eutaw [illegible]nall a place for them, left after having made, it was supposed, about 300,000 dollars here. Two of them went to New York and engaged in the mercantile business, where they have prospered and are now bankers of a world wide reputation; the third went from here to California during the gold excitement, where he also became a millionaire. Such is life.—Eutaw Mirror.

Persistent Advertising.

The persistent advertiser always succeeds. His efforts may sometimes be misdirected, but his persistency will eventually lead him into right channels and help him overcome all obstacles. There no day in the year when advertising may not be profitably done. is not like any other sowing. he more out of season an advertisement is, the more noticable it s and the deeper it burns itself into one's memory. An advertisement to sell heavy overcoats and woolen blankets in July might be quite unseasonable, but you would never forget the fellow who did it. No more would you the man who would candidly advertise ice when the thermometer was 20 degrees below zero. When business is quiet and people have much leisure, they scan the advertisements much more closely than when things are rushing. At such times mediums are not crowded with advertisements, and the persistent man has the double advantage of having his advertisement more closely studied.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

To Be Cold in May.

Tuskaloosa Times.

Said an old colored woman to a Times man yesterday:

"I isn't a weather prophet, but has noticed one sign about de weather dat nevah fails."

"What is it, aunty?"

"It's des dis. Ef it thunders in February its des certain to be cold on de same day in May. Last month it thundered on four different days, and you can jest count on it fer a fac dat on de very 'dentical days in May hits gwine ter be cold. I'se telling you truft, honey an' you'll see dat I is right.

Get your blankets handy in May.

The VIEW is in receipt of a communication from the Commercial Club of Mobile asking an expression of its opinion concerning an Alabama exhibit at the World's Fair in Chicago. The VIEW is in favor of the State being represented with a full exhibit of her resources. The proposition is to call a State Convention of all interested to meet at some central point, and elect an executive committee whose duty it will be to formulate a plan for an exhibit and raise the necessary funds for the purpose. The money to be raised by subscriptions from the agricultural, mining, manufacturing and commercial interests of the State. The plan appears to be a good one, and it is hoped that it may be successful.

Correspondence From Buckshort Bete Visits the Legislature.

[Special Correspondence Greensboro Watchman.]

BUCKSNORT BETE, Feb. 22, '91.

MISTER EDITUR—I tole I would send you more bout my trip to Montgomery in my next. Ther members of ther legislater war settin behind desks in rows jes like chule boys, sum er readin, sum er writin, but ther most uv them er doin of nothin. Most generally long legged fellar rite in frunt of ther solum looking individuum on ther platform war readin sumthin from a paper which nobody could understan, but he read on all ther time, like unter ratlin peas on a raw hide, and when he stop, sum member jump up and say, "Mr. Speker, I moves ther following amendment," and er little boy wid clene face and nee britches run up and take er paper to ther long leg fellar, who read what war on ther paper. Then imediately nother member rise and say, "Mister Speker, I move to lay ther mendment on ther table." Then ther juwin begin, and every member want ter talk at same time, and ther solum man on ther platform bang on ther desk with his mallit, and say "the members kum to order." One feller say, I rise to a pint of order. The speker say, "I sustain ther pint, and that settled ther fuss, for anything relatin to pints or quarts ketch ther attention of ther members, and they be quiet in er moment. Then heap on em go out and find whar ther pint be. But they most in general finds er quart instead of er pint, which sem times turns out to be er pint of disorder, from ther way it make ther members talk and laff. It ar with haff dollar to see ther legislater purform any day.

I see er heap er fine looking fellars dressed in store clothes standin round in er circle behind the members, and I axe er ole gray hed man, who they be, and he sed, they be ther lobby members. And I axe him what they business, and he say, they tell ther reglar members how to vote. And I say "who pay em, do ther State?" Ther gray hed man look at me and say "my frien, you from ther kuntry, arnt yer?" I stratin myself up and say "I be from bucksnrot bete Hull county, and my name are Sandy Perkins, at yer service." Then with smile he poke out he hand, and say "Mr. Perkins, I glad to make yer acquaintance. I heern er you afore. You be ther correspondent of ther Watchman from bucksnort bete." "Ther same at yer service," for Sandy want gwine back on the Watchman, for nobody. He then seys to me, confidential like, "Mr. Perkins, ther legislater are composed of ther senit and ther lower house and ther lobby members. Ther lobby members dont do ther voting nur speakin, but they directs legislashun in ther interests of themselves and they friends. They tries sometimes to git they hands in ther publick treasury, an when they dus so, ther watch dog of the treasury growl and show his teeths.

Ther lobby member mity powerful, but Burninham takes ther rag offen ther bush, for she send whole trane full when she want sum bill past. I think she got more than her share of their kinder members, and I think it would be good plan to reduce her representashun, or for her to have er legislater of her own, for she nigh onto nopolise ther State legislater, and buckanort bete git no chance to have eny laws past. She couldnt have er bill past to protect ther possum from ther Koon, kase Burninham want all ther laws,—so ther members from Hail tell me.

Yourn til [illegible], Mister Edutur,

LOCAL LACONICS.

Mr. W. H. Foshee visited Montgomery on business last week.

Miss Fannie Campbell, of Nashville, visited Mrs. O. A. Duke last week.

Mrs. J. L. Sampey has returned to Clanton to make it her future home.

Mr. J. I. Cox, of Dixie, was in to see us Saturday. Sorry we were not in.

Prof. J. M. Corderie, of Jemison, was in Clanton on business Thursday.

Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Holt, of Selma, have been visiting relatives in our town.

Mr. B. H. Chesnutt, our Clanton postmaster, has added 24 lock-boxes to the postoffice.

We are glad to welcome to our town Mr. T. B. Holley, of Lowndes, who has taken a place with Mr. W. H. Merritt.

Messrs. Thos. Foshee, Robert Martin, Ben Glover and N. A. Saportas, of Maplesville, were in town last week.

W. B. Nolen, Esq., and family, of Goodwater have moved to our town, and Mr. Nolen will enter into a partnership with O. P. Bentley in the practice of law. Their office will be over the grand jury room.

Mr. J. M. Dawson showed us an old Atlas the other day which was used by Grandma Sexton when she was at school in 1817. She then being 12 or 13 years of age. It is a curiosity to this day and generation.

Cadet Ed. Givhan, who attended Clanton Academy sometime, and who is now attending Howard College, has his name on the honor roll of Howard regularly every six weeks, the intervals during which the honor rolls are made up.

Our Jemison correspondent tells us not to be discouraged on account of the rains, because our location is pretty high. That may be some comfort, but the rains will make some of us want to "climb up higher."

The continous rains have caused river towns throughout the country to suffer. At Nashville, Tenn., over fifteen hundred people were driven from their homes by the high waters of the Cumberland. Chattanooga was threatened with overflow by the Tennessee, and the cotton mills at Augusta, Ga., had to shut down. The waters are now falling.

It is to be hoped that the indigent of our county will soon have a place to call home, and that it will be home in the true sense of the term. Their houses are nearing completion.

We congratulate Mrs. Dr. Givhan and all Jemison on the return of Mr. Joe Hill and wife to their former village home.

Last Sunday morning we had a pleasant interview with Mrs. Perry, of Washington city. We regret that some of the good people failed to have it fresh on their mind that it was woman that carried the first gospel tidings of the risen Savior. Also what is said about Phebe in Romans 1st verse and 10th chapter.

Don't get discouraged on account of the beating rains as our location is pretty high.

A MOTHER.

Maplesville Dots.

We are glad the health of our town is very much improved, the grippe has at last loosened its grip.

We are glad to announce that George Washington in the shape of Mr. N. A. Saportas' beautiful horse is in our town. It is highly gratifying to have such fine stock with us.

Much fence building is going on as if farmers are in good spirits with their crop.

Mrs. Callie Allen, of Dayton, has been visiting Mrs. Glover, and Miss Willie Glover returned home with her.

Miss Jennie Wilson is visiting Miss Mary Martin.

Our vacant houses are being filled. Mr. Oliver, of Montgomery, will occupy Dr. Johnson's dwelling and store house.

Dr. Cleveland has been the guest of Mr. Crumpton the past week.

Mr. John Centell, nephew of Mrs. Gullahorn has been spending sometime with us. He has been attending school in Louisville.

Before the Empress of Austria went on her recent yeoting trip she distributed to her most intimate friends all her court costumes and her light-colored dresses. She remarked with pathos that she would never feel gay enough to wish to wear colored dresses, nor did she intend to go to any more court festivities, now that her daughter is married.

What They Knew.

The ancient Gauls used a reaping machine. Hobbs gave his name to a lock found in the tomb of Egypt.

Coins were stamped with engraved dies so far back that we have lost the record, and movable types are said to have been known to the Romans.

In all that pertains to sculpture and painting the ancients knew so much that their superiority has never been questioned, and their work remains as unsurpassed models.

We make some very fine razors at the present day, but we cannot make any finer steel than that contained in the Damascus swords and knives which the ancients used several thousand years ago.

In our schools at the present day we use "Euclid's Elements of Geometry," written by Euclid 2,200 years ago. Euclid also wrote on music and optics, antedating much which we think we discovered.

Natural gas conveyed in bamboo tubes was utilized in China centuries ago, and one of the Mongolian authors writes of boxes which repeated the sound of voices of men long since dead—an approximation to the phonograph of Edison.

The people of Tyre were such experts in dyeing that the Tyrian purple remains unexcelled to this day. The Egyptians were also wonderful dyers, and could produce colors so durable that they may be called imperishable.

The ancients were wonderful glass workers, and discovered a method of making it malleable, which we have not been able to do. They could spin glass into garments, dye it in every shade of the rainbow and etch it with marvelous skill.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh That Contain Mercury,

As mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, and acts directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure to get the genuine. It is taken internally, and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co.

Big Inducement for Druggists.

The druggists throughout the country are making a specialty of handling Hawkes' Crystallized Lenses. They write that they make more money, in proportion, out of this line than anything else they carry in stock. These fine glasses have been advertised extensively for many years, and have received the endorsement and approval of thousands of the best citizens of the United States. They are eagerly sought after by spectacle-wearers everywhere, and it will pay druggists and general merchants to put in a stock of these goods. Exclusive sale is given to one firm in each town. The trade can be built up, and the entire spectacle business of a large section can be monopolized with these goods. Factory, Decatur St., and salesroom, Whitehall St., Atlanta, Ga. For terms and prices address A. E. Hawkes, 13 Whitehall St., Atlanta.

We take pleasure in calling the attention of our readers to the advertisement of the Chesebrough Manufacturing Company, which appears in another column. This company are the original discoverers and only manufacturers of Vaseline, which is known all over the world as the best emollient, and the most valuable family remedy in use. Their goods are sold by druggists throughout the country, but we wish to caution our readers, when buying, to accept only goods in original packages, and labeled Chesebrough Manufacturing Company, as sometimes unscrupulous dealers try to substitute preparations which are of little value when compared with vaseline, and some are injurious and unsafe to use.

By sending the company a dollar by mail, the sender will receive free quite an assortment of these beautiful and valuable goods without any charge for delivery. We know whereof we write when we say the "Vaseline" Soap is a revelation.

Here is a Chance to Make Money.

I bought a machine for plating gold, silver and nickel, and it works splendid. When people heard about it they brought more spoons, forks and jewelry than I could plate. In a week I made $25, and in a month $77. My daughter made $18 in five hours. You can get a Plater for $3 from the Lake Electric Co., Englewood, Ill., and will, we trust, be benefited as much as I have been. A READER.

HOUSEHOLD AFFAIRS.

REMOVING THE ODOR OF CAULIFLOWERS.

A half teaspoonful of cooking soda, stirred in with the salt water will prevent cauliflower from sending out the unpleasant odor when boiling. Brussels-sprouts and cabbage, treated in the same way, can be cooked with open kitchen doors, and without fear of the odor. The soda does not in any way destroy the delicacy of the vegetables' flavor. No remedy is offered for counteracting the ungrateful onion-smell except don't have them. Their flavoring is not worth the unhappiness a sensitive person suffers after cooking and eating them.—New York World.

TO AERATE MILK.

Unaerated milk is said to be a great enemy of infants and one special cause of cholera infantum. The process of aerating milk is very simple, and consists in allowing the milk to flow from one receptacle to another in fine streams, so that it may come in contact with cool, pure air. If nothing better is at hand let it run through a nice clean colander two or three times. A better arrangement is perforated milk pans, one above the other, through which the milk may run in fine streams. It is held that tyrotoxicon poison is generated in cream for the want of proper aeration, and that this causes cholera infantum. Aerated milk is better to use than milk cooled upon ice.—New York Voice.

THE BEST OF COOKIES.

If these cookies are properly made no other cookie recipe will ever be used, says the Housekeeper's Weekly. Cream one cup of butter and two cups of sugar. To this add one teaspoonful of rose-water and one pinch of salt. Then sift in sufficient flour to make a very soft dough, in which one teaspoonful of baking powder has been mixed. Be sure that the dough is not stiff, and use neither milk nor water. Flour the bake-board well, take a piece of dough, and, after sprinkling the rolling pin with flour, roll out very quickly as thin as the blade of a knife. Cut some out round and some long shape. Grease a baking pan and fill it with cakes. The oven must be moderate and the cakes must be watched closely. They must be taken from the oven before they are colored. They will harden as soon as they leave the pan, and if they are colored the appearance will be spoiled.

A SPLENDID WASHING FLUID.

To the tired housekeeper who must do her own washing, every real aid is a thing invaluable. Many washing fluids are sold that, after repeated using, rot the clothes and render them useless long before they should be put aside.

To make a good, reliable fluid take five pounds of washing soda, one-half pound of fresh, unslaked lime, one pound of borax and four ounces of liquid ammonia.

Upon the soda and borax pour one gallon of boiling water; when it has thoroughly dissolved add the ammonia. Slake the lime in one gallon of hot water and let stand open until entirely settled; pour the clear liquid carefully off upon the soda and borax water, and add to the mixture eight spoonfuls of this fluid in a tub of water and soak the clothes in it over night.

Another method of washing clothes is to put them to soak over night in cold, soft water, then next day put into warm suds in which coal oil has been placed—one tablespoonful to each pail of water—washed and boiled in water in which the same quantity of coal oil has been placed, then rinsed in clear water, blued and hung up. It is said by those who use coal oil in this way that it saves much rubbing, and is an altogether satisfactory method of washing clothes.—Detroit Free Press.

SOME SEASONABLE DESSERTS.

Meringue Pudding—Line a deep dish with slices of sponge cake, put a layer of jelly or jam over it, pour a rich custard on top, and bake; ice like cake and set in oven to dry. Serve with sauce.

Cream Pudding—Mix half a cup of white sugar and one grated lemon, beat six eggs to a froth, mix in a pint of flour and a pint of milk, stir in a pint of rich cream and a pinch of salt. Pour in a buttered dish and bake.

Kentucky Pudding—Beat three eggs with half a cupful of sugar, and two tablespoonfuls of butter, and half a cupful of sweet milk, a teacup of seeded raisins, and flour to make a stiff batter, and a teaspoonful of baking powder. Flavor with lemon. Boil four hours.

Lemon Pudding—Stir the yolks of six eggs, one cup of sugar, half a cup of water and the grated lemons together. Soak half a dozen crackers in warm water, lay in the bottom of a pan, pour the mixture over and bake, cover the top with meringue made of sugar and the whites of the eggs. Serve with sauce.

Amber Pudding—Beat a quarter of a pound of butter to a cream, and gradually add the same of sugar and rice flour, beat until smooth. Butter a plain pudding dish. Flavor the mixture with the juice and grated rind of one lemon, pour in the dish, stand in a pot of boiling water and boil for two hours. Serve hot with rich sauce.

Saratoga Pudding—Mix a cup of chopped suet and a cup of molasses, add a cup of milk, three cups of flour, a teaspoonful of cinnamon, half a grated nutmeg and half a teaspoon of salt, beat well, add a cup of seeded raisins and a cup of currants well flavored with a teaspoonful of baking powder, mix well and turn in a greased mold, allow room to swell and boil two hours. Serve with lemon sauce.

Boy Tars Going "Over the Masthead."

It is an interesting sight, and attracts scores of visitors to the foot of East Thirty-first street at noon and 4 o'clock of every pleasant day, to see the boys of the United States schoolship go "over the masthead," as they call it. Up the masts and over the arms they go in their white canvas suits, with the agility usually credited to our Darwinian ancestors. And of the more than fourteen hundred boys that have been on the ship, not one accident is recorded on the logbook for sixteen years past.—New York Press.

Recently a covey of seventeen partridges was found dead in Southern Prussia, with their heads together. It was discovered that the whole covey must have been struck by lightning. One could plainly see where the flash had struck a little mound and from thence proceeded along the ground.

Postal Figures.

The postal appropriation bill, recently approved by the house of representatives, carries a little beyond $72,000,000. Some of the items that go to make up this princely sum are interesting. The amount estimated for the transportation of the mails is $29,711,000, divided as follows: Inland by rail routes, $22,550,000; star routes, $5,893,060; steamboat routes, $635,000, and for foreign mail service, $756,000.

The salaries of all the postmasters of the United States equal $14,900,000, and that sum is given. The largest salary, $8,000, is awarded to the postmaster at New York, and the smallest, 29 cents, to a cross-road official in the state of North Carolina. All the clerks in all the post-offices cost $8,000,000 per annum, and the thousands of mail carriers, $10,093,000 more. The cost of the railway postal system is $2,731,000 for car service alone, and $6,358,000 is necessary to pay railway postal clerks.

The sum of $908,000 is appropriated to pay for the manufacture of postage stamps. Stamped envelopes and newspaper wrappers cost $933,000 more, and postal cards $214,000 more. Mail bags and mail bag "catchers" cost annually $260,000, while wrapping twine calls for $145,000. These are big figures, but great as they are they do not cover the cost of the postoffice department in Washington with its hundreds of officials, clerks, messengers, etc. That is provided for in the sundry civil bill.

Takes away—sick headache, bilious headache, dizziness, constipation, indigestion, bilious attacks, and all derangements of the liver, stomach and bowels. It's a large contract, but the smallest things in the world do the business—Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. They're the smallest, but the most effective. They go to work in the right way. They cleanse and renovate the system thoroughly—but they do it mildly and gently. You feel the good they do—but you don't feel them doing it. As a Liver Pill they're unequaled. Sugar-coated, easy to take, and put up in vials, and hermetically sealed, and thus always fresh and reliable. A perfect vest-pocket remedy, in small vials, and only one necessary for a laxative or three for a cathartic.

They're the cheapest pill you can buy, because they're guaranteed to give satisfaction, or your money is returned.

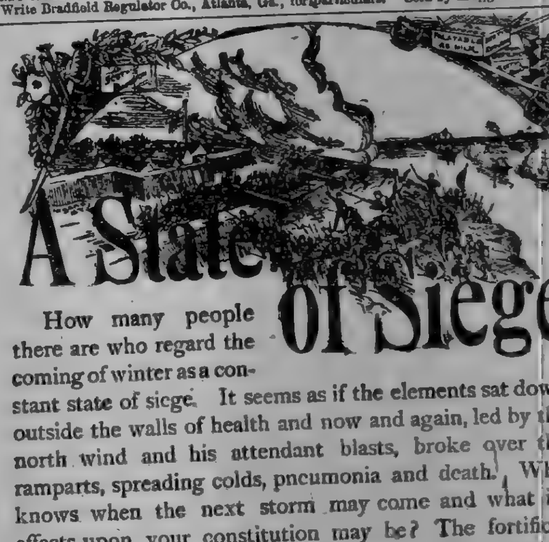
BETTER THAN DOCTORS.



A State of Siege

How many people there are who regard the coming of winter as a constant state of siege. It seems as if the elements sat down outside the walls of health and now and again, led by the north wind and his attendant blasts, broke over the ramparts, spreading colds, pneumonia and death. Who knows when the next storm may come and what its effects upon your constitution may be? The fortifications of health must be made strong. SCOTT'S EMULSION of pure Norwegian Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda will aid you to hold out against Coughs, Colds, Consumption, Scrofula, General Debility, and all Anæmic and Wasting Diseases, until the siege is raised. It prevents wasting in children. Palatable as Milk.

SPECIAL.—Scott's Emulsion is non-secret, and is prescribed by the Medical Profession all over the world, because its ingredients are scientifically combined in such a manner as to greatly increase their remedial value.

CAUTION.—Scott's Emulsion is put up in salmon-colored wrappers. Be sure and get the genuine. Prepared only by Scott & Bowne, Manufacturing Chemists, New York. Sold by all Druggists.

A BIG OFFERING!

CAHEEN,

2018 AND 2020 FIRST AVE., BIRMINGHAM, ALA.

We will produce an army of bargains, and an army of bargain seekers will come so characteristic of all our announcements. No piecemeal business in this!

Wholesale Slaughter of Every Department.

We Will Have No Dull Trade.

Our business last fall was very large. We are too active to allow business to stagnate. So to prevent a stagnation we are compelled to dispose of our big stock of Winter Goods, not considering profits or cost of goods. We want to sell our heavy stock, very much, so much so that the prices will be giving away prices.

My Love of Long Ago.

There are faces just as perfect;
There are eyes as true and sweet;
There are hearts as strong and tender
As the heart that's ceased to beat;
There are voices just as thrilling;
There are souls as white, I know,
As hers was when she went from me—
My love of long ago.

Now lips are ever telling
The tale that ne'er grows old;
Life's grays are always changing
For some one into gold;
But amid the shine and shadow,
Amid the gloom and glow,
She walks with me, she talks with me
My love of long ago.

When I think of all the changes
That the changing years have brought,
I am glad the world that holds her
Is the world that changes not.
And the same as when she left me,
She waits for me, I know—
My love on earth, my love in heaven,
My love of long ago.

LOCATING THE TRAITOR.

One bitterly cold winter's evening five men were seated together in a small room in a house situated in the Jewish quarter of a busy and largely populated Russian city. The appearance of the room was as wretched as the external aspect of the house itself. The solitary window was totally concealed by a heavy faded curtain, depending from the roof, and as the wind moaned dismally through the broken panes of glass, its sombre folds swayed to and fro. The inmates of this mournful den were seated round the table, smoking their pipes and talking, as if furtively, in whispers. As the feeble rays of the candle fell fitfully upon the company they revealed the youthful faces of four students. The chief spokesman, however, was a much older man, apparently about fifty, with a short pointed beard, shaggy brows, and keen, penetrating eyes of the darkest hue. The others deferentially addressed the speaker as "professor," and such, indeed, he was, at that time, at a well-known school of medicine in Russia.

On the present occasion, however, he was speaking, not of science, but of the terrible doctrine of assassination.

Professor V—was a Nihilist, a reputed Colossus of craft in the dissemination of revolutionary doctrines, and on the particular evening in question he was engaged in advocating with fiery eloquence, the assassination of a certain colonel who had lately been promoted to the rank of Chief Commissioner of the Secret Police. As the night wore on their whispered conversations were suddenly interrupted by a low knocking at the outer door. In a moment the conspirators sprang noiselessly to their feet, and listened with bated breath. The sound was repeated—a peculiar whistle was heard from without, and the listeners exchanged significant glances and quietly resumed their seats. Presently cautious footsteps were heard in an outer room, the door was opened, and a young man hastily entered. His face was pale, his manner agitated, and as he returned his companions' salutations he regarded them with a fixed and angry stare.

"You have kept us waiting comrade," exclaimed the professor, puffing calmly at his pipe. "Ugh! we are almost frozen, for the air of this wretched apartment is quite Siberian. But now to business. We will warm ourselves with talk, and fire our minds with the prospect of revenge."

There was a murmur of approval. It was noticed, however, that the young man who had just appeared upon the scene took his seat in silence, and, resting his elbows upon the table, slowly scrutinized the faces of his comrades.

"My dear professor," he said at length, "we cannot possibly proceed at present with this business."

"Why not?" was unanimously asked.

"Because," replied the latest comer, as he quietly snuffed the candle, "because one of us is a traitor."

"A traitor!" exclaimed the men, starting to their feet.

"Yes, comrades, we are betrayed; and as no one knows of this plot of ours except ourselves, it is plain, I think, that one of us has turned informant."

"You are mad to say so!" hoarsely exclaimed the professor; "but in heaven's name, what has happened? Come, tell us quickly. This is no jesting matter."

"Listen then. On my way hither, comrades, I entered a Cafe de Paris to sip a cup of tea and smoke a cigarette. I happened to sit down beside two officers of the Secret Police, and, as one of them was somewhat tipsy I could distinctly hear his conversation. I found it rather interesting. He told his companion that he was under orders to surround this old deserted house at midnight—it is near eleven now—and to arrest all persons found within. He mentioned, moreover, all our names, and added, with a maudlin laugh, that a certain person, to whom the administration is eternally indebted, would be found in our midst playing the part of conspirator. Now, comrades, I have done. What shall we do?"

The men looked at each other in dismay. A dead silence filled the room, for the mere suspicion of treachery among the men who had solemnly dedicated their lives to the sacred cause of liberty seemed to hold them dumb. Such villainy in their very midst—among men banded together in sacred brotherhood—was a greater crime than the merciless acts of a despot and his minions.

"If this is true," said the professor, in a voice of suppressed rage, "then I will no longer believe in human fidelity, or the future of our cause. But—Death! if the story is true. Which of us is the informer?" added the speaker, staring fiercely at the pale faces of his companions.

"Bah! it is useless to ask that, my dear professor," exclaimed Ivan—such was the name of the youth who had brought the strange intelligence—as he advanced to the door of the room, locked it, and placed the key in his pocket. "Every one will assert his innocence, of course. But, comrades, suppose we endeavor to find him out? Let us search each other. The traitor, whoever he may be, must doubtless have in his possession some proof of his guilt. At least, the experiment is worth trying. What say you?"

"Agreed! agreed!" exclaimed the Nihilists, as with one accord they sprang convulsively to their feet. One of the students—a tall, lank youth, with a somewhat foppish appearance—objected, however to the proposal.

"But why?" hotly demanded the professor, who seemed all eagerness to begin the investigation.

"Because," was the hesitating rejoinder, "because it is unnecessary. Our word of honor ought to be enough. Besides, there is something degrading in the idea of searching one another, as if, indeed, we were a lot of pickpockets. So let us break up the meeting. This excitement is absurd, and renders the discussion of our plot impossible. As for the story told by the drunken soldier in the cafe, I don't believe a word of it." These words produced an angry murmur among the excited conspirators. The protest seemed so ridiculous; and as the clamor increased Ivan turned to the speaker and warmly exclaimed, "Very well; we shall abstain from searching you, since you wish it; but remember this, that if we fail to find a clue to the informant among those who willingly submit to the examination we shall then know upon whom to fix our suspicion. Now, comrades, search me first; I am ready."

In a moment the speaker's pockets were emptied of their contents, and even the lining of his clothes was carefully searched; but beyond a few old love letters, some political pamphlets, and an English newspaper with a paragraph obliterated with lampblack, nothing of an incriminating character was found. A second student readily submitted to the test—it test it was—with similar results. Then a third stepped forward and placed himself in the hands of his companions. But at that moment a curious incident occurred. An invisible hand suddenly extinguished the light of the candle, and in a second the room was plunged in utter darkness.

What did it mean? Who had quenched the light? For a moment the Nihilists remained motionless, as if rooted to the spot. As they listened in alarm, they heard a strange creaking sound in the direction of the curtained window.

Suddenly the voice of Ivan exclaimed in the darkness: "Comrades, this is a trick! Listen! Some one is endeavoring to escape by the window! It is the traitor at last. His attempt to escape betrays his guilt. Stand back! I know how to deal with him!"

In an instant the report of three revolver shots rang through the room, and was followed by an agonizing yell as some one fell heavily upon the floor.

A profound silence then ensued.

At length Ivan spoke to his terrified companions.

"Strike a light now," he said, in a trembling voice, "and let us look upon the face of a traitor. Will no one move? Are you all afraid to gaze upon the dead body of a miscreant who has betrayed us to our enemies? Come, professor, where are the matches? You had them last. But hush! What sound is that? Listen! By heavens, comrades, the police are upon us already. The house is surrounded! Quick! here is a trap-door, known only to myself. It leads to the main sewer, and is our only hope of escape. Follow me."

Groping hand in hand in the dark, the affrighted men followed the speaker's directions, and after some momentary confusion, disappeared into a noisome abyss. None too soon. In another instant the door of the room was battered to pieces, and a company of gendarmes entered. Lights were now flashed in every direction, but it was obvious to all that the conspirators had escaped. The officer in charge swore long and deep, and ordered the men to search the house from top to bottom. Then, advancing toward the window, he stumbled over a human body.

"What's this?" he exclaim, examining the dead man's features with a lantern. "Ha! so they have caught you at last, my friend, have they? Well, you played the spy long and well, but it always comes to this in the end."

And, tearing down the window-curtain, the officer threw it over the rigid body of—the professor.—[Pall Mall Budget.

PEARLS OF THOUGHT.

For the thankless man there is no blessing.

The man who never looks ahead, always has to fall back.

The hypocrite never tries to behave himself except when he thinks he is watched.

Too many people believe that the milk of human kindness needs to be kept on ice.

The fool overestimates himself, while a wise man is prone to excessive modesty.

The chief value of procrastination is in putting off ill tempered letters and interviews.

One of the surprises of eternity will be to find out whom we have been living with in this life.

A reputation must be tarnished indeed when it no longer returns reflections cast upon itself.

There never was a cheeky man who did not think native modesty his distinguishing characteristic.

No man ever won great battles who did not fight under some kind of a flag that meant something.

Farm Insurance in Germany.

"Nothing is more remarkable," said Mr. Conried Moliter, "to a German who is now an American citizen than to notice the change in political affairs which he finds on revisiting his native land after even the elapse of a decade."

Mr. Moliter is a merchant of Salt Lake City, Utah, and a mining engineer by profession. He had just returned from a visit to his native land, and is loud in his praise of the young Emperor.

"The Emperor," he continued, "has started in to reverse the old Bismarck regime, and to put into active effect some of the theories of the French Socialists. His latest step has been the introduction of a State system of insurance for the live stock of farmers. It is thoroughly in line with State Socialism. In every commune or township where one-half of all the farmers desire insurance it becomes obligatory on all the rest to avail themselves of the law.

"The sum paid for loss is to be seven-tenths of their value for dead animals, and eight-tenths of the value for such as are killed because they have contracted disease or endanger the safety of the rest. The premiums are fixed at 1 per cent. of the value of animals insured. The State makes a free gift of $10,000 per annum to the insurance fund, but should the losses exceed this sum, together with the amount of the premiums, then the premiums are to be raised three-quarters of 1 per cent., and if it does not suffice the State agrees to make good the deficiency. The whole scheme will be directed from Berlin, where there will be a central insurance bureau, governed by directors appointed by the Government. This bureau will control the local officers, receive the premiums and pay the losses."—[New York Star.

Making a Bee Sting Innocious.

The sting of a bee is so peculiarly constructed that if you pull it out, instead of relieving the pain, it adds greatly to it, for instead of pulling out the poison you push it into the flesh. This is not generally known, hence the severer pain from the sting. Scrape the sting out immediately with a knife, and you scrape the poison out also, and soon forget that you have been stung.—[Boston Cultivator.

PEFFER'S VIEWS.

THE ALLIANCE SENATOR FROM KANSAS SPEAKS OUT.

Policy of the Alliance as Regards the Issues of the Day.

W. A. Peffer, the recently elected United States Alliance senator from Kansas, speaks to readers of Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper as follows:

"The farmers' alliance and industrial union is made up of farmers and rural working people, with country preachers, school teachers, physicians and editors of agricultural papers. Primarily social, women and young persons of both sexes over the age of 16 years are eligible to membership. It is, also, semi-religious, for every member must be a 'believer in the existence of a Supreme Being,' and all the meetings are opened and closed with prayer. Its intention is—'On earth peace and good-will toward men.' And while the first of its seven declarations of purposes is 'to labor for the education of the agricultural classes in the science of economical government in a strictly non-partisan spirit'—which means that no partisan discussions are permitted in the councils of the order—still the alliance is intensely political. It could not be otherwise and attain the objects sought. Proposing to educate its members in the science of economical government, it must discuss all matters pertaining to administration of the laws. Its second declaration asserts a demand for 'equal rights to all and special privileges to none.'

"It was not intended originally, nor is it now, that the alliance should become a political party, nor that it should form a nucleus about which a party should collect. It was expected that all the reforms demanded by the alliance could be and would be wrought out by the machinery of existing parties, or that a new party would be born.

"Appeals were made to leaders of the parties in power, but no attention was paid to them, and the alliance members set about seriously to build up a party of the people, to be composed of voters who were agreed upon a policy to bring about the changes needed, these voters coming from other bodies of organized labor and from all existing political parties. The result in Kansas was the people's party. In other states different methods of proceeding were adopted; in none of them, however, was a separate and distinct party formed, though the principles advocated and the objects sought by organized farmers in all the states are the same.

"The alliance membership are agreed upon a few fundamental propositions relating to land, labor, transportation and money, and they want legislation upon those subjects. They want more money in circulation; they want the government to issue all the money directly, and get it to the people without the intervention of interest-charging agencies; they want money made plenty and put out at low rates of interest; they want the government to take charge of the money of the country, so that its benefits may be enjoyed by the people upon fair terms and on equal terms—the same rate of interest on the same amount of money for the same length of time; they want transportation controlled by the government in the public interest, so it may be cheap, safe and equal in its burdens and benefits; they want a readjustment of our land system, that all the public lands may be gathered in speedily and disposed of to settlers under the homestead law; they want alien ownership of lands abolished in some equitable way; they want to secure for the people the largest possible measure of benefit from the unused lands of the country; they want legislation that will cause vacant lands to bear their full share—acre for acre—of the public burdens resulting from taxation; they want homesteads protected in the interest of citizens and their families; in short, as to these great matters first, and as to all related matters afterward, the Alliance wants such legislation as will equalize burdens and benefits of government, affording equal protection to all the citizens, destroying the influence of the money power, suppressing combinations against freedom of trade, and placing the debtor on terms equal with his creditor.

"This uprising of the people comes from a belief that the universal depression in agriculture is directly traceable to vicious legislation; that our financial policy is ruinous to the masses that as its legitimate fruit the rich are becoming richer and the poor poorer, while the wealth of the country is fast passing into the hands of a comparatively small number of persons. One-half the tilled lands of the civilized world are mortgaged to less than 1 per cent of the adult male population; eighty per cent of German farms are pledged for debt; one-third of American farms are under mortgage to non-resident and foreign capitalists; half the city real estate is encumbered in the same way and to the same extent; half the municipalities—counties, cities, townships—in all the west and south are under mortgage to bond-holders. The country is mortgaged to death, and 68,000,000 people are compelled to get along with a money circulation of $10 per capita. It is believed that our national banking law intrusts a dangerous power to banking corporations. It is known that, while the act was passed to 'provide a national currency,' the banks are retiring that currency at the rate of $32,500,000 a year, and that no provision has been made or proposed by our lawmakers to restore that amount, or any part of it, to the circulation of the country. In addition to all this, our railroad companies are in debt to stock and bonds five times as much as they are worth, and the people are compelled to pay, in exorbitant traffic charges, the interest on this excessive indebtedness besides dividends to the stockholders. Briefly, rich men and great corporations are gambling on the substance of the people.

"What, then, is to be done? The answer is pregnant, but it is plain and imperative. The people must take charge of their own business. All public functions must be exercised by agencies appointed by the government. The issuance of money and the transportation of property are both public functions. Then let the government issue all the people's money and supply all their public transportation. Abolish banks of issue, let money go from the government to the people directly, and let the charges for its use be no more than what it actually costs to handle the money. That is the rule in postal money and all other functions of the government. That would bring interest rates down to what the people could afford to pay, the rates would be uniform in all parts of the country, and it would be to the interest of every owner of money to keep it in circulation promoting productive industries. Instead of investing in mortgages and draining out the substance of the people, owners would put their money at work to make it pay its way, just as men do with their farms and their ships.

"Transportation is part of the productive force of the people, and for that reason it must be made cheap and uniform. As it is now, we pay from five to ten times as much for our transportation as it would cost if the people owned their own means of conveyance. In that case the cost of the "plant" would not figure in the estimate of cost of transportation any more than the cost of a public road or a court house is charged up to the people every time they use these things, which were made for their convenience.

"The Farmer's Alliance is striking for that equal liberty and exact justice to which the people are entitled. They want burdens and benefits justly distributed; they want to destroy the influence of the money power in legislation; they aim to get rid permanently of every sort of gambling in the products of labor; they will wage relentless war on all class legislation, and they will not be content until trade among our people was free as the air we breathe and the water we drink. The Farmers' Alliance has set out to dethrone money and emancipate labor."

Curious Tenures.

The tenant of a large farm at Broadhouse, near Langsett, county of York, England, holds the right to the property as long as he shall pay a yearly rental of "a snowball at midsummer and a red rose at Christmas" to the owner, Godfrey Bosville.

One of the dukes of Scotland (the editor has forgotten his name) relinquishes his rights to his lands if it should ever get warm enough to melt the snow from the highest peak of the highest mountain in Scotland.

William de Albemarle holds the manor of Leaston "by the service of finding for our lord, the king, two arrows and one loaf of oat bread when the sovereign should hunt in the forest of Eastmoor." Although the forest is no longer a hunting ground, and arrows have long since given place to rifles and shotguns of the best make, still the heirs of Albemarle keep the arrows and the oat bread ready for any stray king that may happen that way, thus holding good the title to their estates.

Solomon Attefield and heirs hold land both at Repland and Atterton, upon condition "that as often as our lord, the king, shall cross the sea, Solomon or his heirs shall accompany him to hold the royal head in case of seasickness."

John Compes had the manor of Finchfield given him for the service of "turning the spit" at the coronation of Edward III.

Geoffrey Frumbraud and heirs hold sixty acres of land in Suffolk, England, on condition that they pay the king a yearly rental of two white doves.—[Atlanta Constitution.

ALLIANCE NOTES.

NEWS OF THE ORDER FROM ALL SECTIONS.

Items of Interest to Alliancemen Everywhere.

The Orange County Farmer, of Port Jarvis, N. Y., thinks that the Farmers' Alliance, and all the other organizations of farmers, are giving the politicians a deal of uneasiness, and adds: "That is a good sign. Let the work go on. Farmers must meet and talk over their grievances, and demand reparation. They must not only demand it, but they must go the polls and get it. It can be secured in one way, if not in another."

***

The Reedy Fork Alliance, of Greenville county, S. C., have resolved to "plant one-third less cotton this year and raise more supplies," and have asked the president of the State Alliance to recommend that the members of every sub-Alliance shall adopt the same policy. Several County Alliances in Georgia have passed similar resolutions, and the feeling in favor of this policy appears to be wide-spread.

***

State Alliances are now rapidly increasing, some as entirely new organizations, while others, as in Arkansas, come from the consolidation of other State farmers' organizations. The State Alliance of Iowa is soon to be reorganized; Maine and other Eastern States will follow not far behind. One fact is most gratifying—that the Grange, which has covered most of these States to the exclusion of all other organizations, does not seem to weaken in its membership by the progress of the Alliance eastward. This means, probably, that the Grangers who join the Alliance remain in the Grange also. Then the Alliance gathers up a great many who have never been in the Grange.

***

Senator John B. Gordon has been initiated as an Alliancemen. The exercises took place a few days ago at the Alliance hall at Mason's crossing in DeKalb county, Ga. The hall was crowded with members of the Alliance and a few prominent visitors. After the initiation, the General made a conservative speech in which he declared, "that the objects and aims of the order were such that everybody and anybody could endorse its principles. He had advocated them for years and he expected to continue to advocate them. He felt perfectly at home among the Alliancemen and pledged himself to do all that was in his power to better the condition of the men who spend their lives in toiling on the farm."

THE CENTRAL COMMITTEE.

The National Farmers' Alliance is making preparations for the great political conference in February, 1892. The Georgia Alliance is doing its part. The Georgia central committee composed of one from each congressional district, has been appointed and will soon get to work. A few days ago Colonel L. F. Livingston received a letter from C. W. Macune, chairman of the executive board appointing T. L. Gantt a member of the national committee. In the letter which contained the appointment Dr. Macune said: "You will see that it is my duty to appoint one man in each state in behalf of the alliance who shall be ex-officio chairman of the executive or state central committee in his state, and shall appoint district chairman, and who in turn appoint a county chairman. This means to organize the state thoroughly for the discussion of our demands during the coming spring. State and national delegates are elected by appropriate and representative meetings held for that purpose so that the supreme council next November shall have full authority and an active disposition to select a full delegation to the great political conference in '92." By virtue of his commission from Dr. Macune, Mr. Gantt has appointed his central committee of Georgia as follows:

First District—W. R. Kemp, Swainsboro, Emanuel county.

Second District—W. W. Webb, Mant, Lowndes county.

Third District—W. A. Wilson, Americus, Sumter county.

Fourth District—J. H. Traylor, LaGrange, Troup county.

Fifth District—C. T. Zachry, McDonough, Henry county.

Sixth District—Alexander Johnson, Jackson, Butts county.

Seventh District—C. H. Cameron, Lafayette, Walker county.

Eighth District—L. H. [illegible], Elberton, Elbert county.

Ninth District—T. A. [illegible], Lavinia, Franklin county.

Tenth District—Martin J. [illegible], Augusta, Richmond county.

You know how the dead look out of their eyes; well, that's the way a woman looks when she meets another woman whom she no longer intends to "know."—Atchison Globe.

Eleven Italians, members of the murderous Mafia Society which originated in Sicily, were lynched in New Orleans Saturday last. They were in jail charged with assassinating the chief of police of that city. The lynchers were exasperated at the acquital and mistrial of several of the prisoners, and the killing resulted. The jury that tried the case sought safety in flight.

The wealth of the late Josiah Morris is inherited by his only daughter, Mrs. Dr. B. J. Baldwin. It is estimated at $3,000,000. Dr. Baldwin is capable of increasing this large sum. He has talents great and manifold, and a heart big with charity and benevolence. He is every way worthy of the responsible trust placed with him.

"It is an ill wind that blows nobody good" is an old adage which is brought vividly to mind by the wretched spell of weather which has so seriously retarded farming operations in all parts of the country. The good that is to come out of it will probably be in the high prices and demand for all the products of the farm next fall. It is not too late yet by several weeks to make a fine crop either.—Advertiser.

Do not forget that your boy is not a Methuselah. Be patient with his pranks, enjoy his jokes, share in his laughter, sweat over his conundrums, help him indulge his innocent fun, and go fishing with him. The hard world will grind the jollity out of his nature all too soon. Don't you remember what good times you had when you were a boy? (Boys may read this aloud at the dinner table.)—The Messenger.

An Injustice.

A prominent local merchant has called our attention to the fact that the incorporation law of the town of Clanton is doing no good whatever, and is doing some wrong in the fact that the citizens of the town are relieved from road service by it. He also called our attention to the miserable condition of the roads leading to the town, and stated that the bridge over the creek just north of Clanton was so unsafe that a certain citizen had voluntarily, through kindness, recently posted signs at each end warning travellers of its condition to thereby prevent serious casualty. He thought the incorporation law should be abolished, and that the board of revenue should proceed to build a new bridge across the creek. We agree with him in the matter, and even if we did not we would willingly give his views to the public as he requested us to do. He is correct when he says that our incorporation is nothing short of an evil, when it provides no taxes and impels no street work or road service. It is an injustice to those citizens living beyond the corporate limits who are compelled by the State law to work the roads.

As to the new bridge, we believe the board of revenue is doing its best with the funds at its command. Our opinion is that bridges that are a source of danger to travellers, should be ordered torn down by the board of revenue, as a humane precaution, even though there may be no money in the treasury to rebuild at once. There are those who are unable to read sign-boards.

This should be an interesting subject to the business men of Clanton. Good roads will invite trade, and bad roads will shut it off. As our merchant friend is interested, wouldn't it be a proper move for him to start out and take up a subscription from the citizens of Clanton, who have so long been relieved of road service of any kind, for the purpose of putting the roads leading into the town in better condition. The VIEW will do its part.

Since writing the foregoing, we have been informed by a member of the board of revenue that the bridge complained of will be rebuilt as soon as the water falls sufficiently to permit the work.

Now for the road work by the citizens of Clanton.

OVER THE COUNTY.

Neighborhood News Gathered by Our Correspondents.

Jemison Locals.

Rev. A. J. Briggs and wife are visiting Jemison. He preached two excellent sermons here yesterday.

Mrs. Gleason and Mrs. Duncan, of Charlotte, N. C., have been visiting Mr. H. W. Herberts' family.

Mr. R. H. Gains and Mr. W. D. McMeans made flying trips to Jemison Saturday and Sunday.

Mr. J. P. Vanderveer has moved his family from Clear Creek to Jemison. We welcome all such good citizens in our community.

Mrs. F. E. Scott has been quite sick, but we are glad to report her convalescence.

The Farmers' Alliance store is going up rapidly and they will soon have commodious quarters. It will add much to the looks of the business part of our town.

The Sabbath Schools of Jemison are all in a flourishing condition. The Baptists report a membership of 65 or 70.

The county poor house is being pushed to completion by Mr. C. H. Durham, and our unfortunates will soon be comfortably housed.

Our doctors all visited Clanton in a body last Friday and as a necessary consequence the health of the community began forthwith to improve. We are glad to report the "grippe" gone.

Rev. C. W. Hare, of the Alabama Baptist, was in town last week and sold his entire interest. Sold his place to Mr. P. E. Harris, his horse and farming implements to Mr. J. W. Broadhead.

Capt. T. H. Parnell is the happiest man in town, it is a girl.

After so much rain we have once more enjoyed a few days of sunshine.

We are sorry to lose Mr. H. J. Hare, one of our most lively young men. However, we hope he will meet with success where ever he may go.

Mr. J. W. Peeples, our old townsman, but now of Selma, came to see his best girl last Sunday, guest of Miss Ada Stewart.

Use For Old Papers.

Most housekeepers know how invaluable newspapers are for packing away the winter clothing the printing ink acting as a defiance to the stoutest moth some house-wives think, as successfully as camphor of tar paper. For this reason newspapers are invaluable under the carpet, laid over the regular carpet paper. The most valular quality of newpapers in the kitchen, however is their ability to keep out the air. It is well known that ice completely enveloped in newspapers so that all air is shut out, will keep a longer time than under other conditions; and a pitcher of ice water laid in a newspaper, with the ends of the paper twisted together to exclude the air, will remain all night in any summer room with scarcely any perceptible melting of the ice. These facts should be utilized oftener than they are in the care of the sick at night, in freezing ice cream, when the ice is scarce pack the freezer only three-quarters full of ice and salt, and furnish with newspapers, and the difference in the time of freezing and quality of the cream is not preceptible from the result where the freezer is packed full of ice. After the removing of the dasher it is better to cork up the cream and cover it tightly with newspapers than to use more ice. The newspapers retain the cold already in the ice better than a packing of cracked ice and salt, which must have services to absorb the air.—Scientific American.

He is Only a Printer.

He is only a printer. Such was the sneering remark of a reader in a circle of aristocracy—the codfish quality. What was the earl of Stanhope? He was only a printer. What was Prince Edward William and the Prince Napoleon? Proud to call themselves printers. The present Czar of Russia, the Crown Prince of Prussia and the Duke of Battenberg are printers, and the Emperor of China works in his private printing office every day. Wm. Claxton, the father of English Literature, was a practical printer. What were G. P. Morris, N. P. Willis, James Gale Chas. Richmond, James, Harper, Horace Greeley, Charles Dickens, James Buchanan, Simon Cameron, and Schuyler Colfax? Printers all, and practical ones. Mark Twain, Amos Cumming, Bret Harte, and Opie Reed, are plain practical printers, as was Artemus Ward, and Sut Lovingood. Senator Plumb, of Kansas, and James S. Hogg, of Texas, are both printers and the leader of science and philosophy in his day, made it his boast that he was a "jour" printer. In fact, thousands of the most brilliant minds in this country are found to be toiling in the publishing houses of large cities and towns. It isn't everyone that can be a printer—brains are absolutely necessary.—The Century.

Jemison.

Mistakes will occur. I am sorry that the types last week, in reference to Phebe, made me say tenth chapter of Romans instead of sixteenth, surely I wrote it correctly, for I had the Bible open before me. I know the Editor will take pleasure in correcting.

A MOTHER.

Go to Blank Brothers, Leading Clothiers, 2112, 2d Avenue, Birmingham, Ala., to buy anything you need in the way of clothing and gent's furnishing goods.

You will be sure of enjoying yourself more in this life if you will strive faithfully at all times to make the lives happier of those with whom you associate.

Mr. R. Ehrman was in Clanton on business last Thursday.

Miss Minnie Briggs and mother are visiting Pensacola, Fla.

Miss McRee, of Montgomery, county, is visiting relatives here.

Mr. T. G. Holt spent several days in Birmingham last week.

We are sorry to learn that Mrs. Dr. Stewart has been quite sick.

Rev. A. J. Briggs and wife spent several days in Jemison this week.

Mrs. Lee Holt and children visited Birmingham last week.

Mr. W. H. Phillips has made an addition to his store by putting in a soda water fount.

Mr. A. J. Hall, who is now a stock trader in Montgomery, was in Clanton visiting relatives last week.

Miss Delaney Duke, of this place, sent a box of beautiful painted Easter eggs around town this week to be sold. Easter Sunday comes on the 29th of this month.

The Congregationalists will proceed to build a church in Clanton as soon as they find a suitable lot.

Col. Chas. P. Jones, State Adjutant-General, visited our town on professional business last week.

Drs. H. W. Caffey, of Verbena and H. T. Caffey, of Jemison were in our town Friday on business.

Col. W. S. Thorington, of Montgomery, was in town Thursday on professional business in the Chancery Court.

Mr. J. A. Dudley's mill near town is now at work. Mr. E. H. Lowe has been assisting in getting it started.

Lucien Day left Thursday night for Basham's Gap, Morgan Co., to make his future home. He is a deserving young man and our good wishes go with him.

We are forced to omit two columns of display advertising and issue a supplement for three weeks on account of the large amount of tax sale advertising. The advertising omited will be given three additional insertions at expiration of contracts.

The celebrated Hamilton-Brown Shoe Company's goods can be had at W. L. Sampeys' store at reasonable prices. They are first class shoes and wear well.

The young people of our town had a dance at the residence of Mr. W. H. Phillips last week.

Patronize those business men who patronize your county paper. Liberal advertisers are liberal men to deal with.

Mr. A. J. Hall, formerly of this place, has invented a cotton picking machine. Farmers who may want to learn of its merits are referred by him to Mr. T. E. Gilchrist or Mr. N. Watts, of Clanton.

A negro showed us a French coin the other day of the denomination of two sous. It appeared to be of copper and bore the date 1792. It was about the size of our American half dollar, though thicker.

Uncle Paddy Smith says he is raising an "inscription" for the purpose of placing street lamps along the sidewalk from his house to the Baptist church. He invites all to come around and "inscribe." He says he means business.

A gentleman over on the E. T. V. & G. road had a nice lot of printing done at this office last week, and on receiving it he wrote: "Printing is entirely satisfactory in every detail. I am greatly obliged to you for your carefulness."

The men and boys, of Clanton, had quite a parade with a wild Montana pony last week. They would pick out the worst day in the week to ride the pony, so as to let the crowd see him fall in the mud. Such fun.

We are glad to know that Dr. A. E. Bivings has some of the premium Leghorn chickens which were on exhibition at the last State Fair. The reason we are glad is that we may want to borrow some fresh eggs soon.

Our information is that the large tax sales in this county are accounted for under a new law which is now in operation requiring the assessor to prepare a map of the county, and assess all the lands which have heretofore escaped taxation (according to the map) to "unknowno wner."

Mr. R. E. Bostwick, a younger brother of Mr. J. H. Bostwick, of Verbena, died at that place Monday night, of consumption. He was a promising young man 28 years of age. The remains were taken to the family home in Lowndes for burial.

Oscar Kendrick, Bob Kendrick and Joe Weaver, three negroes, were tried before Judge Callen Wednesday last, on the charge of murdering another negro by the name of Jim Walls. Walls was stabbed in the side, in a difficulty with the Kendricks. The prisoners were discharged on the ground of self-defence. The killing occurred near Coopers two weeks since.

The Congregationalist Union met here last week at the court house and the Congregational Methodists, of which Rev. A. C. Wells is pastor, joined the Union and will be called United Congregationalists hereafter. Their doctrine is the same as any other denomination, they believe in the congregation governing the church as the Baptists do.

Chilton County Medical Society met March 13th in the Courthouse. Re-election of officers resulted in choice of Dr. H. W. Caffey as president, Dr. J. A. McNeill, Vice president, and Dr. H. T. Caffey, Secretary and Treasurer. Drs. W. E. Stewart, A. E. Bivings, E. A. Matthews, and H. W. Caffey were chosen as a Board of Censors, and Examing Board. Dr. H. W. Caffey was selected as delegate to represent the Society at the approaching session of the State Medical Society, which meets in Huntsville, Ala., on the second Tuesday in April.

The Baptist Ladies' Aid Society gave an excellent supper at the court house Friday night, notwithstanding the high waters preventing them from having oysters. A good sum was made to aid in building a new Baptist Church here, and work on the new building will begin just as soon as the Church is turned over to the good ladies of Clanton, and they don't want anything from any man in this town but his part of the money, and those that talk must pay $1.00 for every word they have to say. In this way the ladies will go to work and soon have a church built that every Christian can feel proud of. If the church is built the ladies will have to go to work to do it.

Club System

while as convenient to the buyer as any instalment system, is a wholesale spot cash system to us. The co-operation of the club members sells us of watches in each $38 Watch Club, and we get cash from the Club for each watch before it goes out, though each member only pays $1 a week. This is why we give you more for your money than any one else and why we are doing the largest watch business in the world. We sell only first quality goods, but our prices are about what others get for second quality. Our $10 Silver Watch is a substantial Silver (not imitation of any kind) Stem-Wind American Lever Watch—either hunting case or open face. Our $25.00 Watch is a Stem-wind Open Face, first quality, stiffened Gold American Lever Watch, guaranteed to wear 20 years. It is fully equal to any watch sold for $50 by others. We find a first-class Stiffened Gold Case much more satisfactory and serviceable than any Solid Gold Case that can be sold at less than double the money, as cheap solid cases are invariably thin, weak, of low quality, and worthless after short use. Our $38 Watch contains numerous important patented improvements, of vital importance to accurate timing—Adjusted Dustproof, Pendant Stem Wind, &c., which we control exclusively. It is fully equal for accuracy, appearance, durability and service, to any $75 Watch, either Open Face or Hunting. Our $45.00 Railroad Watch is especially engineered for the most exacting use, and is the best Railroad Watch made, Open Face or Hunting. All these prices are either all cash or installments, $1.00 a week. As Alex Watch furnishes plain free watch boxes,

MAN'S WORLD.

ANT LITERATURE FOR FEMININE READERS.

MEXICO'S LIVING DIAMONDS.

The most interesting thing I noticed while I was away in Mexico, was a habit the ladies of Chimaltan and Zacatus have of wearing fireflies for jewelry. The legs of the flies are shaped like hooks, and they appear to have been formed expressly in the interest of the ladies. These living diamonds sparkle and shine more than any of the diamonds of Africa or South America, for the fireflies in that part of the world have a rare brilliancy never witnessed in the North. They will almost do for a lantern on a dark night, so beautiful and strong is the light they give to the world.

This habit of wearing fireflies is indulged by the ladies of the poorer classes to a large extent, and even the society ladies often pick up the shining brownies and and fasten them in their hair just as an American girl will gather wild flowers for a similar purpose. So numerous are the fireflies in Mexico that I was told that a train on the Mexican Southern Railroad was stopped by these brownies, the engineer finding it impossible to keep the wheels from slipping as they crushed the life out of millions of the insects.—Kansas City Times.

THE NEW SLOPED SKIRT.

New skirts, with most of their fulness taken out by a sloped seam in the middle of the back, are cut off in three horizontal pieces to break the monotony of straight breadths, a fashion very becoming to tall, slender figures. The foundation skirt of silk has two straight breadths joined by a seam down the middle of the front, fitted over the hips by darts in each breadth and meeting at the back of the waist. The space at the top beyond the fastening is sloped diagonally to meet two shorter breadths that are similarly sloped, and parts of two three-cornered breadths, also sloped in the middle, are set in at the foot to give fulness to the bottom of the skirt. The outside material is usually of cloth of double width, and has therefore fewer lengthwise seams than the foundation skirt. It is cut in three crosswise pieces passing straight around the figure, each lapping slightly upon that below it, and and each a third of the length of the skirt in depth when finished with a stitched hem. These pieces also have the sloped seam in the back, and are sewed on the foundation skirt without fulness. Such skirts are most worn with round waists that are slipped under the skirt, hence the top of the skirt is trimmed with passementerie to give a pretty finish to the bodice. At the foot of the skirt is usually a band of fur or feathers and passementerie.—Harper's Bazar.

OBSERVATIONS FROM THE SIDEWALK.

If you have been going up Broadway and down Sixth avenue these days with your eyes open to what is to be seen in the shops and the shop windows, as befits a wise woman at this season of the year, you have no doubt made some observations concerning the fashions for the coming season. And these observations, if you see aright, will probably include some of these things:

That the new fabrics are nothing if not pronounced.

That the light fabrics run to flowers.

That the heavy fabrics run to plaids.

That the challies and wool muslins are prettier than ever.

The velvet ribbons and ribbons are to be used for trimming in every possible way.

That black batistes with all over silk embroidery in colors and deep rich borders are to be much worn.

That early spring cloths are still moderately rough.

That gowns are to be slightly fuller and more draped than heretofore.

That close flat trimmings are still preferred.

That summer hats will be veritable flower gardens.

That the newest gloves have one button and gauntlets of moderate depth heavily embroidered.

That handkerchiefs—they are pocket handkerchiefs no longer—are more ornate than ever.

That it takes a long purse to buy most of these things.—New York Sun.

FASHION NOTES.

Velvet sleeves in silk or wool gowns are still very fashionable.

Every manufacturer and importer seems to have crepes and grenadines.

Gold is in favor. There is a rage for gold lace, gold braid, gold passementerie and gold ribbons.

There has been a noticeable falling off in the wearing of gaiters, and now they are worn no longer as a fad, but for comfort.

Brocades, silks and pompadour damasses will be the materials for dinner dresses this season, and lace will be their chief ornamentation.

Very becoming picture hats, worn at the concerts, are made of black velvet, piped with Mermet rose-pink, with pink ostrich tips and pink pearl passementerie ornaments.

To combine with the new plain or striped velvets are exquisitely fine India wool fabrics, royal cords and armures in lovely fruit tones and in rich blue-green and russet shades.

Neck ruches have been abandoned to the vulgar million, and their place is filled among the select and favored few by collars of gold gimp and chenille knotted together with bright ribbons.

Very charming toilets for bridesmaids are of soft repped Sicilienne silk in English rose, lime, leaf-green, and pale honeysuckle yellow, draped with silk gauze of the same shade, dotted with beadwork, or brocaded with small flowers in shadowy tintings.

Yokes and puffed sleeves of gold embroidered on velvet are being prepared in many rich colors for elegant house toilets for spring wear. Some of the gold-wrought plastrons used on imported art toilets recall the decorated "stomacher" worn by Flemish women of past centuries.

Pearl garnitures in form of the half round blade of a Turkish sword are used. They have pearl border, an inside dull net, a sharp top, a broad bottom and have pearl grelots. Three of these are used together as breast trimmings, the outside one of which is larger than [illegible]."

WORDS OF WISDOM.

It is better to wear out than to rust out.

Sorrows remembered sweeten present joys.

What a sad life dreary is the want of motive.

Flattery will win a woman's love where love will fail.

Man sometimes forgets a wrong; a woman never does.

The sweetest picture in the world is a pretty mother with her first baby.

Sleep, riches and health are only truly enjoyed after they have been interrupted.

The best woman has always somewhat of man's strength; the noblest man, a woman's gentleness.

A crowd is not company and faces are but a gallery of pictures, and talk but a tinkling cymbal, where there is no love.

Let a man learn that everything in nature, even motes and feathers, go by law and not by luck, and that what he sows he reaps.

That man has learned to live rightly, who takes with a smile the world's blame, and with steady head and hand goes straight on with the work he has in hand.

When you get into a tight place, and everything goes against you, till it seems as if you could not hold on a minute longer, never give up then, for that's just the place and time that the tide'll turn.

A Great Electrician's Noble Act.

The suicide of Nelson E. Swartwout in a New Orleans boarding house recalls a most interesting story concerning him. In 1877 Swartwout was cashier for the Ætna Life, Dearborn street, Chicago. One fine morning Swartwout failed to report, and shortly afterward a shortage of $15,000 was discovered. He had fled the country, leaving his wife penniless and comparatively a stranger in the city. She finally secured employment in the home of Professor Elisha Gray, the noted electrician. As the years passed Professor Gray became enormously rich. He noticed from time to time the habitual look of sadness in his employe's face, and one day he took her by the hand and fatherly way, said: "Tell me what troubles you." This evidence of sympathy caused the poor woman to burst into tears and finally to tell the story of her husband's sin. "Have you your husband's address, Mrs. Swartwout?" he asked. "Yes," was her reply. "He is in Australia." "Then write him at once and tell him at once to Chicago. I have settled in full with the insurance company. Don't thank me"—for Mrs. Swartwout had sunk to her knees—"I am rich now, and it is very little for me to do for one who has suffered as much as you." Well, Swartwout returned to Chicago and was at once given, by Professor Gray, a position as private secretary to the great inventor. Here he remained until three years ago, and, thanks to Professor Gray, the sin of his youth was forgiven and forgotten and fortune smiled upon him. He joined the Union League Club and was highly respected. About two years ago Swartwout went to California, and at the time he took his life was in the employ of the Postal Telegraph Company.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Salt is Absolutely Essential.

Salt is an absolute essential to the diet of man, says a physician in the Boston Herald. It promotes health in various ways. Many of the functions of the body go on better under its influence, and without it the blood becomes impoverished. While a complete deprivation of salt would produce disastrous results, and excessive use of it would scarcely be less harmless. In large doses it acts as an emetic; in quantities beyond the requirements of health it irritates the stomach and intestines and sometimes purges. Those who use salt unusually freely almost always suffer more or less from constipation. To drink large quantities of water daily should be the rule with those who suffer from constipation. Each day the system needs at least two quarts of water, as about that quantity is used up or thrown out of it every twenty-four hours. Fruits and vegetable foods contain much water, and in tea, coffee, soups, etc., considerable is taken habitually. In all ways, as stated, about two quarts of water should enter the stomach daily. It is a good plan to drink one or two glasses of water from half an hour to an hour before eating breakfast. And it may be either hot or cold as preferred. Whichever is used, the water should be slowly sipped. To deluge the stomach with cold water would be to invite dyspeptic troubles.

Cultivated Rice.

Rice was first produced from a wild plant called in India nivara. The wild plants grow on the border of the lakes in India, and also in Australia. Some wild varieties are quite numerous, some kinds being adapted to marshy lands and some to highlands, the latter being cultivated like corn. Rice was known in China 2800 years before Christ. It is not mentioned in the Bible, but is referred to in the Talmud. It was known in Syria 400 years before Christ, was first introduced into Italy in 1468 and into the Carolinas in 1700. The best lands for rice culture are level marshes, where they can be drained and flooded at will. Louisiana and especially the parishes Cameron, Vermillion and Calcasieu contain large areas of the finest rice lands in the world. The time is not far distant when these lands will produce a large portion of the rice consumed in the United States. At the present time the farmers in the parish of Calcasieu are raising annually over fifty thousand barrels of the finest quality.—New York Herald.

A Peregrinating Bank.

New Zealand has a bank on wheels. On certain days of the week a clerk from one of the Palmerston banks travels up and down the railway line from Palmerston to Otaki, transacting the ordinary business of the bank en route. Laden with a satchel containing his supply of cash, and provided with a teller's usual precautions against danger of robbery, he makes the carriage his headquarters, and there receives visits from customers at the way stations, changing checks or taking deposits as occasion may require. —New York Dispatch.

NEWS AND NOTES FOR WOMEN.

Soft colors prevail.

Metal belts are a novelty.

Prune is one of the favorite colors.

Decorated china is having its innings.

Orange blooms are again quite small.

The turquoise is again becoming popular.

The new woolens look very spring-like.

The bell-shaped sleeve is restricted to coats.

Cravats have suddenly become popular again.

Plaid chaviots vie with plain or striped patterns.

Necklaces are growing in popularity and size.

It's a French fad for a belle to have an assortment of fans.

The principal dentists in Australia have women assistants.

This is the season for replenishing the supplies of house linen.

The pointed bang is disappearing from the forehead of fashion.

Beaded chatelaine bags and purses still appeal to feminine favor.

Velvet sleeves in silk or wool gowns are still very fashionable.

Colored lingerie is not so fashionable as it was a little while ago.

Very few Spanish women ever even dream of speaking in public.

"Aunt Fanny" Barrow has written forty-five books for children.

All the "coming out" fans are made of white gauze or ostrich plumes.

A simple manner is the distinguishing trait of a well born man or woman.

Trained skirts for the street is a fashion that can never be made popular.

The prettiest and newest tailor-made suits are in somewhat glaring colors.

Parlor carpets come in light and medium grounds with scroll in floral patterns.

A pair of ornamental letter scales is an appropriate gift for any woman who possesses a desk.

Fur is used as borders even upon evening dresses—around the low bodice and short sleeves.

The sealskin is now made so soft and pliable that it is ruffled and plaited like a dress fabric.

A woman may be attired most stylishly without wearing a single fashionably made garment.

The smallest French bonnets—and they are all little more than medium sized pancakes—are crownless.

Mrs. Hetty Green, who had $18,000,000 left her some time ago, has increased her inheritance to $30,000,000.

The New York Presbytery, a majority of that body at least, is opposed to instituting the Order of the Deaconesses.

Dress skirts for street wear are lengthening in spite of all protests. But extremely tidy women do not adopt them.

Very youthful "rosebuds" band their locks with velvet ribbon, which is tied on the top of the head in a saucy little bow.

Sleeves are made with deep gauntlet cuffs opening on the outside of the arm, and paniers are very surely making their way.

Many women are employed in the tea trade. They do all the packing and weighing for the different tea companies.

Mrs. Alexander, the novelist, has for her pet an enormous Persian tabby cat which lies by the side of her when she writes.

Very beautiful and stylish are the new Paris challies just introduced. The patterns run to the buds and blossoms of all the flowers.

The china most in use for luncheon parties is pure white. With this any ornamental and floral decorations may be employed.

The complaint from London is that dresses are growing longer and more inconvenient and the dress suspender is coming into use.

Young ladies with oval faces may part their tresses in the middle and comb them in well-defined curves on either side of the brow.

A Gotham bride stood in the vestibule of church the other day before she entered to be married and had her "picture taken" by a friend.

Ladies who are blessed with an adequate supply of hair arrange it in loose, simple style with a view to effecting purely classical contour.

The careful manner with which Queen Victoria compiles and corrects the Court Circular entitles her to be termed the leading editor in all her realms.

Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge says that she refuses enough clever and charming matter every month to fill a magazine very nearly the equal of St. Nicholas.

Mrs. M. E. B. Thompson, Superintendent of the New York Bureau of Deafness, is one of the few women in the world who has made a reputation as an artist.

The "Needle Work Guild" is one of the most useful organizations in London, England. By its means thousands of garments are distributed to deserving persons during the year.

The old-fashioned lace berthe of our grandmothers is being revived and shows on several dresses straight from Paris. It is a graceful decoration and beautifully accentuates a pair of sloping shoulders.

Corselet bodices, over bodices proper, are very much in vogue, and they can be adapted to almost any figure by cutting the corselet higher or lower. By varying the shape the most opposite types may be suited.

After the young ladies of Wellesley College had given Mrs. Henry M. Stanley a reception she returned the compliment by inviting them to her husband's lecture, paying $750 for them with her personal check.

A traveler in the Orient says that the belles of the East are usually old women at twenty. They marry, as a rule, at thirteen. The girl whose suitors are the most numerous, granting that her dowry is sufficient, is the girl of fat and "dumpy" figure, moon face, brown eyes and fair hair.

Carriage Reminiscence.

The popular heroes deserve distinguishing little marks of [illegible] Brougham.

The brougham, which was first used by the famous Lord Brougham, took its title from that nobleman.

[illegible] which was first used in [illegible] Germany was the [illegible] which was first used in [illegible] bearing that name.

Hacks originally were termed hackney coaches, because they were drawn by hackney—a name applied to easy-going, safe pacing horses.

William IV., who, prior to becoming king of England, had been the Duke of Clarence, gave the latter name to his favorite mode of conveyance.

The old fashioned gig was given that name from its peculiar jumping and rocking motion, the word being taken from the French gigue, signifying a jig, or a lively dance.

The term coach is derived from the French coche, a diminutive form of the Latin concha, a shell, in which form the body of such conveyances was originally fashioned.

Coupe is French in origin, being derived from the verb couper, (to cut). This was considered a most appropriate designation because it greatly resembled a coach with the front part cut off.

The particular form of carriage known as the tilbury—at one time very fashionable, but now seldom seen—was so called from a sporting gentleman of London who rejoiced in the cognomen of Tilbury.

Seldom, if ever, is the full term omnibus applied to those lumbering vehicles. With the characteristic brevity of English speaking races the title has been changed to bus. These were first seen in Paris in 1827, the original name being nothing more than the Latin word signifying "for all."

The word sulky, as applied to a wheeled conveyance, had its origin in the fact that when it first appeared the person who saw it considered that none but a sulky, selfish man would ride in such an affair, which afforded accommodation to but one individual. The strange title was never changed.

Cab is an abreviation of the Italian capriola, which is changed to cabriolet (cabriolay) in French. Both words have a common derivative—cabriole—signifying a goat's leap. The exact reason for giving it this strange appellation is unknown, unless because of the lightness and springiness of the vehicle in its original form.—Detroit Free Press.

To Tell the Age of Horses.

The agricultural editor of The Times-Democrat says: The other day we met a gentleman from Alabama, who gave us a piece of information as to ascertaining the age of a horse after it has passed the ninth year which was quite new to us, and will be, we are sure, to most of our readers. It is this: After a horse is nine years old a wrinkle comes in the eyelid, at the upper corner of the lower lid, and every year thereafter he has one well-defined wrinkle for each year of his age over nine. It, for instance, a horse has three wrinkles, he is twelve; if four, thirteen. Add the number of wrinkles to nine and you will always get at it. So says the gentleman, and he is confident it will never fail.

Progress.

It is very important in this age of vast material progress that a remedy be pleasing to the taste and to the eye, easily taken, acceptable to the stomach and healthy in its nature and effects. Possessing these qualities, Syrup of Figs is the one perfect laxative and most gentle diuretic known.

If it wasn't for its light nobody would ever find out that the sun has spots on it.

LADIES needing a tonic, or children who want building up, should take Brown's Iron Bitters. It is pleasant to take, cures Malaria, Indigestion, Biliousness and Liver Complaints, makes the Blood rich and pure.

A good many people would say more if they didn't talk so much.

Big Inducement for Druggists.

The druggists throughout the country are making a specialty of handling Hawkes' Crystallized Lenses. They write that they make more money, in proportion, out of this line than anything else they carry in stock. These fine glasses have been advertised extensively for many years, and have received the endorsement and approval of thousands of the best citizens of the United States. They are eagerly sought after by spectacle-wearers every where, and it will pay druggists and general merchants to put in a stock of these goods. Exclusive sale is given to one firm in each town. The trade can be built up, and the entire spectacle business of a large section can be monopolized with these goods. Factory, Decatur St., and salesroom, Whitehall St., Atlanta, Ga. Let's reason together.

Here's a firm, one of the largest the country over, the world over; it has grown, step by step, through the years to greatness—and it sells patent medicines!—ugh!

"That's enough!"—

Wait a little—

This firm pays the newspapers good money (expensive work, this advertising!) to tell the people that they have faith in what they sell, so much faith that if they can't benefit or cure they don't want your money. Their guarantee is not indefinite and relative, but definite and absolute—if the medicine doesn't help, your money is "on call."

Suppose every sick man and every feeble woman tried these medicines and found them worthless, who would be the loser, you or they?

The medicines are Doctor Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery," for blood diseases, and his "Favorite Prescription," for woman's peculiar ills. If they help toward health, they cost $1.00 a bottle each! If they don't, they cost nothing!

"German Syrup"

J. C. Davis, Rector of St. James' Episcopal Church, Eufaula, Ala.: "My son has been badly afflicted with a fearful and threatening cough for several months, and after trying several prescriptions from physicians which failed to relieve him, he has been perfectly restored by the use of two bottles of Boschee's German Syrup. I can recommend it without hesitation. Chronic severe, deep-seated coughs like this are as severe tests as a remedy can be subjected to. It is for these long-standing cases that Boschee's German Syrup is made a specialty. Many others afflicted as this lad was, will do well to make a note of this.

Sun and Rain.

A young wife stood at the lattice pane
In a study sad and "brown,"
Watching the dreary, ceaseless rain,
Steadily pouring down,
Drip, drip, drip,
It kept on its tireless play,
And the poor little woman sighed, "Ah, me!
What a wretched, weary day!"

An eager hand at the door,
A step as if one in haste,
A kiss on her lips once more,
And an arm around her waist.
Throb, throb, throb,
Went her little heart, grateful and gay,
And she thought with a smile, "Well, after all,
It isn't so dull today!"

Forgot was the plashing rain,
And the lowering skies above,
For the sombre room was lighted again
By the blessed sun o' love!
"Love, love, love!"
Ran the wife's murmured lay;
"Without it may threaten and frown if it will;
Within what a golden day!"

Somebody's Morning Glory.

BY MARIE MOORE MARSH.

Once upon a time, somewhere, in Somebody's garden, there grew a Morning Glory vine. Nobody knew how it came there, for no one had planted it, but it was a pretty little thing, with green hearts for leaves and cunning little pale-green curls here and there upon its fuzzy stem.

She wanted to get up off of the ground where she had been all of her short life, so she crept slowly along to find something to take hold of, that she might climb high up into the bright sunlight. She put out her tender tendrils and felt carefully along, for she was blind, poor little thing, and could not see where she was going.

As she reached out she felt something hard. "Ah, perhaps this is something high," thought the Morning Glory, so she crawled up the side quite to the top, but she was not high at all—not much higher than the ground—for it was only a small stone that she had found; she sadly crept back down the other side, and she lay there quite discouraged.

There was an old man who used to take care of Somebody's garden, and he saw the plant growing there and groping about for a support, so he fastened a string from a peg stuck into the ground up to Somebody's window-sill, and then he quite forgot all about it.

The next morning the Morning Glory felt more cheerful, and she started upon her search again. She had not far to go this time, because the kind old man had fastened the peg very near to where she lay; so she reached about with caution to avoid another stone, and took hold of the string.

The poor, sightless little thing did not know that the old man had put it there for her, but somehow she felt that it would lead her where she so wished to go—up toward the beautiful blue sky and the great golden sun.

So she climbed along the string, slowly at first, then faster each day, as she began to know the way, until, like Jack's bean-stalk, she had reached the window-sill.

Now Somebody, the person who owned the garden, was ill; so ill that he had to stay always in his room with an ugly black bandage over his eyes, and the doctors feared that he might never see again.

He was very unhappy, and was often—oh, so very!—cross; and the servants quite feared him when he spoke to them in a harsh and authoritative voice.

He had no relatives, and he lived quite alone in his great house, with many people to wait upon him and with ever so much money to buy things to make him happy. But the things that one buys do not always make one happy, and he was terribly wretched in his big, fine house.

One morning he groped his way to the open window and put his hand out upon the side of the frame, and he felt a little, sharp nail. Now, if he had been gentle the nail would not have hurt him, for it was a harmless little thing; but he made a rough, impatient movement, and it caught his finger and bruised it a little.

This made somebody very angry, and he said some very unpleasant things about the person who dared to put a nail outside his window, and he felt about, very cautiously this time, to find the nail once more, that he might tear it out.

So he moved his hand slowly along upon the sill, and the Morning Glory was reaching her little hand about there at the same time, and their two hands met.

One did not look at all like a hand, but it was one just the same, and the little green hand grasped the great white one and they seemed to know and to understand each other at once, for the little green hand said to the large white one tenderly: "Oh! so you are blind, too! I am so sorry!"

The great hand did not try to find the nail after that; it just touched the Morning Glory with a soft caress and two great drops fell upon her leaves. They felt strangely and not like the cool rain-drops which sometimes watered the Morning Glory, and something told her that these drops were tears.

Now, after this, these two—Somebody and Morning Glory—grew to love each other very dearly, and each day they would feel about for one another, and the dainty Morning Glory would nestle against his bearded cheek and Somebody would pet her and stroke her leaves very gently.

And the cheerful hopefulness of the little green plant helped Somebody to be a little bit hopeful, too. You see it was harder for him, for he had not always been blind, while she had never seen, and was so used to it that now she hardly minded it at all.

One morning the Morning Glory brought her friend a surprise. She had kept it a secret all the while, and now she proudly put a great beautiful pink blossom into his hand. He could not see that it was pink, but he felt that it was lovely, and he kissed the pretty flower and murmured, "You little beauty;" and that made the Morning Glory very happy, for all mothers dearly love to have their babies admired, you know.

And the next morning Somebody had a surprise for the Morning Glory. That was a secret, too. No one knew it yet but the doctor, and Somebody drew the little Morning Glory close to his lips and whispered into her ear. Then the little green hand twined about the great white one and this is what it said: "I am so glad that you are not going to be blind any more." And somebody understood it, and the Morning Glory again felt two great, warm drops which she knew to be tears; but these were not bitter like the first ones; they were very sweet, because they were tears of joy.

After this Somebody went away and was gone a long time. The weeks passed and he did not return, and the little Morning Glory was very sad; she felt hurt that he had left her so suddenly and with no word of adieu.

Everything was in a state of great bustle and preparation all over the place. Little Morning Glory could hear them hammering and running about, and she felt that something was going to happen. Once she caught the word "bride," and something told her what it all meant, and a little jealous pain went through her heart, for she had once overheard the housemaid telling the cook that all men were fickle, and that when they were away from one they never thought of one at all, and were taken up with whoever was nearest them, and the cook had agreed fully with all that the housemaid had said; and the cook knew men if any one did, she said.

So little Morning Glory hung her leaves in sadness and quite forgot to feel proud of her pretty pink babies—for there were a great many of them now.

Once she felt something tug at her roots and a rough hand grasped her; then a kind voice said, "Don't touch that; master loved the little vine, and it must be left as it is." Oh! how relieved little Morning Glory felt at these words. She reached out and tried to touch the speaker, but the maid hurried away and never saw the little green hands at all.

Soon the nights began to be chilly, and one by one her babies left her and fluttered to the ground, and she herself grew pale and felt very weak and ill, and she feared that she was going to die. How she wished that Somebody would come back; she was afraid that he would be too late.

One morning she heard the window open, and Somebody again stood there; there was some one with him now, a beautiful lady, and he held her in his arms and called her "Sweetheart." In his new happiness he had quite forgotten his little friend; and Morning Glory's heart ached as she remembered what the maid had told the cook.

Just then Somebody looked out and saw poor little Morning Glory with her leaves all faded and brown, and he reproached himself because he had not thought of her before.

"Here, dearest," he said to the lady, "this is the little friend I told you of," and he laid the withered little stem in the lady's delicate hand.

A glad thrill ran through the Morning Glory and she dropped sixty tiny seeds into the soft open palm; then as the wind swept around the corner a sudden shudder seized her, and little Morning Glory was dead.

"See! my pet," said Somebody, pointing to the little black seeds," "that means good luck; it is her gift to the bride."

And the beautiful lady smiled and she put the seeds in a little box, saying, "next year we will have another Morning Glory vine there just like the old one."

"No," said Somebody, "never one quite like that, for that one was like a little friend; it really seemed to understand me. But then I don't need any one to understand me now, for I have you," and again the lady was folded in a loving embrace and Somebody kissed her softly.—[Chicago Times.

Woods for House Decoration.

House decorators say that the beautiful quartered oak, so much in use now, is not the expensive thing that uninformed persons might suppose. In fact, it is the most beautiful and at the same time one of the cheaper of the hardwoods. Black walnut, for example, now little used in house decoration, is considerably more expensive. The carving of hardwoods, as well as the decorative cutting of stone, has been brought to a high degree of perfection in this country, and only the best class of European work equals that put into comparatively inexpensive buildings here.—[Chicago Times.

A Gigantic Indian Dam.

A great dam is now building in India in connection with the water supply of Bombay. The wall will be two miles long, 118 feet high, ninety-three feet wide at the base and twenty-four feet wide on top. The reservoir so formed will have a surface area, of eight square miles. The work is being done by 12,000 Hindus. The cost of the masonry is estimated $2,500,000.—[New York Commercial Advertiser.

Good-Looking Salesmen.

It is a fact that it pays retailers in certain lines of business to employ handsome and ornamental male clerks just as much as it is profitable for confectionery stores to present the smiles of a pretty girl with every box of bonbons. We may soar as high as we will in our philosophy, yet the vulgar truth remains that in the hundreds of thousands of woman shoppers in New York there is a large class that enjoy being waited upon by a good-looking man.

A merchant who deals in various charming and delicate articles intended for feminine use was discussing this point recently.

"Yes," said he, "I always employ good-looking clerks. It took me a long time, however, to find out just what sort of good looks I required. When I was first advised to get some handsome men into my store, I cast about to find a fine lot of strong-featured and athletic chaps—fellows that would be conspicuous anywhere for their muscular beauty and fineness of countenance, but not only did I find this a most difficult task, but the few examples I could secure seemed to have no attraction for the ladies at all.

"Finally, a friend put me on to the fact that I must employ an entirely different order of fellows. I must get a lot of white-faced, slim-waisted, perfumed and soft-voiced chaps, who could look unutterable things on the slightest provocation at a lady of any appearance or age. I found such men as these very abundant, and I now have no less than twenty, who are, every one of them, more or less worshiped by the ladies that come to my shop.—[Baltimore News.

A Stiff Broom Scares Wild Beasts.

Bill Newman, elephant trainer for Barnum, says that the best weapon of defence against a wild beast is a stiff broom, such as is used in a livery stable. He says that the hyena is the most treacherous animal in a menagerie and that a club is practically useless against the sneaking animal.

One afternoon a circus hand, partially under the influence of liquor, made a bet with Newman that he dared not enter the hyena's cage. Newman armed himself with a stiff broom and suddenly jumping into the cage began a fierce attack on the animals by jabbing them in the eyes. The suddenness of the attack frightened the hyenas and they cowed in the corner of the cage in fear.

The drunken man, seeing how easily Newman had conquered the fierce brutes, armed himself with a club and entering the cage began to hammer the hyenas. With growls and glistening fangs they sprang upon him.

"When we pulled him out," said Newman, "there were bright stripes on his trousers, a thumb and forefinger were missing, and his club had been chewed into splinters."—[New York Journal.

Cow Birds.

Cow birds are so called from an old fancy they have of taking a ride on the cow's back occasionally, while in the pastures. The female is homely enough to be called a cow bird, being of a uniform dusky brown; but the male is a fine-looking bird, clad in an entire suit of rich black velvet, with head and neck of a deep maroon color. Cow birds usually look for the homes of birds that are smaller than themselves, and if fortunate in finding one where the owners have gone out on business or pleasure, the lady-bird takes possession of the nest and leaves an egg there and then quietly takes her departure. This is not a very lady-like proceeding, but there may be some reason for it; either the birds are too lazy to build nests for themselves, or they don't know how. Their eggs are large, of a dirty-white color, plentifully splashed over with a cold gray-brown.—[Detroit Free Press.

The Plug Hat and the White Shirt.

"No, sir," said the drummer, "there is not a place in the country now where a man who behaves himself, can't wear a plug hat. I don't mean to say that there are no lively towns, but there is practically no frontier such as there used to be.

"The cowboy still occasionally drops into the saloon and shoots the lights out; he likes, now and then, to shoot the insulators off the telegrabh poles, and there are other eccentric and somewhat boisterous forms of amusement that still find favor with him; but it is no longer considered good form anywhere to evince disapprobation of the wearing of a plug hat by shooting it off the head of the wearer.

"In some places this pleasing condition of affairs has been brought about by the active word of a single man, aided in a measure, doubtless, by the natural fairness of men when their feelings are properly appealed to. For example, in one camp, after it had been discovered by the man who conveyed the remonstrance of the older inhabitants that the quiet, unassuming stranger, who had persisted in wearing a white shirt, had an arm as big around as an oyster keg, muscles of steel, the heart of a lion, and the tiger's suddenness of movement, there arose a feeling that possibly the shirt question was debatable, and some men went so far as to say openly that a man ought to be permitted to wear a white shirt if he wanted to; and when the quiet man, in quick succession, knocked out seven supporters of the negative side, the change of sentiment was so great that it amounted, practically, to a reversal of public opinion, and by common consent he was permitted to wear his shirt."—[Northwest Trade.

Ingenious Way to Weigh Cars.

The evident convenience to traffic departments of being able to readily determine the weight of a freight car's lading has led to the working out of a new idea in this connection. An inventor proposes, instead of running cars over a track scale to ascertain the weight of their contents, to place a system of scale levers beneath the floor of each car. When it is desired to weigh the contents of a car the fulcrums of the scale levers are lifted by four hydraulic jacks, so that the weight of the car body is carried on the scale levers. The gross weight is then seen on the scale beam placed at the center of the car. When the scale is not in use the weight does not come on the scale levers, so the knife edges do not become worn. Whatever may be the practicability of this device its cost may possibly militate against its general adoption.—[Chicago News.

"Wrath Silver."

A quaint custom, dating back to Anglo-Saxon times, known as payment of "wrath silver," was recently observed at Knightlow Hill, a tumulus between Rugby and Coventry, England. It consists of tribute payable by certain parishes in Warwickshire to the Duke of Buccleuch. The silver has to be deposited at daybreak in a hollow stone by representatives of parishes, the penalty for default being forfeiture of a white bull with red nose and ears. The representatives afterward dined together at the Duke's expense.—[Chicago Times.

"Peter's Pence."

Offa, a Saxon prince, to ingratiate in the favor of the sovereign Pontiff, engaged to pay a yearly tribute to the treasurer of the Vatican. In order to raise the promised sum Offa was forced to impose a tax of one penny on each householder whose annual income was as much as 30 pence. This imposition being afterwards levied on all England was commonly denominated as "Peter's Pence." Hence the expression.—[St. Louis Republic.

ALLIANCE TALK.

AN OUTSIDER'S OPINION OF THE GREAT ORDER.

He Thinks the Alliance Will be Victorious in 1892.

Colonel Joseph K. Rickey is a legal resident of Calloway county, Mo., but his traveling is so varied that it may be well said the boundless continent is his abiding place. He has for years been at some stage of the Congressional sessions at Washington, always a visitor, keeping in touch with the pulse affecting the public welfare and enjoying the companionship of the more conspicuous magnates holding public trust. In an interview on the issues of the day, he has the following to say regarding the Farmers' Alliance. On being questioned as to who was the coming man whom the people will support that is in line with the West and South on economic questions, the Colonel said:

"There has come into existence, in the last year and a half, an organization known as the

FARMERS' ALLIANCE.

The reason of this organization was that neither party would take advanced steps toward relieving the agricultural masses in the way of increasing the circulation, or, in other words, giving them sufficient money. The republican party has adhered and continues to adhere to the single standard. The democratic party, embracing New York, Pennsylvania and the New England states, is equally opposed to the double standard. Now the farming and laboring classes of people, believing that they could not get relief from either party, have organized themselves all over the United States into what is known as Alliance orders. I am creditably informed by those who have access to their rolls that there are over 4,000,000 voters now in the organization, and that by 1892 they confidently expect 6,000,000, which is one-half of the entire voting population of the United States. Their principal complaint and demand is more money. There is only so much gold and silver in the world, and only a certain amount can be produced. Money is intended as an exchange. It is the duty of the government to provide a sufficiency of money as much as it its to provide police protection and postal facilities. Now, if we have not sufficient gold and silver as a basis for money, it is the duty of the government to provide an additional basis. I think the idea that has been suggested, and which has been presented to the congress of the United States in the shape of a bill by Gov. Leland Stanford, of California, the most practical, safe and satisfactory method of providing money that has been suggested by any human being. That is, to loan money directly to the people on cultivated land at one half of its assessed value prior to the passage of the act.

LAND AND LABOR

Are the basis of all wealth, and as security, land is permanent, imperishable and essential to the production of the necessaries of life. There will be no more borrowed than can be used. If a man borrows $500 and he can make no use of it profitably he simply returns it to the government and cancels his mortgage. It makes a permanent circulation. It reaches all classes for the reason that if the farmer can borrow it it fixes the rate of interest for the mechanic, for the laboring man, for the merchant and for all classes who are ingaged in the industries. The rate will be absolutely uniform, no violent expansion or contraction. I have no idea that this congress or the next is going to give any relief to the people so far as the currency is concerned. The politician and office-holder are timid and conservative. I believe that the great mass of congress to-day recognizes this as the true solution of the financial question, but in all great reforms the people have to lead, and not until the people have expressed themselves in unmistaken tones will the men who have clung to the Jeffersonian theories and strict constructionists who do not believe that the government has a right to relieve its citizens—not until then will these men now in office recognize this great fundamental truth.

THE ALTERNATIVE

Is in the organization that I have just spoken of, the Farmers' Alliance, and they will perforce of necessity be compelled to withdraw their allegiance from both of the great existing parties. In my opinion, and of course it is simply my individual opinion, the Alliance will nominate a presidential candidate in 1892, and invite all men of both parties who are in sympathy with them to cooperate with them. In this I think that it will draw as large a number from both of the parties as will remain in them. In other words, I believe that one half the Republican party to-day is in sympathy with this movement as well as one half, if not more, of the Democratic party, for the reason that the idea set forth and the aims and purposes of this great organization are for the relief of the great body politic.

STANFORD'S BILL.

There is no man in this country who is better known than Senator Stanford of California. He is a typical American, who began life, like most of his countrymen who have distinguished themselves in any walk of life, with nothing but his own native energy and capacity, by which he has steadily climbed to fortune and to fame.

Regarding his bill in advocating the issue of paper money based on nothing but the stamp of this government, the Senator, in an interview says:

"It would be based on the industries of 65 millions of people, the most industrious and productive people in the world; upon the vast and unpeachable security of real estate; upon the resources and credit of the government itself. A promise from our government has behind it the entire nation with its immense resources. In addition to this, under the provisions of my bill, there would be set aside for the redemption of the money loaned a specific portion of the property of the United States. The government loans its credit and receives two per cent. for the use of it, and has for security double the amount of the best security known—real estate. The government is perfectly secure for this reason: If ever the borrower fails to pay the interest and the government forecloses, some one is sure to step forward and take up the mortgage. There is every reason to believe that among the neighbors of the original owner none could be found to to allow the property to be sold when they could borrow the money at two per cent to buy it at half its value. The proposition is to loan to any one who has real estate, that is to loan the government credit. The government will not be an operator in real estate. The property will never be encumbered for more than its value, and if it has to be taken for foreclosure, some of the neighbors will always be found to take it at the assessed value, since they can raise upon the property at two per cent enough to pay off the encumberance. It is what government ought to do, as it is the only power that can make money. Money is a necessity. People will not produce more than is sufficient to supply their own wants, unless they can exchange their surplus for the products of somebody else.

LIVINGSTON'S CIRCULAR.

President Livingston, of the Georgia Farmers' Alliance, has published the following letter: TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN.—Insinuations have been made that officials connected with the State Alliance of Georgia would or should be charged with conduct unbecoming said officials, and such intimations have been standing for some time before the public. Now as president of the State Alliance of Georgia, and solely for the good of the order, both at home and abroad, I insist that for any unbecoming official conduct on the part of any officer or agent of the State Alliance, charges be made to the executive of the State Alliance; and for any conduct other than such as the State Alliance has jurisdiction over, charges be made before the sub-Alliance to which any officer may be attached. I will call the state executive committee together at any time upon notice that charges are ready to be presented, and do all and anything in my power to have a full, fair and just investigation at the instance of any person. Or if the executive committee of the State Alliance is objectionable to those who are disposed to bring charges against any or all the officials of the State Alliance, then I will call the State Alliance together and submit the whole matter to that body.

L. F. LIVINGSTON,
Pres. Ga. F. A. and I. U.

Under the heading, "The Alliance Will Enter Politics," The Southern Alliance Farmer says: "The Alliancemen of Georgia now realize the fact that to succeed, and secure the enactment of laws looking to their relief, it is necessary for them to enter the political arena, and elect to office men who are in full and hearty sympathy with their cause. If we thought the Farmers' Alliance would not take a hand in politics, and battle for their rights at the ballot box, we would not pen another line in defense of the organization—for it would be a mockery, and accomplish no earthly good. The farmers would still be oppressed by legislation and class legislation, and they could never be able to lift themselves up to that independent position which is their birthright. Abide from your duty to yourselves and to your country, the future welfare and advancement of your children and your children's children demand that the farmers take the government of our country into their own hands, number 70 per cent of the voters, and should and will do so in the near future."

"Lost opportunities seem to me the crying sins of most of us. We aren't very wicked. We are only stupidly blind, and we won't see when we might be nobler, when we have chances to be more generous. To lose an opportunity to take a turn that leads up-hill—that is my idea of sin, I think."—Kate Field's Washington.

Tax Sales.

Mountain Home.]

Doubtless many of our readers are asking the question: Why is so much land in Talladega county advertised this year for sale for taxes? This is the case in every county in the State. The Act passed by the General Assembly, approved February 28, 1891, requires the Tax Assessor to annually make out a complete list of all the lands in the several counties in this State, subject to taxation, in a book sifted for the purpose, which book is required to be filed in the office of the Probate Judge of each county. In this book, so filed, the Tax Assessor enters opposite the land owned or given in by the taxpayer the name of such taxpayer, showing exactly the land given in by him for taxation. All the land, subject to taxation, not given in or assessed for taxes, is left blank on this book, that is, its owner unknown. Hence, all the land throughout the State that is subject to taxation, and not assessed, is easily ascertained, and is required to be assessed and sold as ands belonging to "owner unknown."

In this way the State gets the benefit of taxes on lands that have long escaped taxation, which is but just and right, as all land subject to taxation should bear its pro rata of the expenses of government.

Men for a Town.

The only men of worth to a town or community, says an exchange, are those who forget their own selfish ends long enough, and who are liberal enough in their idea to encourage every public and private enterprise; to push all projects calculated to build up the town and enhance its importance. The enterprise and push of a town or community is the foundation of its permanent success. A town may as well prepare for a funeral as to become indifferent to the enterprise in its midst. Men who cannot look far enough before to see that money placed judiciously in a public enterprise will bear a hundred fold in the appreciation of their property, are to be pitied. They are not the men to put their shoulders to the wheel and build up the town. They are the class who are ready to take all they can of some one else's, but they are not willing to do anything themselves. Give us less growling men and more action.

Commissioner Kolb.

"While I endorse the Ocala platform, no true allianceman is in favor of a third party. The only men at Ocala in favor of a third party were the sort of men that no party wanted. If I understand the alliance and its professions of faith, it means Democracy, and if the Alliance does not mean Democracy, then I do not want to belong to it nor stay with it." The above was uttered by Mr. Kolb while in Nashville.

Bible.

Perhaps some our good sisters who are inclined to be jealous of the alleged supremacy of man, may find a large chunk of comfort it the following little dialogue:

Wife—The Bible says much in favor of woman, John. I thought the Israelites kept their women in the background, but, if they did, the Bible with its history, doesn't.

Husband — "Hump! The Israelites did well by keeping their women in the background—that's where women should be."

Wife—"But still the Bible says that"——

Husband — "Oh, I know there are a few women mentioned in the Bible—there was a Jezebel, she was a woman."

Wife — "Yes there was Ahab, he was a man. And there was"—

Husband—"It's is no use talking, Mary; the Bible is a history of men. Women are mentioned only incidently, as they had influence on the actions of men. The Bible says little about women compared to what it does about men."

Wife (musingly) — "You may be right John, now, when I come to think of it. There is one thing at any rate, it says about men that it does not say about women."

Husband (smilingly)— "I thought you would come to your senses, after while, Mary. What is it that the book says about men that it does not say about women?"

Wife—"It says that all men are liars."

Then the husband arose, put on his hat, and went out to see what kind of a night it was.---Exchange.

The Baltimore Sun, Democratic, thinks the demand for a free silver coinage is waning. It says: "From all parts of the South, from the valley of Virginia to Texas, our correspondence and exchanges bring the evidence that the sober second thoughts of the people everywhere are favorable to the position of Mr. Cleveland upon the silver question, and that even those who think differently have not lost one jot or tittle of their confidence in Mr. Cleveland personally, in his judgment or his leadership, and are filled more than ever with admiration for his courage and his unselfish patriotism. The man who would rather be right than be President stands in a fair way to be called to the Presidency again."

Proximity to the sea coast suggests the following to the Philadelphia Inquirer: "Italy has the biggest ironclads and the heaviest guns in the world. Suppose she sends her fleet to Washington to demand satisfaction for the New Orleans episode. The spectacle of Preston B. Plumb and John James Ingalls standing on the edge of a Kansas prarie and shouting to the invaders that they have no business to make war on a defenseless nation would be one for gods and men."

Here is some good advice from a Georgia newspaper. But if people profit by it what will become of the fish story?

"'Twill soon be time to fishin' go,
And out the minnows flirt;
But you'd a long ways better go,
To plowing out the dirt."

Rev. Sinnot will preach at the M. E. Church next Saturday night and Sunday morning.

The good ladies of Clanton, have organized a ladies' prayermeeting and also a children's prayermeeting.

Orman Duke and Jim Hester are fishing on Mr. Duke's mill pond Friday night and caught seven cat fish a foot in length.

Little Lucile Aldridge, aged eighteen months, died on the evening of March 18th. She was the child of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Aldridge. The grief stricken parents have the sympathy of the community.

Mrs. E. Nobles, of LeGrand, Montgomery county, accompanied by her daughter, Miss Kate are visiting the family of Mr. J. P. Turner, of this place.

Died, about 4 miles north of Jemison, on Monday night, the 9th inst., Mr. J. M. Hooker, aged about 65. He was buried by the Masonance. We tender our sympathies to the bereaved family.

We ask our readers to bear with us on account of the large amount of advertising which will be running for the next few weeks. It is not often that a country newspaper has an opportunity to run advertising, as we have had to during the past two weeks for want of room for it.

The celebrated Hamilton-Brown Shoe Company's goods can be had at W. L. Sampey's store at reasonable prices. They are first class shoes and wear well.

Mrs. Catival and family have moved to Mr. John Aldridge's residence just out of town.

Mrs. Dejarnette and little girl visited Mrs. A. J. Hall here last week, and have returned to Montgomery.

A distillery was broken up near Jemison last week, and the distillers arrested by revenue officers. We have heard that the prisoners threatened vengeance upon the parties who ferretted them out and had them arrested. This might lead to regulating things after the New Orleans and White Cap method, and it is to be hoped that the threats are but idle.

The tax sale advertising in the VIEW was prepared by Mr. G. C. Hanks, and we can say that the copy furnished us was the most correct and carefully prepared of anything of the kind that has ever fallen into our hands during eighteen years experience in the newspaper line. Taking into consideration the large amount furnished the painstaking labor performed by Mr. H. will be appreciated.

Prof. Reaves, of Ga., will open a class in Mathematics at the Academy to-night, Mar. 25th, and would be glad to have all who wish to attend the class come up at 7 o'clock. My system is endorsed by Prof. R. E. Hicks. Respect'ly,
PROF. C. G. REAVES.

Mr. J. P. Massey, who is with Dr. Sam Johnson, met with a narrow escape from serious injury, if not death, Sunday evening. He was out in Chandler's mill settlement riding a Texas mustang. The animal became frightened and rushed into the woods. The limb of a tree struck the rider and knocked him to the ground. His foot was caught in the stirrup and he was dragged a considerable distance when he caught hold of another tree and the stirrup leather broke. He was unhurt save a slight scratch on one hand.

A Good Letter.

The following letter speaks for itself. Whenever we get a letter of this kind, we are reminded that all good and appreciative men are not dead yet:

Brewton, Ala.,
March 15th 1891.

W. H. LAWRENCE: Dear Sir—Enclosed find M. O. for $3.00 to pay for back subscription and renew for this year. Pardon me for being tardy. Will try and be more prompt in the future. Can't get along without your papar.

Yours Truly,
G. H. GILLIAM.

He Starts Right.

Mr. Beard, the famous one horse farmer of Chilton county, was in the city a few days ago, and in conversation with an Advertiser reporter he stated that he had broken every foot of his land once and started back with the second plowing. "I always break my land twice and prepare it thoroughly before I put any seed in the ground."

Mr. Beard's farm is near Verbena. His land is a sandy top soil with a clay foundation.—Advertiser.

Mapesville Dots.

Mr. W. Brewer and wife have been visiting their old friend Mrs N. Goodwin.

Messrs. Gary & Kennedy, of Selma, have bought out the interests of Thos. Foshee, at this place. We are glad to state, however, that the latter is still in business here.

Miss Mamie Gullahorn is convalessing from a serious illness.

Mr. Frank Kelley has been visiting Mrs. Crumpton.

Mr. Saportas has been visiting his brother in Montgomery and reports very favorably of our new railroad.

Lots are selling here again at $100 per acre.

We are very confident that our railroad will be here in the near future.

Things to Remember.

Tubs will not warp or crack if a pailful of water is put into each directly after using.

Wash mirrors with warm suds, dust with whiting in a muslin bag, and polish with chamois skin.

Cut a piece from the top of an old kid shoe and insert it inside the ironing holder you are going to make.

All housewives should clean the house once a week, and it would not require so much labor to keep a clean house.

Never hang a mirror where the sun's rays will strike upon it. The rays act upon the mercury and clouds the glass.

A pretty way of serving eggs for tea is this: Cut bread in nice square pieces and toast. Take eggs out of the shell, keeping yelks whole. Beat the white to a stiff froth, lay the beaten white around nicely on the toast, drop yelks in center of white ring, salt, and put in hot oven to bake a few minutes, when taken out of oven pour a little melted butter on toast.

THE WOMAN IN THE CASE.

When erring man from Eden fell,
And plunged in sin the human race,
He laid the blame, as you know well,
Upon the woman in the case.

And since that first misfortune came,
Our wrongs, and evil luck we trace,
And, like the first man, lay the blame
Upon the woman in the case.

When wise men err and good men stray,
'Tis the old tale—a pretty face,
For no one slips but people say
There was a woman in the case.

In social quarrel or family jar
The cause the gossips quickly place
For Helen's still engendered war,
The modern woman in the case.

The banker's clerks aspire to shine
And live at quite a rapid pace;
We learn when they have crossed the line
There was a woman in the case.

Our friends, the Mormons, break our law;
'Tis sad religion—is so base—
While juries find the stumbling cause
Is still the woman in the case.

Life, though with blessings it abounds,
Would still be like an empty vase,
Were man compelled to trod his rounds
Without a woman in the case.

A State of Siege

How many people there are who regard the coming of winter as a constant state of siege. It seems as if the elements sat down outside the walls of health and now and again, led by the north wind and his attendant blasts, broke over the ramparts, spreading colds, pneumonia and death. Who knows when the next storm may come and what its effects upon your constitution may be? The fortifications of health must be made strong. SCOTT'S EMULSION of pure Norwegian Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda will aid you to hold out against Coughs, Colds, Consumption, Scrofula, General Debility, and all Anæmic and Wasting Diseases, until the siege is raised. It prevents wasting in children. Palatable as Milk.

SPECIAL.—Scott's Emulsion is non-secret, and is prescribed by the Medical Profession all over the world, because its ingredients are scientifically combined in such a manner as to greatly increase their remedial value.

CAUTION.—Scott's Emulsion is put up in salmon-colored wrappers. Be sure and get the genuine. Prepared only by Scott & Bowne, Manufacturing Chemists, New York. Sold by all Druggists.

ARCTIC BIRDS.

MANY VARIETIES OF AQUATIC AND LAND BREEDERS.

Peculiarities of the Summer Visitors — Weird and Strange Cries of the Loon Family — One of Nature's Freaks.

There is probably no richer field in the world for the ornithologist than the Arctic Ocean shores of Northwestern Alaska. During the months of May, June and until the latter part of August nearly every variety of aquatic bird travels over the country. On the north bank of the Yukon to the ocean every pond and lake, slough and swamp is fairly alive with members of the feathered family. Cape Lisburne cliffs, rearing their rocky activities from 300 to 600 feet above the sea, are a wonderful sight in the early summer. Myriads of gulls of every species, auks, terns and old squaw ducks have their nests planted upon every little rock platform on the face of these cliffs where a space is obtainable. Thus planted the nests and their contents are entirely secure from any spoliation by either man or fox. Before the ice leaves the shore line or even breaks up in the month of May the adult birds begin to arrive, and soon the pairing and nesting commence. The young are born early in June and make their first flights toward the end of July. Scores of the ivory burgomaster and other types of gull are to be seen flying far over the leads in the ice, gracefully poising in midair over the patches of water and swooping down in order to catch the young tomcods and other small fish fry that arrive in these waters at this period.

CANADA GOOSE.

The air is alive with birds, their harsh cries and notes, although discordant, providing welcome sounds after the monotonous silence that has reigned during the winter months. At Point Barrow, when the open lanes of water appear through the ice-bound sea, the first indication of the approach of spring is the arrival of eider ducks in rapid succession. The spectacled male eider, with its sombre brown colored mate, Stellar's eider and all the varieties of the eider family sweep along the edge of the ice pack in myriads. Far away to the north and east of the point the birds take their flight to lands yet unknown and undiscovered.

Cormorants, the auks terns, divers and loons do not breed north of the limit of seventy-one degrees latitude. Their nests lie in the swamp lands and among the lakes of the great north land. Geese of every variety—brown, black brant, Canada and common honker—are found all over the Terrritory in the spring and summer season, the solitary exception being the rare and beautiful emperor goose, that has its habitation and breeding home only on the deltaed mouth of the Yukon. To the keen sportsman the multitude of ducks is simply bewildering. In the long daylight of nearly twenty-four hours the air is resonant with their cries. The beautiful and graceful teal and his larger brother the mallard, are abundant, while the fat little butter-ball furnish many meals for the hungry natives.

That rare duck known as the harlequin, owing to the many-colored plumage feathers of its head, finds its food on the salt water, but nests on land, and is a species much sought after by collectors.

On the dry, mossy spots of the tundra innumerable land birds of small type build their nests. Each utter peculiar cries and notes, some becoming veritable songsters during the breeding season. Warblers, thrush, sparrows, titmouse, Lapland longspurs and fiches are all visitors to the northern breeding grounds. Then, too, sailing along high in midair, with watchful eye over the land for any stray mouse or young fledgling, are gerfalcons, arctic owls and hawks, while grouse are abundant on every hand. The latter birds cannot be termed migratory, as throughout the year they are found all over the northwest portion of the Territory. Nature, kind to all living things, has provided that birds, in common with animals frequenting or living in the Arctic and sub-Arctic zones, shall, in a measure, conform in color with the surroundings. With but few exceptions birds nestling on land have the plumage of a brownish color, similar to the tone of the moss and lichens, among which their young are born; while in winter grouse and owl, as well as fox and hare, change their pelage and feathers to a snowy whiteness.

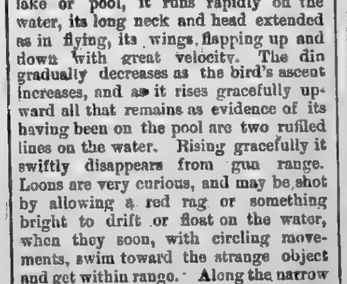
But by far the most interesting bird seen in the Arctic is the loon. In its habits and general characteristics the bird stands unrivalled. Now a loon may aptly be termed a lusus nature, for it has the feathers of a bird and the fur of an animal. The fur is on the neck and breast and under the belly. It is soft and rich, dark blue black and is as fine as seal fur. The feathers are metallic black and lustrous-hued, soft and fleecy but extremely hard to detach from the skin, while they are as springy as rubber. Around the birds throat is a ring of exquisitely-green-tinted feathers, the king loon having green and white beads alternate.



HARLEQUIN DUCK.

But the loons are gifted with strange voices, curious notes and harsh, discordant cries. At one time the notes will sound like a chorus of bullfrogs, again a soft cooing like a dove, while suddenly they change into the most discordant and demoniacal yells and wails that ever were uttered by bird or beast. They possess ventriloquial powers, for as one wanders along the margin of a lake or pool, amid the ice, the loon may be within a yard distance, and still the cries appear as if they were coming a mile away. You see one on the smooth surface of a pool, floating along over the smooth water; when suddenly the stillness is broken by a series of wild, discordant noises, interspersed with exultant peals of laughter and chukles that seem to emanate from some human being. Loons are difficult birds to shoot. At the flash of the gun down they dive so quickly that you sometimes do not believe you have seen one. In their submarine locomotion the loons use their strong legs and feet in addition to their wings. It can travel very fast under water, and will rise to the surface nearly a quarter of a mile from the point of disappearance. When it wishes to leave a lake or pool, it runs rapidly on the water, its long neck and head extended as in flying, its wings flapping up and down with great velocity. The din gradually decreases as the bird's ascent increases, and as it rises gracefully upward all that remains as evidence of its having been on the pool are two rufiled lines on the water. Rising gracefully it swiftly disappears from gun range. Loons are very curious, and may be shot by allowing a red rag or something bright to drift or float on the water, when they soon, with circling movements, swim toward the strange object and get within range. Along the narrow leads in the spring time loons are easily shot by the natives, as they do not dive under the ice, knowing the uncertainty of rising in any open space. Strange to say, although the Esquimaux and their dogs are omniverous, loon flesh is rarely eaten; the feathers alone are used, the birds being skinned and the skins used for making feather parkies or outer shirts. The best specimens of these shirts are to be seen among the natives of the Diomede Islands in Behring's Straits.—St. Louis Republic.

How to Treat a Burn.

It costs only a little forethought to have always at hand such remedies as are most useful in case of a burn; a small bottle of sweet oil, a small box with finely powered baking soda or starch, a good sized bottle of lime water, a roll of cotton batting, and a bundle of soft old linen. Indeed, a pair of scissors, a thimble, a spool of thread, and a ball of coarse darning cotton, should be kept with the above-mentioned articles, because, even in well-ordered households, it takes some time to collect all these things—time that seems doubly long when a dear one is suffering. Lime water is easily made by pouring three pints of water over half a pound of unslaked lime. Stir for a few moments, and then set away for half a day, when pour off as much of the lime water as is perfectly clear and free from sediment, bottle and provide with a stopper that may be drawn quickly. This should be made freshly every few months. Cotton batting for this purpose should be purchased at the druggist's, where a fine and superior quality may be had.

Scalds are of frequent occurrence in families where there are small children. A baby plunges its hand into a cup of hot coffee, and, if the mother cannot quickly apply the proper remedies, the poor child must suffer until a physician can be called.

The treatment is simple and plain. Pour sweet oil over the burned part, and sprinkle with soda or starch; lay on soft, old linen, and wet with the lime water; keep the cloths constantly wet with lime water. In case of a very bad scald or burn, a thin layer of cotton batting is saturated with oil and laid over the linen. If placed directly over the wound it is almost certain to adhere to the burned flesh and cause much pain. If a child falls into a tub of hot water, or pulls a kettle of it over on its body, the first thing is to remove the clothing, which, being saturated with the hot liquid, keeps in the heat, thus causing the burn to become deeper. By pouring cold water over the patient the clothing is at once cooled, and should then be taken off as gently and rapidly as possible, after which cover all the burned parts with oil and soda, and then with linen and lime water.—[American Agriculturist.

REFERRED TO PA.

Lovely Daughter—Pa, Mr. Nicefellow proposed to me last night, and I referred him to you.

Pa—Well, I really don't know much about the young man, and I'll have to—

Daughter—When he calls to see you about it, you are to receive him kindly—real fatherly, remember—and help him along all you can, until he asks for my hand, and then you are to look alarmed, and talk about what an angel I am, and how many millionaires and dukes and princes I've refused; and then you are to reluctantly consent and give him your blessing.

"Oh, I am, am I? But suppose I don't, then what?"

"I'll marry him anyhow."—[New York Weekly.

Deafness Can't be Cured

By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that we cannot cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

The Perfect Man.

The following rules of measurement were used by the ancient Greek sculptors in modeling a perfect man:

From the crown to the nape of the neck is one-twelfth the statue of a perfectly formed man. The hand from the wrist to the end of the middle finger is one-tenth of the total height of a man of perfect proportions.

A man of good proportions is as tall as the distance between the tips of his fingers when both arms are extended to full length.

The face from the highest point of the forehead, where their hair begins, to the end of the chin, is one-tenth of the whole statue of a man of perfect mould.

If the face from the roots of the hair to the chin be divided into three equal parts the first division determines the place where the eyebrows should meet, the second the opening of the nostrils, if the man be in perfect form.

The proportions of the human figure are six times the length of the right foot. Whether the form is slender or plump the rule holds good on an average. Any deviation from the rule is a departure from the beauty of proportion. It is claimed that the Greeks made all their statues according to this rule.

How My King Came.

I do not care for the stories now,
I have laid the books away—
The chivalrous tales of life and love,
Far back in the olden day;
I've read of castle and dungeon deep,
Of lord and vassal and slave,
And many a haughty lady fair,
And her knight so blithe and brave;
But naught care I how they kept their faith,
I have laid the books away—
The chivalrous tales of life and love
Far back in the olden day.

Oft long ago as I sat alone
In the twilight's softened glow,
Through the shadowy silence round me thrown,
A figure would come and go;
It was like those fine old cavaliers
In the shining coats of mail,
With golden spurs, and the waving plume
Of Prince in the fairy tale;
And I thought that on a prancing steed
He should gaily ride some day,
And far to the palace where he was king,
Would carry me swift away.

But I lost at last my idle faith,
It could never, never be,
A prince would ride from his castle walls
To whisper his love to me;
Then another lover filled my dreams,
A monarch, yet not the same,
A king he was crowned by Nature's hand,
Though he bore no royal name;
By his mind of power and heart of truth
He held o'er all men sway—
And he should choose for his home a love,
A queen, even me, some day.

No more of these lordly loves I dream,
And the books are in their place,
For a bonny, brave lad like mine,
Their pages have never a trace;
He came to me on no charging steed,
No spurs of gold wore he,
And I deemed not his the kingly mind
That should rule the world and me;
He has no crown but his own dark curls,
But his eyes of laughing gray
Hold a sweeter spell than gold or power,
He has stolen my heart away.
—[Elizabeth Pease, in the Housewife.

A Race With a Man-Eater.

I had been traveling around the world, and had stopped at the Samoan Islands on my way from Australia to run them over and gain some information regarding the natives, their ways and customs, and as a result I became enamored with the place, climate and people, and remained there nearly a year.

During that time I made myself familiar with nearly all the islands of the group, and one in particular had a peculiar fascination to me. It was called in our tongue Inaccessible, as during a majority of the time it was almost impossible to go ashore. I was taken there by accident. I was rowing by it with a native crew when the chief remarked upon the difficulty in landing there generally; so I decided to take advantage of the occasion.

We glided into a litle bay and were soon on the beach, which led up to some high hills, well timbered with tropical trees and plants. I soon saw the cause of the trouble in landing. Once on the hill-tops, I looked down a long beach, upon which beat the finest surf I had ever seen. The waves were simply great rollers, which came in in a slow, dignified fashion that was most impressive. The men, who had all been there before, ran down the shore, where I soon saw them hauling some planks from the bush, which I learned they had concealed on a former occasion. In short, the waves were utilized by them to enjoy one of the most exciting sports imaginable, and I was very quickly initiated into it.

The men threw off what little clothing they wore. Then each seized a plank and attempted to launch it, and many were the upsets that ensued as the big rollers came in, but finally all of them got beyond the shore, and beyond the point where the waves broke, and then I saw where the sport came in. Turning in shore, the men threw themselves upon the planks, and, watching their opportunity, steered them so that they held their position on the crest of the roller and came in with it.

Once under way the natives skillfully raised themselves to their feet, and so standing upright came rushing in. Some were tossed off, others were caught in the breaking wave, while the most skillful and intrepid retained their standing position until they were literally flung upon the beach. From my vantage ground they appeared to be walking upon the water, and presented a most exhilarating spectacle.

I was younger in those days than I am now, and soon convinced myself that I should enjoy this sport as well as the natives, and securing a plank, I, too, pushed out from the shore. The first wave that struck me nearly drowned me, but I dived into the next and my plank beat me in about two minutes. I was not easily discouraged, however, and kept at it with a persistency worthy a better cause, and finally secured my position upon a wave and felt for the first time the thrill and excitement of the onward rush. There was a fascination about it I can not explain.

During that visit I did not attain sufficient skill to enable me to take the ride standing, but on subsequent occasions I became fairly proficient, and then the sport for a time became a veritable craze with me. I interested a number of Englishmen and Americans in it, and we readily fell into the habit of getting up wave-riding parties. I had become so skillful that I rarely missed a wave, and could make my way out with ease and come riding in with perfect equipoise. I became so daring that I often swam out beyond the rest that I might obtain the full force and exhilaration of the ride, and one day when the sea was particularly high and rolling very heavily, I met with my adventure.

There were six of us enjoying the sport, with as many natives. I had a plank especially made for the purpose, wide and stout enough to bear my entire weight, and by lying upon it I soon forced my way over the incoming rollers and floated in the comparatively smooth water beyond. Here I turned my plank shoreward and waited for a good roller. Every third one was, as a rule, large, and finally a big green-bodied one came whirling on, shutting out the horizon.

As it came I caught it, and as I felt the transferred motion lightly sprang to my feet and steadied myself on the monster that extended up and down the shore and was rushing in to its own destruction. The exhilaration amounted almost to intoxication. On I went, the big wave beginning to comb and hiss, leaving me on the edge of a watery precipice, into which I would apparently be thrown.

On I went, shouting gayly to a companion on the beach. Then suddenly I became aware that something was beside me. I gave a side glance and the reality almost made me lose my foothold upon the rushing plank. What I saw was the sharp dorsal fin of a man-eater shark cutting along through the water like a knife. The monster was thirteen feet or more long and was partly turned up toward me, showing the white, gleaming undersurface.

What passed through my mind in those few seconds can hardly be imagined. I gave myself up for lost, as I believed that the shark would soon rush at the plank, when over I would go, an easy victim. I do not know that I have more than ordinary nerve, but it flashed through my mind that possibly the shark was waiting for me to fall and would not make an attack unless I did, and in some unaccountable way I was enabled to retain my self-possession.

Every second I was gaining; every second brought the big wave nearer the beach. Now it was on the verge of breaking; still the shark maintained its position; then I heard the welcome roar above me and down it came like an avalanche, scintillating and gleaming, until with one mighty burst the aquatic monster broke. For a single second I stood in the gleaming mass and then was dashed upon the beach safe and sound.

The shark did not come in, which was evidence to me that it had not been overcome by the rush of the water, but was simply following me with due regard to its cuisine. I need hardly say that this was my last experience riding breakers here. Upon inquiry I learned that natives had been attacked by sharks during the sport on several occasions. When I look back upon it and recall the sensation of rushing onward high on the crest of a big wave, I almost wish I could indulge in the sport again, though without the shark accompaniment.—[Philadelphia Times.

The Alabama Indians.

The Alabam Indians came from east of the Mississippi river over 100 years ago. They have been gradually reduced in numbers to about 220, of which there are now about 60 warriors. The name of the chief is John Scott, and there are four leading or rather subordinate chiefs, viz., Billy Poncho, Washington Silestine, Charley Thompson and Joshua Poncho. They have acquired but little of the habits, customs, etc., of civilization, clinging with tenacity to the savage customs of their race. Some few do not use whiskey. They are generally honest, trustworthy and industrious; they are peaceful and very grave in demeanor, yet at the same time very susceptible to mirth when they perceive things ludicrous. A portion wear the same clothing as their white neighbors; others the garb of their forefathers. They are fond of ornaments; prepare themselves beautiful work in beads and colors. The men wear long black hair, and where they have not adopted the dress of the whites wear bright colored shirts and buckskin legging. The squaws dress in bright colored calico, with a profusion of bead, tin and silver ornaments.

The Alabama Indians take care of the old and helpless among them. They live in a village on Big Sandy Creek on a tract of 1280 acres of land given them by the State of Texas. They have fields, and raise corn, cotton, sweet potatoes, sugar cane and peas, and have horses, cattle, hogs and poultry. They raise sufficient grain for bread, and pick cotton and do other work for the farmers. They are also successful hunters; their houses are built of logs and slate, and accustomed to the open air, as the inmates are, they are sufficiently comfortable. They are governed by their own tribal laws, which are in some instances very strict; they slay the murderer, etc. They are expert ball players and have the following dances: The green corn, bear, horse, frog, deer, bird, chicken, scalp and war dances, and mimic the different animals and birds in their dances. The Alabama Indians have been for some time instructed by Rev. Mr. Curry and his wife. Mr. Curry is now dead and Mrs. Curry is still teaching them.—[Galveston (Texas) News.

"A Nine Days' Wonder."

The memorable reign of Lady Jane Grey is said to have given rise to the phrase, "A nine days' wonder." Lady Jane was proclaimed Queen of England July 10, 1553, four days after the death of Edward VI. After the period of a lapse of nine days, on July 19, she relinquished her title to the crown, thus terminating her reign in the short space of a week and a half. A noted English historian says: "Thus we come to the end of the diary of that short and troubled reign, that, from its length, is said to have given rise to the now (1620) popular phrase, 'A nine days' wonder.'"—[St. Louis Republic.

Holes Made by Lightning.

"Did you ever see the diameter of a lightning flash measured?" asked a geologist of a writer for the Star. "Well, here is the case which once inclosed a flash of lightning, fitting it exactly, so that you can see just how big it was. This is called a 'fulgurite' or 'lightning hole', and the material it is made of is glass. I will tell you how it was manufactured, though it took only a fraction of a second to turn it out.

"When a bolt of lightning strikes a bed of sand it plunges downward into the sand for a distance less or greater, transforming simultaneously into glass the silica in the material through which it passes. Thus, by its great heat, it forms at once a glass tube of precisely its own size. Now and then such a tube, known as a 'fulgurite,' is found and dug up. Fulgurites have been followed into the sand by excavation for nearly thirty feet; they vary in interior diameter from the size of a quill to three inches or more, according to the bore of the flash.

"But fulgurites are not alone produced in sand; they are found also in solid rock, though very naturally of slight depth and frequently existing merely as a thin glassy coating on the surface. Such fulgurites occur in astonishing abundance on the summit of Little Ararat in Armenia. The rock is soft and so porous that blocks a foot long can be obtained, perforated in all directions by little tubes filled with bottle-green glass formed from the fused rock. There is a small specimen in the National Museum which has the appearance of having been bored by the teredo, the holes made by the worm subsequently filled with glass.

"Some wonderful fulgurites were found by Humboldt on the high Nevada de Toluca in Mexico. Masses of the rock were covered with a thin layer of green glass. Its peculiar shimmer in the sun led Humboldt to ascend the precipitous peak at the risk of his life.—[Washington Star.

Talmage Says "Sleep."

T. De Witt Talmage says: "There is not one man or woman in ten thousand who can afford to do without seven or eight hours' sleep. All those stories written about great men and women who slept only three or four hours a night, make very interesting reading, but I tell you, my readers, no man or woman yet kept healthy in body and mind for a number of years with less than seven hours' sleep.

"Americans need more sleep than they are getting. This lack makes them so nervous and the insane asylum so popular. If you can go to bed early, then rise early. If you cannot go to bed till late, then rise late. It may be as Christian for one man to rise at eight as it is for another to rise at five. I counsel my readers to get up when they are rested. But let the rousing bell be rung at least thirty minutes before your public appearance. Physicians say that a sudden jump out of bed gives irregular motion to the pulse. It takes hours to get over a too sudden rising. Give us time, after you call us, to roll over, gaze at the world full in the face and look before we leap."

A Paper Horseshoe.

The latest horseshoe is of paper. It is elastic and durable. It is the invention of a German.

A number of thin sheets of parchment paper saturated with oil and turpentine are glued together and the mass subjected to a strong hydraulic pressure. The holes for the nails are then bored, after which the shoes are trimmed ready for the market.

It is said that the shoe wears in such a way that the surface is always rough, thus adapting it particularly to smooth pavements.

Southern Lumber.

The Chicago Timberman says that inside of a few months Northern capital will launch another enterprise in the South. It is a yellow pine mill to be located in the forests near New Orleans. The company has already ordered a saw mill to include a gang and circular mill, and as soon as the wheels begin to turn the order for machinery will be duplicated and a second set placed alongside of the first. The double mills will form one of the largest in the South. The same paper prints an interview with Fred D. Robinson of Detroit, Mich., one of the delighted visitors to the recent yellow pine convention held in New Orleans. Says Mr. Robinson: "Good tracts of Southern pine which are capable of lumbering 10,000 feet per acre, have been sold of late as low as from $3 to $5 per acre, while their stumpage was intrinsically worth $2 per thousand to lumber. Such discrepancy will not exist very long. Good lumbermen and timber land owners are not slow to see these rare investments. This same timber, if located in the lower peninsula of Michigan would well be worth from $3 to $5 per thousand feet stumpage, and yet the present location has as good promise for the future as if located in Michigan."

Electric Lights for Mines.

Great progress in practical science has been made since Sir Humphrey Davy, in 1816, invented the safety lamp. But slight improvements have been made until recently, and then in only a few localities, laments the Washington Star, in the manner of lighting mines so as to protect life and property. Within two or three years it has been discovered that electricity can be applied with almost absolute immunity from explosion. Indeed, during the use by some of the Hocking Valley mines of Ohio and by the iron and copper mines of the Lake Superior region, not an accident has occurred. If the legislation of all the mining states was so shaped as to require that electric lights should be employed by the companies and operated by other persons than the miners themselves it is considered probable that few if any explosions or other casualties due to lighting would happen. The Mammoth mine accident in which all the men perished was attributable to the fact that an open light was in use. The Pennsylvania papers are calling for a stringent law which shall make it obligatory not only on the mine owners but also on the mining operatives to use safety lamps or, better still, that the mines shall be lighted by electricity.

A Comforting Reflection.

Pat wanted a position under the government, and on being told that he must be prepared to pass a civil service examination, applied himself faithfully to the necessary preparation. Some time later his ambition for public preferment seemed to have deserted him.

"What is the matter, Pat?" asked his former employer. "Couldn't you pass the examination?"

"I could that," he replied. "I answered every question on the paper. But," he added, his native wit coming to the rescue, "I guess they thought I knew too much to be wastin' me time washin' windies."—[Harper's Magazine.

NEWS OF THE ORDER FROM ALL SECTIONS.

Items of Interest to Alliancemen Everywhere.

THE FARMERS' MOVEMENT.

A writer in the American Farm News, who lives at Topeka, Kansas, among other things has the following to say regarding the farmers' movement: "The political upheaval in Kansas is frequently referred to as a revolution, but it may more properly be said to be an evolution of public sentiment. The formative influences of the movement have long been in operation in the minds of the people, and at last they have taken shape in the state and made themselves manifest in the late election in which the 80,000 republican majority was utterly wiped out. History does not show a more complete and sudden revulsion of public opinion in so brief a time. Naturally people who think, here as well as elsewhere, are asking what does it mean? What caused the upheaval and will the movement continue to go forward, or will it soon pass away and be numbered among the things that were? As to the causes many here assert it to be the tariff and transportation. Doubtless there were other irritants local, state and national that had their influences, but the people talk here largely of these two points, the tariff and transportation.

Conversing with a republican here who recognizes the situation but laments it, he said:

"I expected a change in public sentiment, but I was not prepared for so complete a reversal. This state seemed only two years ago to be the fortress of republicanism, the very Gibraltar of the party in power. But in two brief years see how great the change."

My republican friend seemed to warm up as he looked upon the past, and he continued: "The truth is the republican party has somewhat abated its high protective ideas in Kansas. The state is an agricultural district and the farmers have concluded that they have been paying taxes to keep up Eastern manufacturers without receiving any of the benefits of the law themselves. My opinion is that the protective policy in politics will never again hold the same place in the politics of the state that it once occupied. On this point the farmers have revised their opinion and I cannot say that they are in favor of free trade, but certainly they are no longer in favor of high protection. That era has gone by in the Sunflower State and the sooner the fact is recognized by Republican politicians the better it will be for them."

A Democrat in Kansas, and they are more outspoken now than ever before says: "I do not see much in the late change in Kansas that can give any special comfort to the old Democratic party. In other States the Alliance men may co-operate with the Democratic party. But here it is not so. They show no symptoms of any such affiliation. They seem to hold the Democrats as much in derision as they do the Republicans. Their hatred of Ingalls seems to be deep and bitter. They do not regard him as one of them, but look upon him as one in sympathy with the money powers. I cannot judge of their future duration but certain it is that they are here now and they announce that they have 'come to stay.' Perhaps they have. Time will show if in this they be right or wrong."

After hearing from the two old parties I fell in with an Alliancemen who was full in the faith. He was free and positive in his talk. Said he: "The Alliance will be a factor in politics for years. It has a mission and will not retire until that has been carried out. What is the mission? See our various platforms, and from them you may gain some idea of the work the Alliance has been sent to work out. Before its task has been all executed it will have to have control of the National government. And so swift has been the rise of the Alliance party that I believe that it in conjunction with the labor elements in the cities and in the factories will elect a President in 1892. Heretofore the capitalists of both parties have been able to keep the farmers and the town, factory and mine laborers apart in politics. But that day is past. Now all these laborers and farmers can unite, and will unite, and there is no reason why this combination shall not drive both of the old parties out of the field in 1892, and have a President who will respect the middle classes. Such is the vision of politics as I see it."

From these talks you may judge somewhat of the recent political change in Kansas.

The American Farm News (Akron, O.) says: "President Parkinson, of the Wisconsin State Agricultural Society in a recent annual address spoke up on the subject of "The Farmer in Politics." Mr. Parkinson held to the belief that one of the farmer's first duties was to be a thorough politician and use his utmost efforts politically to the suppression of evils in politics and the production of higher principles and better government in the interest of the masses. He warned farmers of the danger arising from the grasping of land by monopolies and centralization of the wealth of the country, made possible by unjust legislation. He predicted that unless the legislation in the interest of the masses was soon had, half of the wealth of this country would be controlled by ten thousand men by the end of twenty-five years. He urged the election of farmers to state legislatures and to congress, and deplored the fact that there were scarcely enough farmers in congress to constitute an agricultural committee.

* * *

The Farmers' Union (Memphis, Mo.,) says: "The Missouri legislature have indorsed the Ocala platform with the exception of the sub-treasury clause and the clause relating to government control of railroads. The legislature might as well have denounced the entire platform." Upon which the National Economist comments as follows: "The above holds good everywhere. The two old parties are willing to concede to such demands as can be manipulated to seem the one thing and mean another. But when it comes to a frank, open reform measure that can only be used for one purpose, and that one a source of benefit to labor in production, the result is the same as shown by the Missouri legislature. The next legislature in that State will pass a different resolution, without doubt, as the Alliance is about done with such treatment.

Farm View (Porterville, Cal.) says: "It is a privilege often granted by the capitalist to let the producer eat bread from the crop he has raised, and it is a privilege some men are grateful for. It is difficult to get some men to understand that they have any rights, and to discern clearly what those rights are. Until the masses do see it and exhibit a determination to defend it, the overthrow of any tyranny by which they suffer can only be of temporary duration. There are plenty of people acting automatically with the exploiting classes who see the wrong of the present system, but they will let the exploited classes suffer so long as they suffer willingly and without resistance."

* * *

In a speech before the convention of the National Farmers' Alliance of Iowa, President L. L. Polk said: "The farmers ought to elect more farmers to congress, because the petitions of farmers for relief had been disregarded. The Alliance intended to go into politics but not partyism. He suggested the possibility of a new party in the next presidential campaign and said the principles of the Alliance would triumph as early as 1896, if both the old parties had to be swept away." General James B. Weaver and Labor Commissioner Sovereign and Congressman-elect Otis, of Kansas, delivered similar addresses. The Farmers' Alliance will play an important part in this year's campaign in Iowa.

* * *

Arcadia (La.) Herald says: "One of the demands of the Farmers' Alliance is that United States Senators be elected by a direct vote of the people. This demand is worthy of a careful consideration, and we know of no good reason why it should not be granted. And there are many reasons why Senators should be elected by the people. It will place them in a nearer relationship with the people, and have a wholesome influence upon their official acts. It will prevent millionaires from buying seats in the Senate or bribing members of the legislature."

* * *

At a recent meeting of the fourth congressional district of Texas, held at Sulphur Springs, the following resolution was passed unanimously: "Resolved, That this, the Northeast Texas District Alliance, in session assembled, in the city of Sulphur Springs, indorse in full the Ocala platform and the sub-treasury bill, and a copy be sent to D. B. Culberson demanding him to accept the same and do all in his power to have it enacted into law.

* * *

The Alliance Vindicator (Sulphur Springs, Tex.) says: The sub-treasury promises to give the producer a chance to get something near the value of his products. What chance has he under the present system of getting it? The same fools stand up and argue against it and still offer no substitute.

The Age-Herald says: From present prospects there are likely to be more than nine candidates for Congress from the new Ninth District.

The New York Times furnishes the discouraging information to fathers of families that their bills for adorning their wives and daughters are likely to be bigger this spring than ever before, unless they can persuade their feminine rulers to do without new dresses. "There is not a store in New York," says the Times, "in which dress goods are not selling at higher prices than similar goods have heretofore been sold at, not one in which dress goods are not commanding higher prices than they would have been marked at, had the old tariff been continued in force."

Under the heading "What the Fight Will Be," the St. Louis Republican maintains that the campaign of 1892 will be fought on the issue of the McKinley tariff and not on that of the currency question. "In the West," it says a Democrat who talks abandonment of the tariff issue for any other issue whatever, would speedily talk himself out of the party. Western Democrats are opposed to Republican methods of controlling the currency, and they are determined to correct them, but in the Republicans abuse of the taxing power they recognize the greatest evil of Federal Government as it now exists as a government against all except a limited class in a few favored States."

A story comes of a man in Georgia whose example is worthy of emulation by every farmer in Alabama. Captain John S. Herndon a prosperous and peaceable farmer of the former State says he has bought neither meat, flour nor corn for the use of his family in 36 years, and every year has a surplus of those articles to sell and turn into ready cash. He also says that he never saw two men fight in his life. Commenting on this example the Augusta Chronicle says: "The man who lives at home, who raises all his own provisions, who makes cotton his surplus crop, who attends to his own business and leaves other people's alone, who does not embroil his neighbors or dispute with his adversary, is in velvet."

The following truth is told by the Mobile Register: There are no ways under the sun, yet made apparent to the wit of man, through which the average man can walk from nothing to something. Nothing from nothing and nothing remains. All of which being interpreted means that the average man—or woman—must earn in some way what they get. There is no royal road that leads to wealth and ease, but for the select few, the lucky but awful meagre minority, and most of those who find it do not find along it the ease, only the ducats, and they entail, usually, more worry and work and wear, than the hod, the plow-handle, or the jack-plain impose on the millions, who are consigned to their use as their means of living and accumulating mites against a rainy day.

"Sandy Perkins" who writes for the Greensboro Watchman, gives his views to a reporter on the Silver question, in the following style.

"I blieves ther more silver dollers ther be, ther better chance for ther larboring man to git hold on one casionly. And I ent never seen but that ther silver doller buys as much kalicer for ther ole lady and ther gals, as much meate and bred, as eny other kind er doller. And ther way to git more silver dollers is to raze more hog and hominy, and less cotton, to talk less politicks and make more compost hepes, to kepe ther ole omon and ther gals in ther kitchen and pantry and outen ther stores, to stay on ther strete korners less and in the corn rows more, to drink less whiskey and more buttermilk, to do more work and less gruntin, and then we wil find er leetle mint ter hum, which koin silver dollers nuf. That be my platform on ther silver question."

S.

A Change Demanded.

So long as the present system of making a mortgage to raise cotton, and taking the cotton to pay off the mortgage continues there can be no permanent prosperity, you need not expect it. Better stop making the mortgage, and taking a whole year for repairing and fixing up a home, planting out fruit trees, building pasture fences, and getting ready to live in future, than to continue to make cotton under the present system with no profit to the producer. A few acres devoted to grain, grass, peas, and potatoes, with a good garden and plenty of milk and butter, eggs and poultry, will insure a comfortable support for the family, and will encourage the boys to remain upon the farm and take an interest in its development. Throw off the incubus of debt by refusing to take the risk of working all the year for a bare subsistence, when you can get that easily with your gun and fishing tackle. There is no necessity that can compel a man to wear out his life in working for the benefit of those who make the money out of the products of his labor after it has left his hands, if he will only determine to be a "free man" and do more head work before he embarks into a business that his judgment does not approve of. Let the negroes raise the cotton; it will perish them to death."—Alabama Mirror.

Teaching Temperance.

CHICAGO, March 24.—News has just come from Austin, Tex., that by the efforts of the W. C. T. U., under the leadership of Mrs. Dr. Acheson, of Denison, and Miss Francis E. Griffin, of Montgomery, the Legislature of Texas has just passed a scientific temperance law.

Mrs. Mary H. Hunt has also secured one in North Carolina by a unanimous vote of the Legislature. Only eight States now remain of forty-four in which the W. C. T. U., has not secured by law a provision for temperance in the public schools.

The Quincy, Ill., Daily Journal says: "Any good Democrat is stronger in New York than a New Yorker is, on account of the miserable divisions and factional quarrels within the party in that State. Palmer would be stronger in New York than Cleveland. We do not lose New York by nominating a Western man. We increase the probabilities of carrying it for the Democratic ticket. Palmer would be as strong in the East as Cleveland—and stronger in the West than he would be. There is not a State in the Union in which Palmer would not be as strong as Cleveland, and in all the Western States, as well as in New York he would be stronger. In 1888 Palmer ran eight or ten thousand votes ahead of Cleveland in this State—and he was a candidate for governor only. Palmer would be ten or fifteen thousand votes stronger in Illinois as a Presidential candidate than he would as a Gubernatorial candidate. We are confident that Palmer is considably stronger in the West than Cleveland is. Illinois Democrats from this day until the next Democratic candidate for the Presidency is nominated should have no other candidate for that office than John Palmer.

The M. T. & M.

There has been some good news from the M. T. & M. Railroad. From indications work on it will be resumed as soon as the weather moderates.

A grading squad with several scrapes passed through Prattville last Sunday on their way to Montgomery. The Chief Engineer of the M. T. & M. has made a contract with them to lay track on that road as soon as they complete a contract on the Americus road.

AN ACT

To prevent the wrongful and illegal collection of money on farm products, as storage.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the general assembly of Alabama, That from and after the passage of this act, it shall not be lawful for any person, firm, corporation or association to collect money from any person or persons for storage or as storage, upon cotton, grain or farm produce of any kind not actually produce or controlled by the person obligating himself to store the same under a valid contract for the future delivery thereof, or reasonable expectation to produce or control the same.

Section 2. Be it further enacted, that any violation of the provision of this act by any person, firm, corporation or association, shall operate a forfeit of the entire interest on the principal of said debt and storage and commissions in favor of the person from whom the same is due, or has been collected.
Approved February 6, '91.

OUR
$1 A WEEK
Club System
while as convenient to the buyer as any instalment system, is a wholesale spot cash system to us. The co-operation of the club members sells us 38 watches in each $38 Watch Club, and we get cash from the Club for each watch before it goes out, though each member only pays $1 a week. This is why we give you more for your money than any one else and why we are doing the largest watch business in the world. We sell only first quality goods, but our prices are about what others get for second quality. Our $10 Silver Watch is a substantial Silver (not imitation of any kind) Stem-Wind American Lever Watch—either hunting case or open. Our $36.00 Watch is a Stem-wind Open Face, first quality, stiffened Gold American Lever Watch, guaranteed to wear 20 years. It is fully equal to any watch sold for $48 by others. We think a first-class Stiffened Gold Case much more satisfactory and serviceable than any Solid Gold Case that can be sold at less than double the money, and the solid cases are invariably thin, weak, of low quality, and worthless after short use. Our $36 Watch contains numerous important improvements of the movements of $48 watches, notably the [illegible] Wind, &c., which we consider [illegible] to fully equal the accuracy, durability and service, to say nothing of the Open Face or Hunting Case. Our $10 Silver Watch is the most reliable and [illegible] Watch sold. Open Face or Hunting Case. All these prices are [illegible] Send for a watch.

The Age-Herald says: From present prospects there are likely to be more than nine candidates for Congress from the new Ninth District.

The New York Times furnishes the discouraging information to fathers of families that their bills for adorning their wives and daughters are likely to be bigger this spring than ever before, unless they can persuade their feminine rulers to do without new dresses. "There is not a store in New York," says the Times, "in which dress goods are not selling at higher prices than similar goods have heretofore been sold at, not one in which dress goods are not commanding higher prices than they would have been marked at, had the old tariff been continued in force."

Under the heading "What the Fight Will Be," the St. Louis Republican maintains that the campaign of 1892 will be fought on the issue of the McKinley tariff and not on that of the currency question. "In the West," it says a Democrat who talks abandonment of the tariff issue for any other issue whatever, would speedily talk himself out of the party. Western Democrats are opposed to Republican methods of controlling the currency, and they are determined to correct them, but in the Republicans abuse of the taxing power they recognize the greatest evil of Federal Government as it now exists as a government against all except a limited class in a few favored States."

A story comes of a man in Georgia whose example is worthy of emulation by every farmer in Alabama. Captain John S. Herndon a prosperous and peaceable farmer of the former State says he has bought neither meat, flour nor corn for the use of his family in 36 years, and every year has a surplus of those articles to sell and turn into ready cash. He also says that he never saw two men fight in his life. Commenting on this example the Augusta Chronicle says: "The man who lives at home, who raises all his own provisions, who makes cotton his surplus crop, who attends to his own business and leaves other people's alone, who does not embroil his neighbors or dispute with his adversary, is in velvet."

The following truth is told by the Mobile Register: There are no ways under the sun, yet made apparent to the wit of man, through which the average man can walk from nothing to something. Nothing from nothing and nothing remains. All of which being interpreted means that the average man—or woman—must earn in some way what they get. There is no royal road that leads to wealth and ease, but for the select few, the lucky but awful meagre minority, and most of those who find it do not find along it the ease, only the ducats, and they entail, usually, more worry and work and wear, than the hod, the plow-handle, or the jack-plain impose on the millions, who are consigned to their use as their means of living and accumulating mites against a rainy day.

"Sandy Perkins" who writes for the Greensboro Watchman, gives his views to a reporter on the Silver question, in the following style.

"I blieves ther more silver dollers ther be, ther better chance for ther larboring man to git hold on one casionly. And I ent never seen but that ther silver doller buys as much kalicer for ther ole lady and ther guls, as much ymete and bred, as eny other kind er doller. And ther way to git more silver dollers is to raze more hog and hominy, and less cotton, to talk less politicks and make more compost hepes, to kepe ther ole omon and ther gals in ther kitchen and pantry and outen ther stores, to stay on ther strete korners less and in the corn rows more, to drink less whiskey and more buttermilk, to do more work and less gruvlin, and then we wil find er lectle mint ter hum, which koin silver dollers suf. That be my platform on ther silver question."

S.

A Change Demanded.

So long as the present system of making a mortgage to raise cotton, and taking the cotton to pay off the mortgage continues there can be no permanent prosperity, you need not expect it. Better stop making the mortgage, and taking a whole year for repairing and fixing up a home, planting out fruit trees, building pasture fences, and getting ready to live in future, than to continue to make cotton under the present system with no profit to the producer. A few acres devoted to grain, grass, peas, and potatoes, with a good garden and plenty of milk and butter, eggs and poultry, will insure a comfortable support for the family, and will encourage the boys to remain upon the farm and take an interest in its developments. Throw off the incubus of debt by refusing to take the risk of working all the year for a bare subsistence, when you can get that easily with your gun and fishing tackle. There is no necessity that can compel a man to wear out his life in working for the benefit of those who make the money out of the products of his labor after it has left his hands, if he will only determine to be a "free man" and do more head work before he embarks into a business that his judgment does not approve of. Let the negroes raise the cotton; it will perish them to death."—Alabama Mirror.

Teaching Temperance.

CHICAGO, March 24.—News has just come from Austin, Tex., that by the efforts of the W. C. T. U., under the leadership of Mrs. Dr. Acheson, of Denison, and Miss Francis E. Griffin, of Montgomery, the Legislature of Texas has just passed a scientific temperance law.

Mrs. Mary H. Hunt has also secured one in North Carolina by a unanimous vote of the Legislature. Only eight States now remain of forty-four in which the W. C. T. U., has not secured by law a provision for temperance in the public schools.

The Quincy, Ill., Daily Journal says: "Any good Democrat is stronger in New York than a New Yorker is, on account of the miserable divisions and factional quarrels within the party in that State. Palmer would be stronger in New York than Cleveland. We do not lose New York by nominating a Western man. We increase the probabilities of carrying it for the Democratic ticket. Palmer would be as strong in the East as Cleveland—and stronger in the West than he would be. There is not a State in the Union in which Palmer would not be as strong as Cleveland, and in all the Western States, as well as in New York he would be stronger. In 1888 Palmer ran eight or ten thousand votes ahead of Cleveland in this State—and he was a candidate for governor only. Palmer would be ten or fifteen thousand votes stronger in Illinois as a Presidential candidate than he would as a Gubernatorial candidate. We are confident that Palmer is considerably stronger in the West than Cleveland is. Illinois Democrats from this day until the next Democratic candidate for the Presidency is nominated should have no other candidate for that office than John Palmer.

EDITOR VIEW:—I carefully noted what you said in reference to the neatness and accuracy of the document prepared by G. C. Hanks, Esq., for the Tax Collector, and published in last week's VIEW. This is just what we should have looked for, coming as it did from the hands of the business boy of Clanton. Don't you think a man who executes business after this style would make a splendid clerk for the circuit court? UNO.

He cornered us in our den and introduced himself thusly: "I am J. Rustin the Bow, representing the celebrated amalgamated, non-corrosive nickle plated aurora borealis lightening rod company," and when we had caught our breath, he continued. "The rods I am now putting up are warranted to incite slumber, mend the broken heart and cause the hair to grow; they are good for in-growing toe nails, heaves, hives, glanders and all the ills that flesh is heir to, and guaranteed to keep you from perambulating into the sweet subsequently on the electrial route, possibly in the near future. We are now putting up these rods for the small sum of——" We became unconscious at this stage of the act, and when we recovered the office boy was pouring limpid water on us from the spring near by, and the lightning rod man had vanished.—Springville Advance.

A paper is going the rounds about a girl dying from tight lacing. The Plowboy would suggest that the corset be done away with, and if the girls can't live without being squeezed, we suppose men could be found who would sacrifice themselves. As old as we are we would rather devote three hours a day without a farthing of pay, as brevet corset, than to see these girls dying off in that manner. Office hours—most any time.

The M. T. & M.

There has been some good news from the M. T. & M. Railroad. From indications work on it will be resumed as soon as the weather moderates.

A grading squad with several scrapes passed through Prattville last Sunday on their way to Montgomery. The Chief Engineer of the M. T. & M. has made a contract with them to lay track on that road as soon as they complete a contract on the Americus road.

AN ACT

To prevent the wrongful and illegal collection of money on farm products, as storage.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the general assembly of Alabama, That from and after the passage of this act, it shall not be lawful for any person, firm, corporation or association to collect money from any person or persons for storage or as storage, upon cotton, grain or farm produce of any kind not actually produce or controlled by the person obligating himself to store the same under a valid contract for the future delivery thereof, or reasonable expectation to produce or control the same.

Section 2. Be it further enacted, that any violation of the provision of this act by any person, firm, corporation or association, shall operate a forfeit of the entire interest on the principal of said debt and storage and commissions in favor of the person from whom the same is due, or has been collected.

Approved February 6, '91.

LEGENDS AND RELICS OF PREHISTORIC GIANTS.

Trapping a Mammoth—The Lore and the Romance of Hunting Big Animals in a Bygone Age.

When the first Europeans visited China and began to obtain information regarding the traditions of the country they learned, among other things, that in the natural history of the people was an enormous subterranean rat called tyn-schu.

This rat was five or six times as large as a horse, had terrible teeth and lived chiefly in the northern country, where it forced its way beneath mountain ranges, so that when a tremor of an earthquake was heard in China the parents would turn to the child and say:

"My son, behave yourself. The tyn-schu is boring beneath the mountains, making the earth tremble."

A MAMMOTH IN THE ICE CLIFFS.

Thus it came to be believed by all that the big rat was an actual fact. No one could be found, however, who had met with the tyn-schu until a hunter from the far north was discovered who said he had seen one, and here is his story:

"I am a fisherman, and some years ago I traveled in Northern China and Siberia, following up the rivers to the northern ocean. One winter the cold had been more severe than usual and we started down the Lena before the ice had gone. It was still very cold, but we kept on, hoping to secure many fish to dry and carry into the interior later on.

"One day we were passing a high cliff that was partly undermined by a turn in the river, when my comrade asked me if I had ever seen a tyn-schu. I replied no. 'Well,' said he, 'there is one coming now.'

"I looked up, and there, about forty feet from the beach, was a big black mass of something. I could see two long teeth, a long tail and its shaggy fur, and it was evidently struggling to get out, as the ice cliff was cracked.

"'When he sees the sunlight,' my comrade said, "it will kill him, and when we come back we shall find him dead.' And this was true, for several months later when we went back there lay the monster on the beach, dead. It had crawled out of its hole and died in the sunlight, and was mostly eaten up by bears and wolves. We cut off the big teeth, which were as much as two men could lift, and took them up the river, where I sold one, which I heard was sent to the Emperor."

Such was the Chinaman's story and that he believed that the rat was really a living creature there can be no doubt; and the belief is supported by the finding in China of gigantic bones, beneath the surface, of these rats that have accidentally been caught by rays of sunlight.

The origin of this superstition is a veritable giant of the ice; a huge elephant which existed thousands of years ago in nearly all countries, and especially about Northern Europe and Siberia.

In the long ago of geological ages the climate of the far north was much milder than at present, and the Siberian islands in the Arctic Ocean were covered with trees and were the home of vast herds of monster elephants. When the first white men visited this desolate region they found the shore in some instances literally covered with the tusks, everywhere protruding from the sand, partly hidden by it, showing that here was a graveyard of monsters of the olden time. When the account reached the centres of civilization men went out to see if it was true, and in a short time an extensive ivory trade in these ancient relics sprang up.

There was then an indefinite idea of the animal which bore them, but gradually the fact became known that they were the tusks of an enormous elephant known as the mammoth.

Imagine Jumbo a third longer, a third higher and covered with a coat of woolly hair from two to three feet in length; imagine him armed with huge recurving tusks ten feet in length, and some idea can be formed of this king of the elephants that lived in the long ago. For a long time a very exaggerated idea of the animal was entertained and some curious pictures of it were made, but finally a specimen was found and then another.

The first and best specimen was discovered by a native fisherman. He saw his tusk protruding from the bank or bluff, and watched it for several seasons, until finally he found it lying upon the beach. The wild animals had been feeding on it, and think of it! the mammoth may have been dead anywhere from five to fifty thousand years, for its flesh was so perfectly preserved and the eye so fresh that a scientific man said he could hardly distinguish between it and the eye of a living animal.

Thousands of years ago this gigantic creature had perished, perhaps falling into a crevasse in the ice, and ever since had been frozen up like solid rocks. Gradually undermined by the river the body had fallen out, as we have seen.

About thirty pounds of the red hair and wool was collected by this fisherman, the tusks and portions of the feet, and all sold to a Russian official, who immediatel sent word to St. Petersburg, whereupon the Emperor ordered that the entire skeleton should be preserved. The skeleton was secured, with some of the skin and hair, and all are now in the Royal Museum of St. Petersburg, illustrating the enormous size of the prehistoric giant.

This was in the last century, and ever since people have been on the lookout for these giants of the ice. Several specimens have been found, the most remarkable by a Russian engineer, named Ben Kendorf, in 1846. He was engaged in surveying the coast off the mouth of the Lena and Indigirka Rivers, and his story is so striking that I give it just as it is taken from a letter written to a friend then in Germany:

"Afterward we landed on the new shore, and surveyed the undermining and destructive operations of the wild waters, that carried away with extraordinary rapidity masses of soft peat and loam. While we were all quiet we suddenly heard under our feet a sudden gurgling and stirring which betrayed the working of the disturbed river.

"Suddenly our jager called loudly and pointed to a singular and unshapely object, which rose and sank through the disturbed waters. I had already remarked it, but had given it no attention, considering it only driftwood. Now we all hastened to the spot on the shore, had the boat drawn near and waited until the mysterious thing should again show itself. Our patience was tired, but at last a black, horrible, giant-like mass was thrust out of the water and we beheld a colossal elephant's head, armed with mighty tusks, with its long trunk moving in the water in an unearthly manner, as though seeking for something lost therein. Breathless with astonishment, I beheld the monster hardly twelve feet from me, with his half open eyes yet showing the whites. It was still in good preservation.

"A mammoth! A mammoth!" broke out the Tschernoniori; and I shouted, "Here, quickly! Chain and ropes!" As the animal again sank, we wait for an opportunity to throw the ropes over his head. This was accomplished after many efforts. We then threw a chain around his tusks, that were eight feet long, drove a stake in the ground about twenty feet from the shore and made chain and rope fast to it. The day went by quicker than I thought for, but still the time seemed long before the animal was secured and the water had loosened it. The soft peat or marsh land, on which he stepped thousands of years ago, gave way under the weight of the giant, and he sank as he stood on it, feet foremost, incapable of saving himself, and a severe frost came and turned him into ice, and the moor which had buried him. The latter, however, grew and flourished, every summer renewing itself. Possibly the neighboring stream had heaped over the dead body plants and sand. God only knows what causes had worked for its preservation."

If this specimen could have been preserved the entire skin of one of these monsters could have been mounted. In recent years other specimens have been found, and there is hardly a locality but has produced its teeth and bones, showing the wide range of the great elephant.

Near Colchester a fine specimen was unearthed, and at Scarborough the teeth have been dredged up in numbers, showing that where the water now flows formerly was a grazing ground for the hairy elephant.

In Italy the bones have been discovered in the volcanic gravel of Ponte Molle, showing that they roamed Italy when the site of Rome was covered by a river of lava.

In Germany prehistoric man undoubtedly hunted the mammoth. Near Cronstadt its bones have been found in great quantities, packed as closely as if they had been placed so artificially. In the village of Thiede, near Brunswick, eleven tusks were found in a heap.

In the southern portion of this country an allied form—probably as large, but without the hair—was found and called the American elephant. Recently one was discovered near San Juan, Southern California.

The writer as soon as he learned of the find attempted to reach the spot, but little was left to tell the story. The railroad had cut directly through the skeleton, so that the tusks were all that could be secured and some of the teeth. The locality was examined afterward by the writer, who found that the body must have laid in a bed of fine sand that was undoubtedly a quicksand, and in this trap the big animal had been caught thousands of years ago, to be held until to-day.

The mammoth has lived its time, and belongs to past geological ages, the exact cause of its extermination being a mystery. That it was known to man and hunted by him is very probable. The evidences of this are rare, it is true. A piece of tusk has been found in France with a fairly correct representation of the mammoth engraved upon it, presumably by some prehistoric artist. Again, arrow heads have been taken from beneath remains, while the much discussed elephant pipes of the interior Indian mounds of this country may be evidence in this direction, though this is not positive.

Elephants Caught by Electricity.

A novel application of electricity has recently been made in elephant-catching. A recent capture of forty of these animals, when the last of their unwieldy bodies had passed the entrance into the Khedda, the signal for barring their exit was given, instantaneously and without a word spoken, by means of an electric wire. It is only a short time since petroleum superseded native vegetable oils for lighting throughout the bazaars and villages of India. Electricity is now taking the place both of petroleum or coal gas in the great spinning factories, for which it is peculiarly suited in a hot climate, owing to its coolness and absence of smell.

A Business Woman.

Miss Antoinette Knagge, a young woman with a good collegiate education, owns and manages a farm of 200 acres in Ohio. She says she made money last year, and expects to make more this year. "I have tried various kinds of farming," she says, "but I find I get along best when I manage my farm myself. I tried employing a manager, but found he managed chiefly for himself. Then I sublet to tenants, and they used up my stock and implements, and the returns were unsatisfactory. So I have taken the management all into my own hands, planting such crops as I think best, and I find that I am a very good farmer, if I do say it myself."

A Canine Coin Detector.

They have a dog at Cheyenne, Wyo., who is said to be able to detect a spurious coin instantly, not on sight, but on smell. From any number of coins placed before him he will immediately and unerringly select the genuine and carry it to his master. It is said that recently a national bank threw out a dollar as spurious, and it was taken to the dog, who at once accepted it as genuine. Chemical test afterward proved that he was right. This dog ought to have a good salary as a bank teller.

Progress.

It is very important in this age of vast material progress that a remedy be pleasing to the taste and to the eye, easily taken, acceptable to the stomach and healthy in its nature and effects. Possessing these qualities, Syrup of Figs is the one perfect laxative and most gentle diuretic known.

The man who cannot respect himself has only one more step to take to fall into the pit.

For impure or thin Blood, Weakness, Malaria, Neuralgia, Indigestion, and Biliousness, take Brown's Iron Bitters—it gives strength, making old persons feel young—and young persons strong; pleasant to take.

The reason some people do not have more power is because they do not have enough weakness.

Hawkes' Spectacles.

The reputation of these fine glasses is not of the cheap order. They have been used, endorsed, and warmly praised by the solid representative men of the United States. Such men recommend them as Senator-elect Jno. B. Gordon, Ex-Gov. Fitzhugh Lee, Gov. E. W. Wilson of West Va., Rev. H. C. Morrison, D. D.; Bishop Alex. W. Gregg, Chancellor University of the South; Gov. R. B. Hubbard, ex-Minister to Japan; Judge Simon P. Hughes, of Arkansas and many hundreds of others. These famous spectacles are sold in nearly every town from Maryland to New Mexico. Call for Hawkes'. Take no others. Every pair warranted.

There is more catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer $100 for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address F. J. CHENEY & Co., Toledo, O.

"German Syrup"

Croup. We have selected two of three lines from letters freshly received from parents who have given German Syrup to their children in the emergencies of Croup. You will credit these, because they come from good, substantial people, happy in finding what so many families lack—a medicine containing no evil drug, which mother can administer with confidence to the little ones in their most critical hours, safe and sure that it will carry them through.

ED. L. WILLITS, of Alma, Neb. I give it to my children when troubled with Croup and never saw any preparation act like it. It is simply miraculous.

MRS. JAS. W. KIRK, Daughters' College, Harrodsburg, Ky. I have depended upon it in attacks of Croup with my little daughter, and find it an invaluable remedy.

Fully one-half of our customers are mothers who use Boschee's German Syrup among their children. A medicine to be successful with the little folks must be a treatment for the sudden and terrible foes of childhood, whooping cough, croup, diphtheria and the dangerous inflammations of delicate throats and lungs. ®

HOUSEHOLD MATTERS.

TEST FOR MILK.

The following test for watered milk is simplicity itself. A well-polished knitting needle is dipped into a deep vessel of milk and immediately withdrawn in an upright position. If the sample is pure some of the fluid will hang to the needle, but if water has been added to the milk even in small proportions, the fluid will not adhere to the needle.—American Market and Critical Buyer.

WHITE CAMPHORATED OINTMENT.

White camphorated ointment for chapping, abrasions, fissures and roughness of the skin is prepared as follows: Take four ounces of olive oil, one ounce white wax (or lard), twenty-two grains of camphor, six drachms spermaceti. Dissolve the camphor in a little of the oil, and warm the remainder, together with the wax and spermaceti, until all are melted. Mix the camphor with the other ingredients when they have cooled a little and put away in open-mouthed jars.—Detroit Free Press.

HOW TO CLEAN WHITE LACE.

Veils and other articles of white lace may be cleaned by putting them in a strong lather of white soap and clean water. Let them simmer slowly for a quarter of an hour. Then take them out and squeeze them well, but avoid rubbing them. Rinse them in two cold waters, adding to the last a drop of liquid blue. Have ready some clear weak gum arabic water or some thin starch or rice water. Pass the articles through it and clean them by clapping. Then stretch them out even and pin them to dry on a linen cloth, making the edges as even as possible, opening out all the scallops and fastening each with pins. When dry lay thin muslin smoothly over them, and iron on the wrong side.—Washington Star.

THE CARE OF BROOMS.

The rapidity with which brooms ordinarily wear out is surprising. This is partly due to leaving the broom standing on its brush end when not in use, but more is carelessness in handling. A piece of strong cloth, or, better yet, of old woven under-flannel or stockinet, should be drawn on over the handle and down below the place where the broom splits are stitched. A few stitches with strong cotton yarn should fasten this cover, both at its lower edge and gather and fasten it around the handle, sewing the stitches through and through. This cover holds the broom splits together, and prevents their breaking out and the tearing off of the banding of a broom which repeated striking against doors and mopboard and reaching under heavy pieces of furniture does. —Harper's Bazar.

CLEANING COLORED WOOLENS.

Four ounces of white castile soap, four ounces of ammonia, two ounces of alcohol, two ounces of glycerine. Shave the soap in one quart of water over the fire. When dissolved add four quarts of rain water, and when nearly cold the other ingredients. Bottle and keep in a cool place. One cup of this mixture in two quarts of water will be sufficient for ordinary use. Now lay the goods on an old sheet, and iron rapidly and lightly on the wrong side, and then roll tightly on a curtain pole or any round piece of wood. If this is carefully done you do away with the creases made by folding. For black silk or cloth dissolve one tablespoonful of borax and one tablespoonful of indigo in one pint of warm water. Sponge the places well and lay smoothly one above the other, and, if possible, put in the sun to dry.—Ladies' Home Journal.

CORNING BEEF.

For corning twenty-five pounds of beef use two pounds of salt, three-quarters of a pound of brown sugar, half a teaspoonful of soda, three-quarters of an ounce of saltpetre and one gallon of water. Put all these things in a kettle and place it on the fire. Stir frequently and skim well. When the brine has been boiling for ten minutes, take it off and set it away until perfectly cold.

Have the beef cut in pieces of a suitable size for using at one time. Be sure it has been thoroughly cooled and drained. Place it in a large firkin and pour the cold brine upon it. Now lay a slate slab or a piece of wood upon the meat and upon this place a large stone or any heavy weight that will keep the meat under the brine. Cover the firkin and set it in a cool, dark place. The beef should be kept in the brine at least three weeks and can be kept for a year.—Housewife.

SAUCE FOR FISH.

Tartar Sauce—This is frequently served with fried and broiled fish, and is simply a mayonnaise in which some finely-chopped capers and shallots have been thoroughly mixed.

Cream Sauce—One pint of cream, heated to the boiling point; stir into it a tablespoonful of nice butter, a little salt and a half cupful of the water in which the fish was boiled. If it does not thicken, rub smooth a teaspoonful of arrow root and add to the sauce. This is Marion Harland's recipe.

Piquant Sauce—One cupful of meat liquor; heat to boiling, skim and season with salt and pepper. Brown two spoonfuls of butter in a saucepan with one of flour; pour the meat liquor into the pan and add a teaspoonful of made mustard, a little onion juice, a large spoonful of vinegar and some parsley.

Oyster Sauce—One pint of oysters, one-half a lemon, two tablespoonfuls of butter rolled in flour, one teacupful of milk, pepper and salt to taste. Heat the oysters, cut in pieces, if large; when boiling hot, skim, and add the flour and butter with the other seasoning; have the milk heated in another dish, and that and the lemon juice when taken from the fire.

Beurre Noir, or Brown Butter—Set two ounces of butter in a frying pan over the fire until it turns perfectly brown; drop in three sprigs of parsley; fry two minutes; remove the parsley and pour the melted butter over the fish, taking care to keep back any sediment. A few drops of lemon juice may be squeezed over the fish before pouring on the brown butter.

An Idea for Your Feet.

Shoe Manufacturer Wheeler, noticing many complaints about tender feet and ankles: "If people who suffer in that respect will take a flat sheet of rubber and cut out two pieces large enough to fit inside of the shoe soles they will find immediate relief."

If I Were You, My Dear,

I wouldn't turn my head to look after fine frocks, or impertinent men.

I wouldn't forget to sew the braid around the bottom of my skirt, or the button on my shoe.

I wouldn't conclude that every man who said something pleasant to me, had fallen in love with me.

I wouldn't feel that I was an ill-treated personage because, though I could play pleasantly, my friends didn't count me a modern Mozart.

I would not, when I could only have one frock, choose a conspicuous one that would mark me as the girl in the red plaid.

I would not, because I was tired and nervous give snappy, ill-natured replies to questions asked me by those who really cared for me.

I would not get in the habit of speaking in a familiar way of the men I know, when you make them Tom, Dick or Harry they are apt to consider you as Kate, Nell or Molly.

I would not permit any girl friend to complain to me of her mother—it is like listening to blasphemy.

I would not when I brush the dust off my hat forget the cobwebs of distrust and suspicion in my brain.

I would not grow weary in well doing—instead, I would keep on encouraging myself by trying to live up to my ideal of a woman, and the very fact of my trying so hard would make me achieve that which I wished.—The Ladies' Home Journal.

Keep Your Blood Pure.

A small quantity of prevention is worth many pounds of cure. If your blood is in good condition the liability to any disease is much reduced and the ability to resist its wasting influence is tenfold greater. Look then to your blood, by taking Swift's Specific (S. S. S.) every few months. It is harmless in its effects to the most delicate infant, yet it cleanses the blood of all poisons and builds up the general health.

ELEPHANTS.

THE WAYS OF THE BIGGEST OF BEASTS DESCRIBED.

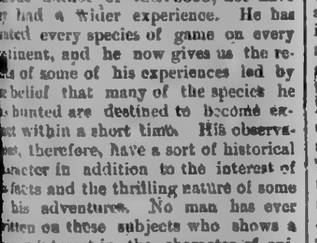
The Elephant's Intelligence Overrated—Captivity Shortens His Life—An Elephant's Fury and Cowardice.

The period is coming, says S. W. G. Benjamin, in the St. Louis Republic, when wild animals will cease to exist. All over the world they are rapidly disappearing. In civilized countries the ... of the hunters are aided by premiums offered by the Government for the extermination of wild beasts; while uncivilized lands the increasing number of sportsmen furnished with the most ... inventions in firearms seem to be ... sufficient to fill us with apprehension that the days of such sport are rapidly diminishing.

It was, therefore, with great pleasure that I came across Sir Samuel Baker's interesting volume, "Wild Beasts and their Ways." There have been many mighty hunters since the days of Nimrod, but none more expert, more adventurous nor more enthusiastic than the ... author of this book, nor have ... had a wider experience. He has ... every species of game on every continent, and he now gives us the results of some of his experiences led by the belief that many of the species he has hunted are destined to become extinct within a short time. His observations, therefore, have a sort of historical character in addition to the interest of facts and the thrilling nature of some of his adventures. No man has ever written on these subjects who shows a greater interest in the character of animals, or whose opinions are of more value.

The author gives a very clear description of the difference between the Asiatic and the African elephant. The latter is much the larger. Jumbo at the ... stood eleven feet high, but some African specimens are over twelve feet. The Indian or Asiatic elephant is rarely over nine feet, has a convex back, and is tamed with comparative ease, while the African has hollow back, larger legs, ... enormous ears, and does not take ... to civilized life. Captivity shortens the life of the elephant, but in its wild state there are evidences that it reaches 150 years; one reason is that the perfection of the ivory is not reached until the age of forty.

The intelligence of the elephant has been overrated. He would never voluntarily his services like a dog. Sir Samuel Baker never saw one of them interfere to save ... master from drowning or attack; he would never interfere in your defence. He would instead run away unless guided by his mahout or driver. But his power of learning is extraordinary, and he can be taught to perform wonders. Notwithstanding his enormous speed and strength, he is naturally a coward, and much less to be depended on to face danger without flinching than the horse. It is impossible to train all elephants ... and very few can be rendered ... trustworthy. A good, well-trained Indian elephant is valued at from $5,000 to $15,000 in India.



A CHALLENGE TO THE ELEPHANTS.

Much depends upon the mahout, who, with a long iron spike, guides this gigantic animal. It is impossible for an ordinary bystander to comprehend the secret signs which are mutually understood by the elephant and his guide—the ... pressure of one toe, or the compression of one knee, or the delicate touch of a heel, or the almost imperceptible swaying of the body to one side; the elephant detects every movement, however slight; the mighty beast obeys the unseen helm of thought, just as a huge ship yields by apparent instinct to the ... significant appendage which directs its course.

White ... the elephant may become extinct, ... author-sportsman confesses to having killed several hundred elephants. This ... in early life, and nothing now, he ... would induce him to shoot one except in self-defence. The author calls ... to a remarkable and not generally ... fact. In all his experience he never came across a sick or a dead elephant in the woods except once, and that one had evidently been recently killed in a terrible struggle with wild beasts. On the other hand elephants, although without ever studying surgery, have an extraordinary power of recovery from wounds in their wild state by plastering their hurts with mud or blowing dust upon the surface. Dust and mud combine the ... medicine chest of the elephant, and this is applied upon the most trifling as well as upon the most serious occasion. If an elephant has a very slight sore back it will quickly paint out the sore spot by blowing dust upon the part which it cannot reach with its trunk. He plasters up a bullet wound with mud. This not only keeps out the air, but the flies, which in that climate very soon put up a wound with maggots.

Sir Samuel Baker describes an adventure in which the fury and the cowardice of the elephant are equally shown. Bisgaum, a high-caste bull elephant, was the animal in question. He was bad tempered, but was supposed to be courageous. He seems to have possessed some of the traits we sometimes see exhibited by human beings. He would fling out his trunk with extreme quickness to strike a person within his reach, and would kick out sharply with his hind leg whenever a native ventured to approach his rear. A nice animal, that! After considerable watching from a concealed platform called machans, Sir Samuel Baker succeeded in getting a good shot at the magnificent tiger for which the hunt had been started. In due time the tiger appeared, dashing out of the jungle, flying across the open at a tremendous speed. Sir Samuel succeeded in getting in a good shot. The tiger gave a short but spasmodic roar and disappeared in the forest going with unabated speed. The ground was carefully examined and deep tracks were found leading into the jungle. The hunters followed the trail cautiously on foot until a dried leaf was found splashed with blood. It was evident that the tiger could not be far off, and the two elephants, Demoiselle and Bisgaum, were called up to aid in beating up the tiger, if still alive. The shikaris, or hunters, with Sir Samuel, stationed themselves on the crest of a hillside. Directly in front the ground suddenly dipped into a little dell, which formed the bed of a torrent in the rainy season.

Several shots were soon heard. The elephants immediately became wild with excitement. Changing his steed for Demoiselle, Sir Samuel advanced and discovered the tiger, at which he fired several shots until he thought life was extinct. But he would allow no one to approach it on foot to prove that the animal was quite dead. Instead of this he ordered the mahout of Bisgaum to make a turn with his elephant and advance cautiously from the right to ascertain if the tiger was quite dead.

Bisgaum approached the prostrate body of the tiger, which lay apparently dead. Suddenly the elephant halted fifteen yards from the object which had never moved. Never was such hysterical fury exhibited as that now shown by Bisgaum. It is impossible to describe the elephantine antics of this frantic animal; he kicked right and left with his hind legs alternately; he tossed his trunk in the air, trumpeting and screaming, and shook his immense head until, having nerved himself into a sufficient rage, he charged on his supposed dead enemy to vent on the lifeless carcass a hate he dared not exhibit toward him when alive.

But the tiger was not quite dead, and with its teeth and claws it seized the hind leg of the maddened Bisgaum. Never was such fury seen. The air was full of stones and dust, as the elephant kicked with such force that the tiger for a moment was lost to view in the tremendous struggle. But he kicked away from his hold with one of his long fangs broken off short to the gum, the poor, dying tiger lay helpless before his tremendous foe, who, spinning quickly about, drove his long tusks between his adversary's shoulders and finished him.

It really looked as if, after all, there was some real pluck in Bisgaum; but suddenly a reaction set in; seized with a fearful panic, the victorious elephant turned tail and rushed through the thorny jungle at the rate of twenty miles an hour, seriously threatening his brave mahout with destruction. The foolish beast ran half a mile before he stopped. Here was an elephant of unusual size; thorough training and great spirit; who displayed a most untrustworthy character. It is no wonder that Eastern armies which formerly included ranks of war elephants were so often beaten by the unreliable temper of those huge but treacherous allies.

Our author has some interesting observations about the outrage of wild animals. Contrary to the general opinion, he has not found that they are bold in the presence of an unknown danger or fly not from man if they have had no previous knowledge of firearms or other weapons. Thus the curlew is always difficult to approach, even if unmolested in swamps where the hand of man has never been raised against it. Occasionally animals show an opposite innocent fearlessness that cannot be explained. The wagtails are tame and confiding throughout all places. Beasts of prey vary even in an extraordinary degree, some of the same species being brave, others timid. No calculations can be made as to how they will act on the approach of an enemy, whether man or beast. But it is a mistake to imagine that the gaze of the human eye has an intimidating effect, especially on those of the cat tribe, such as tigers or panthers. On the contrary, it rather tends, to increase their rage, because it shows that they are under careful observation and therefore liable to attack. Whereas, if they think they are unobserved, they often pass on quietly and slink into their hiding places, except when pinched by the pangs of hunger.

In general, wild animals, like men, are always on the alert for danger. They never know from what quarter it may come, each species being a terror to those below it. For example, it is lately that a herd of wild beasts dare to stoop to drink without first examining the horizon right and left, as a band of pioneers on the Western prairies before they pitch their camps scan the plain for roving Apaches in search of scalps. Not even then do all animals drink at once, but some watch while the others slake their thirst. From the lowest animal up to man, "the roof and crown of things," it is indeed one continuous battle while life lasts.

As a rule the more highly organized an animal is, or a human being, the more conscious he becomes about the danger, the more intelligent and wary in avoiding or overcoming it, and the more interesting are the occasions when he crowds fear back and displays chivalrous action and superb courage. The tiger is naturally cautious, notwithstanding his ferocity and strength. He is dangerous when desperate, but does not willingly face danger. And yet when he does he calls forth bursts of admiration for intelligent daring that reminds us of the heroism of man.

Sir Samuel describes such an incident, when he was out on a hunt with the Rajah of Moochtagacha. There were no less than forty-seven elephants in the train. Lady Baker formed one of the hunting party, which leads her husband to say: "It was hot work for ladies—my wife was in the howdah behind me. I confess that I am not fond of the fair sex when shooting, as I think they are out of place, but I had taken Lady Baker upon this occasion at her special request."

After several hours of search for the royal game they were after the party discovered the feathery tops of a strip of tamarisk gently waving. As the day was sultry and without wind it was evident something was stirring in the dense grass. The elephants at once sounded their kettle-drum note of alarm. Conscious that the critical moment was at hand, the hunters ranged the forty-seven elephants in a ... over 200 yards long, a most ... to prevent to the ...

Slowly the procession advanced in good order.

They had not marched over sixty yards before a succession of tremendous roars rang on the still air, a magnificent challenge of battle. At the same moment a large tiger sprang from the coppice, but instead of attacking any of the elephants, he fearlessly charged along the line, swerving here and there as he made ... demonstrations of attack upon several elephants in turn. It was a magnificent sight to see this grand animal, in the fullest strength and vigor, defy the line of advancing monsters, every one of which quailed before the energy of his attack and threatening power of his awe-inspiring roars. Having checked the advance by this noble display of courage; the tiger bounded into the thicket and disappeared from view. One would think that such an exhibition, reminding one of the exploits of the old paladins, would have aroused in his pursuers a chivalrous admiration that might have allowed him to escape unscathed. But I regret to say he did not thus pass the gauntlet. Several shots were fired at him, and a few moments later this hero of the wilderness was found lying in the bush dead!

ASIATIC ELEPHANT.

SUBTERRANEAN FIRES.

Vivid Description of a Volcanic Eruption in Hawaii.

Some idea of the terror of volcanoes may be gathered from an account of an eruption in one of the Hawaiian islands, as graphically described in the London Budget, when the crater was filled from five hundred to six hundred feet deep with molten lava, the immense weight of which broke through a subterranean passage of twenty-seven miles and reached the sea, forty miles distant, in two days, flowing for three weeks and heating the water twenty miles distant.

Rocks melted like wax in its path; forests crackled and blazed before its fervent heat; the works of man were to it but as a scroll in the flames.

Imagine Niagara's stream, above the brink of the falls, with its dashing, whirling, madly raging waters, hurrying on to their plunge, instantaneously converted into fire—a gory-hued river of fused minerals; volumes of hissing steam arising; smoke curling upward from ten thousand vents, which give utterance to many deep-toned mutterings and sullen, confined clamorings; gases detonating and shrieking as they burst from their hot prison-house; the heavens lurid with flames; the atmosphere dark and oppressive; the horizon murky with vapors and gleaming with the reflected contest.

Such was the scene as the fiery cataract, leaping a precipice of fifty feet, poured its flood upon the ocean. The old line of coast, a barrier of compact, indurated lava, whitened, cracked and fell. The waters recoiled and sent forth a tempest of spray, then foamed and lashed around and over the melted rock, they boiled with white heat, and the roar of the conflicting agencies grew fiercer and louder. The reports of the exploding gases were distinctly heard twenty-five miles distant, and were likened to a whole broadside of heavy artillery. Streaks of the intensest light glanced like lightning in all directions; the outskirts of the burning lava as it fell, cooled by the shock, were shivered into millions of fragments and scattered by the strong wind in sparkling showers far into the country. Six weeks later at the base of the hills the water continued scalding hot and sent forth clouds of steam at every wash of the waves.

Big Australian Logs.

T. H. White, general manager of the Kaurip Lumber Company of Auckland, New Zealand, has been in Duluth during the past week to buy machinery adapted to the cutting of logs from five to ten feet in diameter. His company employs a capital of $6,000,000. Mr. White is a native New Zealander. The island exports large quantities of lumber, wool, flax and various gums. Wages are about the same as in the United States. Snow is a wonder to him, as he never saw it in his own land. There is virtually no Winter, and in Summer the thermometer never goes above eighty degrees.—[Argus, Fargo (North Dakota).

What is Love.

What is Love? went the query round;
Slowly each one an answer found.

Love, said the maiden, is a youth,
Pure in his purpose, strong in the truth,
Noble in action, gentle in speech,
Ready to learn or ready to teach,
Full of the hero's spirit and fire,
Regal in manner and in desire,
Straight as Apollo, mild as a dove,—
These are his glories, and this is Love.

Love, said the young man, is a maid,
Fair as the sunset's flush and shade,
White of soul and gentle in mind,
Sharing the griefs of all her kind,
Ready to bear the world's sad stress,
Filled with infinite tenderness,
Moved by all that a heart may move,—
These are her beauties, and this is Love.

So I heard them, and in my soul
Something whispered me: Both are wrong;
Each hath part and neither the whole.
Then the answer I'd sought so long
Came as a vision, and I heard
This, the diviner law and word.

Love is not human, for life is short.
And Love has never passed from his court;
Love is wise as the stars are wise;
Man has only earth-seeing eyes;
Love has never been touched by death;
What is life but a moment's breath?
Love is not youth; for youth must err;
Passions his unstained soul may stir;
Love is not as a maiden pure;—
Even her faith may not endure.
Make Love grand and noble and wise,
Give him a woman's tender guise,
Fashion him as you can or may;
This is not Love, for this is clay.

Deep in my heart, then, the answer stirred;
This was what in my soul I heard:
Love is a spirit, hid in the clod;
Love is an angel, and sent of God.

Advance in Middle Pacific.

BY HOWARD M. BOYNTON.

The wealthy Mr. Peters sat in his Wall Street office, to reach which one had to go through a counting room and two other apartments, watching the last quotations of the day and making notes of his profits on a piece of paper. The ribbon curled about him as it passed through his hands, and made a graceful pile at his feet.

"One hundred and thirty-seven," he said aloud, "and a half—and three-quarters—thirty-eight—and a quarter—I knew that was good—thirty-nine—it'll reach fifty this week—and a half again. Bless me, if it don't beat anything!"

And he leaned back in his chair and chuckled.

"They tell me I'm no financier," he said, "and may be I'm not. But if that Middle Pacific keeps on going up I'll be a—there it goes again."

He rubbed his eye-glasses and leaned forward as the machine began to click.

"Forty!" he exclaimed, "and a half—and three-quarters—and forty-one—bless my soul—forty-two—three—four—five—fifty-five—sixty — seventy-five!"

A gasp, as the instrument halted for breath, escaped Mr. Peters.

"One hundred and seventy-five," he said solemnly, "and I bought at ninety-four!"

As he sank back in his chair the office door slowly opened, and a suspiciously timid voice inquired:

"May I come in, papa?"

Mr. Peters gave consent in his most gracious fashion, and a pretty young lady advanced to receive a paternal embrace.

"I don't want to disturb you," she said, "but I was so anxious to see you that I couldn't wait any longer."

Mr. Peters benevolently overlooked the intrusion.

"I want to talk to you about—about Charlie."

Mr. Peters frowned.

"That young man again," he said. "I thought I had told you to forget about him."

"I know you did; but I thought that perhaps you—you might—"

"You ought not to expect me to change my mind on such a matter, for I do not hastily decide those things. You know—there goes that ticker again!"

Mr. Peters grasped the ribbon nervously and straightened his glasses.

"Seventy-six," he cried, excitedly—then a pause—"and seventy-seven—eighty—eighty-one—ninety—one hundred—one hundred and—did you ever see anything like it?"

Miss Peters said she had not.

"One hundred and five above—two hundred and five altogether—I never heard any—now it's two hundred and ten!"

Mr. Peters leaped to his feet, and but for the restraining influence of a recent attack of gout would have danced the Saratoga Lanciers about the office.

"Papa," his daughter said, "won't you let me explain. Charlie has prospects—splendid prospects,—and when he marries me he will have—I mean before he marries me he will have plenty of money."

"But I can't stop to attend to this now. Mr. Smith may be a very deserving young man, but really I cannot think of such a thing now."

"You don't know how we both feel," Miss Peters pleaded, "or you wouldn't hesitate. Charlie has been admitted to the Exchange now, and with your assistance he could soon make money."

"Of course he could," Mr. Peters assented, "but I'm not an asylum for feeble-minded—there goes that ticker!"

The ribbon ran out again, and Mr. Peters, with mouth and eyes wide open, gasped:

"Two hundred and forty-nine!"

Miss Peters bit her lip to repress either tears or a smile—an observer could not have told which—and went on with her case.

"He is well educated, you know, and only needs such a start as you could easily give him to get along. If I don't marry him I shall never marry any one."

Her father stuck his hands in his pockets, and turned from the ticker with every feature of his face wrinkled into a smile.

"You may not be a very wise girl," he said, "but you've got a father who understands his business. Look at that ticker, will you? Uncle Henry told me to sell Middle Pacific, and I would make a fortune. I bought all I could, and it's run up so high the ticker can't count it. I tell you I'm a wonder in finance, and before I'm through I'll"—

"But—Charlie," Miss Peters said, timidly. "Won't you let us get married?"

The ticker clicked out again, and this is what it left on the ribbon:

"M. P. 278."

"Marry him if you want to," Mr. Peters shouted. "Marry any one! Look at that, will you—two hundred and seventy-eight. Ever see stocks go up like that in your life?"

His daughter said she thought it was very remarkable, and that she was supremely happy. Then she kissed him and left, with the ticker still denoting a rapid rise in Middle Pacific.

In front she met a pale young man who was pacing nervously up and down the sidewalk, and to him she confided the intelligence that everything was as it should be.

"He's consented," she said, "although those horrid stocks have made him almost crazy. I wonder when they'll stop going up?"

The young man shook his head.

"I don't know," he said. "I fixed the ticker so that it would run up to seventeen thousand if it was good time. I was so anxious to have him give in that I never thought of consequences. He'll find out presently that Middle Pacific is only worth forty-six, and then"—

"And then?" she echoed.

"Then we'll be married," the young man replied.—[Anderson Bazaar.

Growth of the Use of Spectacles.

The sale and use of glasses have been growing rapidly of late years. Many children have been given glasses when their grandparents, because they did not know so well what was good for them, would have gone on and suffered without them for ten or fifteen years and then lost their sight entirely. It is a mistake to suppose that the wearing of glasses weakens the eyesight. Its effect is quite the reverse. Total failure will come much quicker where the eye is compelled to do so much more than it can accomplish with ease; where normal sight may often be restored if one be not too old, by the simple assistance of a pair of glasses. It often happens that one eye needs a stronger glass than the other, just as a man may be deaf in one ear while the other is perfect. In this case nothing is easier than for the optician to find just what each eye needs and give each the proper curvature of lens that will best serve the purpose.

But there is one class of fellows whom no optician has yet been able to properly fit, and it may require the rise of another Bacon to dispose of his case. That is the fellow who wears glasses because he thinks it adds elegance to his looks. He puts on a pair of perfectly plain lenses, hitches his string up over the ear, and then goes forth to stare the world out of countenance. He wears them all the time, although his sight is perfectly good, and takes refuge behind them while he gazes at men he would not have dared behold before. He is worse than a fop with a monocle, for that is known at the sight to be a thing whom it were base flattery to call a man. But this later wearer of early glasses anticipates natural decay, cumbers the earth with the sight of a being who assumes the only weakness he does not possess.—[Chicago Herald.

Selenium.

Selenium is not a metal, but belongs to the sulphur group of elements. Its electrical conductivity varies according to the amount of light falling upon it, just as the chemical relations of silver are altered by the same means. By this power Professor Bell was enabled to construct an optical telephone, and actually transmitted words and sentences between two distant points which were not connected in any way except by a beam of light, which faithfully carried the vibrations of the voice to a selenium disk, by which they were transformed into electric energy, and reproduced in an ordinary telephone. Whether we shall ever be able to see our friends at a distance, as we now talk with them, is exceedingly problematical; but, if we ever do so, it will doubtless be through this mysterious connection between light, electricity and the element selenium.

Her Father.

The faith of little children in their fathers and mothers is one of the most beautiful things in the world, but its manifestations sometimes provoke the involuntary smile. The New York Tribune reports that a Broadway car ran into the rear end of an express wagon with such force as to tip it completely over. A little child about 5 years old was on the seat with the driver.

The man was pitched head first up on the sidewalk, but landed on his hands and knees, and received only a few slight bruises. The child, who clung to the seat, fell underneath the wagon. Fortunately the high seat prevented the weight of the truck from falling on her, and she was dragged from under the wagon [illegible]

One of the bystanders, as he began to brush her dress, asked if she was hurt.

"Oh, no," said the little girl, [illegible] papa wouldn't [illegible]

The six-year-old daughter of a hotel keeper at Hicksville, Long Island, took a draught of whiskey to cure a cold which caused her death, as shown by the post-mortem examination.

A quick-witted Iowa woman, noting the invention of a ballot-box that cannot be stuffed, said: "Now, if some one will invent a voter that cannot be stuffed with beer, brag or bribery, we shall have a long stride toward a better government."

A rather striking evidence of the equality of the negro with the white man before the law is afforded by the fact that in Covington, Ga., a white man, Seaborn Smith, has been convicted and sentenced to death for making a criminal assault upon a mulatto girl.

We have, in our journey through the world, seen men so full of hell that they seemed willing to lose the chance of a good thing themselves, provided it was certain that a neighbor would lose the same thing. Such a spirit may be popular in the lower regions, but it is not well thought of in heaven or earth.--Russellville Idea.

A young lady in a Northport (Maine) school compared ill in this manner: "Nominative, ill; comparative, worse; superlative, dead." The whole class looked up very much surprised, and the master with an effort to control the sadness which he felt, arose and said "Scholars you can have fifteen minutes for the funeral.

Robert Ingersoll has been sometime described as a man without any belief in God or the immortality of the soul, but his beautiful tribute to Lawrence Barrett closes with these words:

Will this drama have an end? Will the curtain fall at last? Will it rise again upon another stage. Reason says "perhaps," and hope still whispers "yes."

Evidently as Colonel Ingersoll gets along in life he is modifying his views. —Mobile Register.

The nose of a small boy having been put out of joint by the advent of a new baby brother with tremendous lung power, he asked: "Did little brother come from heaven, ma?" "Yes dear." He listened to the baby's yells for sometime, and said: "I don't blame the angels for bouncing him do you ma?"—Young Woman's Journal.

Another cotton picker has been invented in Texas which will certainly revolutionize the cotton picking of the country if it will do near what is claimed for it. The weight of the machine is about one thousand pounds, of light draught and can be easily drawn by an average team of horses or mules, and only three hands are necessary to operate it. It will pick ninety per cent of all the open cotton and will gather from three to four thousand pounds per day. The lint is fully as free from dirt or dust as that picked by hand and the machine does not injure the plant.

Several papers are advocating the pardon of Ike Vincent who was sentenced to the penitentiary for fifteen years for his theft of $212,000 from the State. Vincent was undoubtedly the tool of others in his crime. He has been confined in the penitentiary for four years, and is now such a physical wreck that he cannot hope to live out the term of his sentence. Gov. Jones could, with executive clemency, make a once happy home, again endurable. This is the humane view of the question. Another point to be considered is the fact that if Vincent is kept in confinement much longer he will necessarily be placed in the hospital where he will be a further expense to the State until death comes to his relief. It cannot be claimed that good government in Alabama demands Vincent's life for his crime. Though there are a few extreme politicians who may warn the Governor that it is not to his political interest to interfere with Vincent's case, yet it is not at all clear that it would help the Democratic party to let Vincent die in the penitentiary, if party interests are to be considered. Gov. Jones' record has shown that he has the courage to act in the matter as his convictions and the good name of the State shall dictate, regardless of personal or party aggrandizement.

OVER THE COUNTY.

Chilton County Teacher's Institute.

Convened at Cedar Grove, March 27th and 28th, 1891. The Institute was called to order by Prof. Hicks and opened with prayer by him.

A. B. Harwood appointed secretary pro tem.

Miscellaneous business was the election of a secretary which resulted in the election of A. B. Harwood. Welcome address by A. B. Harwood.

First subject discussed: Mental Training of pupils, by H. L. Davis, who after a few remarks, called on Prof. Corderie, who as usual handled the subject with vigor and power. He was followed by Prof. Hicks, who told the teachers their duty in developing the mental faculties of those committed to their care.

Prof. Crump gave us a fine talk on the responsibility resting on the teachers. Meeting adjourned until 2 p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

Meeting called to order at 2 p. m. by Prof. Hicks.

First subject called up. Importance of Method in teaching. Opened by Prof. Hicks, followed by Professors Crump and Davis, who gave their views in fine language.

Second subject, The requisites for success in teaching. Responded to by J. L. Huffstutler who read a well worded paper on the subject. Prof. Hicks then gave his idea of a successful teacher, followed by Prof. Corderie. Next subject. Private studies of the Teacher. Discussed by W. C. Robinson and B. F. Crump. After enrollment of the following teachers, the Institute adjourned until nine o'clock Saturday, March, 28th:

R E R Hicks, B F Crump, J. M. Scott, H L Davis, W C Roberson J. L Griffin, A B Harwood, W S Garner, J L Huffstutler, J W Moore, W N Jones, C B Brown, J E Knight, Miss Minnie Philips, Miss Lafaris Deadwilder, Miss Belle Watts, Miss McGee, Mrs. Bowdoin.

SATURDAY.

The Institute was called to order by Prof. Hicks. Prayer offered by W. N. Johns. First subject the daily preparations which the teacher should bring to the school room. Opened by W. N. Johns, who read an able paper on the necessity of the teacher preparing himself for his daily labor. Followed by Professors Speer, Hicks and Harwood. Second Topic. The teachers Influence on the character of pupils. Discussed by J. L. Griffin in quite a flowery manner. Next subject, The government of a school generally, upon which Prof. Speer read an able paper, followed by Professors Corderie and Hicks. The Institute adjourned until 2 p. m.

At 2 p. m. The Institute was called to order. First topic, The Gradual development of the Mind. Responded to by Mrs. M. A. Bowdoin in a fine paper showing a fine display of talent in the writer. Next subject, Length and Frequency of recess. Opened by W. S. Garner followed by Professors Corderie and Hicks. "Progress of Education in Chilton County, argued by J. W. Moore. Next subject, The Benefits resulting from Teachers Institutes. Opened by Prof. Hicks, followed by W. N. Johns and Prof. Corderie. The following committee were appointed to draft a program for the next Institute: G. L. Speer, B. H. Crump and J. L. Huffstutler.

The next session of the Institute is to be held at Pleasant Grove, the last Friday and Saturday in May. The following resolutions were read and adopted:

Resolved 1st, that we, the teachers present will use our influence in the future to induce other teachers to attend our sessions.

Resolved 2nd, that the thanks of the Institute is hereby tendered to the people of the community for the kind hospitality shown us during our stay among them. The convention then adjourned.

For the Negro.

The Wisconsin assembly was taken up with the civil rights bill, which puts the black man on equality with white men. An amendment restricting the provisions of the bill to land and water tariff accommodations, proposed by the Democrats of the judiciary committee, was agreed to, and, as amended, the bill was passed by a strict party vote. The Democrats during the debate, charged the Republicans with forcing this issue upon the party in power after refusing to pass it during twenty-five years of rule in the State. The original bill made it a criminal offense to refuse the privileges of any public place to a black man. The amended bill applies only to inns and conveyances, by land or water, and makes it a penal offense.

In Society.

Hostess—Miss Rackshaw, let me introduce the Hon. Mr. Goldmedal.

Mr. Goldmedal (immature but rising statesman)—Howdy, Miss Rackshaw? I believe I've been appointed by the—the steering committee to take you out to supper.

It begins to be apparent that farmers should pay attention to what is under their farms as well as attending to the surface. We have just read of a western farmer who sunk a shaft on his place, and in going down 100 feet struck a 5 foot stratum of fire clay, a ten foot vein of mineral paint, a 20 inch vein of coal and a deposit of marble. 5 feet in thickness.

The Equitable Life Assurance Society
OF THE UNITED STATES.

In selecting a company in which to insure, why not take the best instead of being persuaded by the eloquence of representatives of weaker companies to take what is less advantageous? It is the company, not the agent, with whom the assured must deal after the policy is once taken. It is the company, not the agent that pays the dividends and meets claims when they mature. It costs no more to assure in the best and strongest company than any other established on a sound business basis; therefore, we again ask, WHY NOT TAKE THE BEST?

"Two Weeks Too Soon."

Recently a party consisting of the following widely known turkey hunters, H. J. Callen, A. E. Bivings, J. R. Kemp, J. M. Dawson, and last but not least, the genial and clever, Uncle Paddy Smith, started out to make war on all the gobblers in the hills between Yellowleaf and Waxahatchie creeks.

We struck camp at McKee's fish traps. After resting and appeasing our appetites, we concluded to try and locate some of the sought for gobblers, but after carefully watching and listening all the evening, the party assembled at camp with one little squirrel.

The indications were that the next day would be fair and our luck would improve, but vain hope. It began to rain with daylight, which forced us to move. It rained all day and the following night and we kept under our tent listening to Uncle Paddy telling of the marvelous cures he had made of different diseases with his roots and "yerbs" found in the woods. It might be well for all who read this to remember that he offers to cure any and all diseases. Thursday morning we got our plunder together and started for home, as the rain continued to fall. Three of the party took a short cut through the woods on foot leaving the Judge to pilot the wagons and buggies to Mount Zion Church, the Judge claiming that he knew the way, but before we had gone far he appealed to the writer who had never been that far from Clanton before, to know the way. With the guidance of Mr. Dick Aycock we finally reached the church, where we learned that the gobblers had kept up an awful racket the night before. So we proceeded to strike camp again, and hunt for those gobblers; but our bad luck clung to us, and it was a jack o' lantern or ignis fatuus hunt. We came near getting a shot at one old fellow, but about the time Mr. McKee got started towards him Uncle Paddy put in his appearance, and his gobblership seeing such a formidable looking enemy, took his wings and flew away, much to the chagrin of Mr. McKee. We had much fun out of Uncle Pat about it; and I think he swore off. After we had all assembled at camp again we got together our best for breakfast, and on our way home, Mr. McKee treated us to some of his good spirits. Just before reaching town we had a talk about the trip and all agreed with Judge Callen that we were "two weeks too soon."

A BIG LAND SALE.

Maj. Howison Sells to the Ala. Coal and Iron Co.

A few days since S. D. Logan, as attorney for Maj. A. P. Howison, the largest real estate owner in this county, perfected the sale of eleven thousand acres of fine timber land lying in Bibb and Chilton counties including the large tract purchased a few years ago by Maj. Howison from the Fitzgerald Saw Mill Co.

The purchasers of this large body of land are mostly non-residents, but organized under the name of Alabama Coal & Iron Co. The terms of the sale were not made known to us, further than Maj. Howison has or is to receive $50,000 for the land.

The company that purchased is the same that bought the land and improvements at Shelby Iron Works about a year ago, and it is understood this large body of fine timber will be burned into charcoal to run their immense iron furnaces at that place.—Bibb Blade.

OUR
$1 A WEEK
Club System
while as convenient to the buyer as any instalment system, is a wholesale spot cash system to us. The co-operation of the club members sells us 38 watches in each $38 Watch Club, and we get cash from the Club for each watch before it goes out, though each member only pays $1 a week. This is why we give you more for your money than any one else and why we are doing the largest watch business in the world. We sell only first quality goods, but our prices are about what others get for second quality. Our $10 Silver Watch is a substantial Silver (adulteration of any kind) Stem-Wind American Lever Watch—either hunting case or open. Our $25.00 Watch is a Stem-wind Open Face, first quality, stiffened Gold American Lever Watch, guaranteed to wear 20 years. It is fully equal to any watch sold for $50 to others. We find a first-class Stiffened Gold Case much more satisfactory and serviceable than any Solid Gold Case that can be sold at less than double the money, as these solid cases are invariably thin, worthless of low quality, and worthless after short use. Our $38 Watch contains numerous important personal improvements, of vital importance to accurate running—Patent Dustproof Pallet Lever Wind, &c., which are considered worthless. It is fully equal for accuracy, appearance, durability and service, to any $75 Watch, either Open Face or Hunting. Our $45 and $50 Stem-wind Watch is especially recommended for the prospering and well to do wage earning and railroad Watch men. Open Face or Hunting. All these prices are without regard to the present fluctuations in gold or the silver dollar, which is worth, to-day, 90 cents in gold. The Appleton Watch Co.

Purify Your Blood

At all seasons of the year this is most emphatically the one in which to purify your blood.

There is a certain tonic in winter air which is exhilarating and beneficial, and the loss of which when milder weather comes in the spring makes us feel dull, tired and

"Played Out."

Besides this, our close confinement indoors, breathing air charged with impurities, contaminates our blood and makes liable the appearance of unexpected diseases.

Therefore the necessity of purifying the blood, and therefore the popularity at this season of Hood's Sarsaparilla, the best blood purifier and strengthener, medicine. If you have never taken Hood's Sarsaparilla, try it this spring.

Scrofula Sores.

"When my boy was two years old he was attacked and suffered a long time with scrofula sores. The physician at length told us to give him Hood's Sarsaparilla, which we did. Two bottles cured him. He is now 10 years old and has not had any sign of scrofula since. We recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla to neighbors and friends."—Mrs. E. C. Clifper, 8 Kidder Street, Cleveland, Ohio.

"I have for a long time been using Hood's Sarsaparilla, and believe me, I would not be without it. As a spring medicine it is invaluable."—E. A. Simons, 136 Ontario Street, Chicago, Ill.

Hood's Sarsaparilla is worthy favorable consideration for the great good it has done many people in your own town, even offering your personal friends. The least inquiry will bring to your notice well known people who "think the world of Hood's Sarsaparilla."

"It is Invaluable."

"I have used Hood's Sarsaparilla in my family for the past four years, and for a thorough blood purifier it has no superior. It is invaluable as a spring medicine; it invigorates the whole system and tones up the stomach, and since I became acquainted with Hood's Sarsaparilla I always take several bottles in the spring, and, as occasion requires, the rest of the year."—L. U. Gilman, Aurelia, Iowa.

In the Eyes.

"My little girl's eyes became so sore owing to humor in the blood, that we were afraid she would lose her eyesight and had to keep her in a dark room for six weeks. We tried everything we could think of but nothing did her any good until we tried Hood's Sarsaparilla. Her eyes at once began to get better, and now she is entirely well. We think it is a very nice medicine."—E. B. Grisso, Henniker, N. H.

"I take Hood's Sarsaparilla as a spring tonic, and I recommend it to all who have that tired feeling."—C. Parmelee, 349 Bridge St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Shoot the Spy

A cough or cold is a spy which has stealthily come inside the lines of health and is there to discover some vulnerable point in the fortification of the constitution which is guarding your well-being. That point discovered the spy reports it to the enemy on the outside. The enemy is the changeable winter climate. If the cold gets in, look out for an attack at the weak point. To avoid this, shoot the spy, kill the cold, using SCOTT'S EMULSION of pure Norwegian Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda as the weapon. It is an expert cold slayer, and fortifies the system against Consumption, Scrofula, General Debility, and all Anæmic and Wasting Diseases (specially in Children). Especially helpful for children to prevent their taking cold. Palatable as Milk.

SPECIAL.—Scott's Emulsion is non-secret, and is prescribed by the Medical Profession all over the world, because its ingredients are scientifically combined in such a manner as to greatly increase their remedial value.

CAUTION.—Scott's Emulsion is put up in salmon-colored wrappers. Be sure and get the genuine. Prepared only by Scott & Bowne, Manufacturing Chemists, New York. Sold by all Druggists.

ALLIANCE TALKS.

NEWS OF THE ORDER FROM ALL SECTIONS.

Items of Interest to Alliancemen Everywhere.

The representatives of the various farmers' alliances in the county held a meeting at Opelika, Ala., and closed a trade for the purchase of the Renfro warehouse in that city. The consideration paid was $6,500. The alliances have been leasing their warehouse for several years, and it has paid a handsome dividend.

***

The report of Secretary Stromberg of the Minnesota Farmers' Alliance, shows that the organization is making the same phenomental growth as last year. More than 11,000 members have been enrolled since the election in November, and Stromberg says six or seven sub-alliances are being organized weekly. The present number of lodges is 1,315, with a total membership of 52,600.

***

THE ALLIANCE IN NEW YORK.

President Polk, of the National Farmers' Alliance, has issued a proclamation stating that New York State will be officially organized April 22d. The ceremony will take place at some point in the central part of the State, and it is said that one hundred or more local Alliances will be represented. The Alliance officers affirm that New York farmers have been joining the order by thousands within the past few months. The Farmers' League, having its headquarters at Springfield, Mass., outnumbered the Alliance in New York State membership until lately, but most of the members of the League have now joined the Alliance as well. The Citizens' Alliance, the new political organization through which the Alliance acts in politics, is also to be introduced in both cities and rural districts in the State. Branches will be organized in New York city within a few weeks.

THE ALLIANCE IN NEW ENGLAND.

The Boston Advertiser has heretofore ridiculed the farmers' movement and refused to recognize its strength and importance. It has made light of the Alliance in the south and west, and predicted that the order would not result in good to the country. But now that it has entered the gates of New England, it seems a formidable affair, which will not down at the bidding of a newspaper, but threatens to become epidemic on quarantined ground. It has gained the recognition it deserves, and here it is in The Advertiser's own words: "No one will deny that the gentlemen who have seen fit to inaugurate the Farmers' Alliance movement in New England are men of considerable mental power and men who are thoroughly in earnest. They are at least entitled to a respectful hearing, and can speak for themselves. They represent an important factor in American politics of to-day, and their influence in the next congress will be evident in the legislation which that congress enacts. Their visit to New England, therefore, is certainly an event worthy of notice, whatever may be its results. However much the cast may condemn the objectionable propaganda of the Farmers' Alliance, it will not do to depend upon ignoring or ridiculing those doctrines. They must be met fairly as living issues, and must be defeated by argument and common effort.

It is indisputable that the coming congress is much more friendly towards the Alliance programme than was its predecessor, and it is still an open question whether the fifty-third congress will not adopt that programme. It is very evident, therefore, that the gentlemen who spoke yesterday at Concord, N. H., as representatives of the Farmers' Alliance movement represent no contemptible nor insignificant party. They are neither fools nor madmen, but are shrewd, capable and prominent in their party.

***

WHAT INGALLS THINKS.

Ex-Senator John J. Ingalls, of Kansas, who was defeated for the senatorship by an Alliancemen, in an interview, has the following to say regarding the Alliance movement:

"This movement is building greater than the majority of people in the eastern slope are willing to admit. It presents one of the most interesting political problems of the age. Here, in the east, where industries and employments are diversified, its progress is not appreciated, and the strength it is gaining is not understood. In the west, a purely agricultural section, it has taken a deep hold on the public mind, and the evolution of the movement is closely watched by our deepest thinkers and political economists. These farmers have concluded that there are wrongs existing that need adjustment. The growth of the organization is not ethereal or spontaneous, but has come with a strong undercurrent of reason that will ultimately land it on a solid foundation which will defy all the efforts of political agitators to shake. Of course, the blatant demagogue, whose claims are unreasonable and untenable, will not be the ones to carry this movement to the success I look for it to reach. You will find, however, that, with the force behind it, and with even partial success, these agitators will be forced to give way to the more conservative element, and the leadership will be assumed by men impelled alone by philanthropic or patriotic feelings, and whose counsel can safely be followed, with the assurance that it will lead to tangible results. The adjustment of the tariff, the expansion of the circulating medium, and other measures, the absence of which thinking farmers believe underlie the stagnation that now afflicts them, will be advocated by the best of minds in the movement in such a way as to carry with them a strong popular feeling.

THE LECTURE SYSTEM.

A plan for the organization of a lecture system has been formulated by President Polk and sent out, in the form of a circular letter, to the Alliances for their consideration. The letter is as follows:

To the Membership of the National Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union.

In compliance with instructions from the National Legislative Council of the National Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union, I present herewith a plan for the organization of a lecture system throughout our entire order, which was adopted by the council at its meeting in the city of Washington, Feb. 4th, 1891.

I was further instructed to designate the date on which the first meetings of the County and District Legislative Councils should be held. All lecturers of the subordinate bodies of our order, together with the county lecturers of their respective counties, will meet at the same time and place at which their county meeting is held in the month of April. All county lecturers will meet on Wednesday, the 6th of May next, at such place within their respective congressional districts as may be designated by the State president, for the purpose of electing a lecturer for their respective congressional districts, and for the transaction of such other business as may come before them.

The presidents of the States will at once designate to the county legislative councils the place at which the district legislative councils, respectively, will meet on the 6th of May next, and will also indicate to the district councils at their meeting, the place and date at which the State legislative council will meet.

Believing that the plan adopted will prove an efficient and powerful auxiliary in our work, as a great and active educational agency, the national legislative council cordially and earnestly recommend it to the entire brotherhood throughout the United States for immediate adoption. It is commended as a means for securing that unity of action and uniform co-operation which is absolutely essential to the success of our cause.

Let us all resolve that the year 1891 shall be distinguished above all the years of our history for vigorous, active, successful work. Let our great order be thoroughly assigned on the principles we have enumerated, and assured victory will be ours. Select the members best qualified in subordinate county and district bodies for this important and responsible work.

Have this plan read and discussed in every organization belonging to our order. Let the watchword be: "Forward," pass along the lines. L. L. Polk, President N. F. A. and I. U.

HOW SOME MEN PROPOSE.

One Person Who Is Interested In the Subject.

"I am a crank," said the club man, "on the subject of proposals. I would rather hear a story of how a man asked the woman he loved to marry him than to take a trip to Europe. I don't know why I take so strong an interest in this, unless it is that I had such a hard time to get my wife to accept me. I had been in love with her for years. I had proposed to her seven times and she refused me every time. Finally I went to her in despair and said: 'Well, Mollie, I've asked you to marry me seven times, and you have declined my name. I'm going to ask you once more, and if you don't marry me, I shall go out West and stay there.'

"'Well, Jack,' she said, 'if you feel that way about it, I'll marry you.' To this day she cannot tell me why she refused me so often to marry me after all.

"There's my friend, Congressman N——. He was a poor young man, and one day he went to a young woman he had known for a long time.

"'Nell,' he said, 'I have been waiting till I had enough money to get married. My salary was raised yesterday. Will you marry me next week?'

"'Wait until next month,' she said.

"'No, next week'; and they were married next week.

"Brown, the lawyer, was a careless young fellow. The woman whom he loved would not marry him.

"'You're the most reckless man in the world,' she said, 'about your money affairs. When you get $5,000 in the bank I may marry you; if you still want me.'

"He went away and saved $5,000. She married him and to-day he's a rich man. He learned economy while winning his wife.

"My friend Colonel H—— enlisted at the outbreak of the war.

"'Joe,' he said to the girl he wanted to marry, 'I am going down South to fight. Will you marry me now or wait till I come back?'

"'Right now, Sam,' she said, and that afternoon he marched away.

"My brother proposed in a cool way. He hadn't been able to make up his mind what he was going to do in life, and one day the woman who is his wife now said:

"'Charley (they were second cousins), what in the world are you going to make out of yourself?'

"'Just whatever, you make out of me,' he said, 'you've got lots more sense than I have, Mame.'

"Has any one here any stories to tell about proposals," continued the story-teller. "I don't know of a single case where a man went down on his knees. I would like to hear of one. No one will tell one, eh? Well, I'm sorry. I like to hear about proposals."—[New York Tribune.

Medicine Among the Mongols.

Medicine also are much sought after by them. While I was at Dulan-kue nearly every one in the village came to see me, and most of the people asked for medicines whether they were suffering from any complaint or no. Plasters were in great demand, as all the villagers had rheumatism, and the tighter the plasters stuck the better they were held to be. I had with me a bottle of Eno's fruit salts, and tried to give some to the people, but when they saw the salts boiling and fizzing they thought there must be some magic about the medicine and would have none of it.

Most of their troubles, sores, and eye diseases come from dirty habits, but one can never persuade them of the necessity of keeping clean. A friend of mind was once travelling among the Mongols, and an old crone came to him and begged some medicine to put on a sore. He told her that before applying the salve it would be necessary to wash herself. She gave it back to him, saying, "I am sixty-seven years old, and I have never washed in my life; do you suppose I am going to begin now?"

Mongol physicians feel the patient's pulse on both wrists at the same time, and never ask any questions; or at least none concerning the origin and progress of the complaint, for if they did it would be held that they had shown ignorance in their profession.—[Century.

A Twirling Stone.

There has been discovered about half a mile west of the Bargytown ledges, a twirling stone of about five tons weight. It has always been regarded as a boulder, and from the way it is poised on the rock beneath it, no one could see why it should not rock. Hundreds have tried to rock it in vain, and the surprise of the man who first felt it move under pressure may better be imagined than described. It moves hard, of course, but it moves, the finder informs us, round as if it was placed upon a pivot. It has been carefully examined, and while it looks like a boulder, several allege that it must be a ceremonial stone set there by some prehistoric race. This rock is creating great interest among the boulder hunters of eastern Connecticut.

All merchants who want to build up their business should advertise in this paper, as it will pay them to do so.

To Break a Dog From Eating Eggs.

Divide a heaping teaspoonful of tartar emetic into eight or ten doses. Break off the end of an egg, empty a part of the contents and stir into the remainder left in the shell a dose of tartar emetic. Confine the dog in a room, or tie him, and give him the doctored egg. In an hour or two he will be trying to turn himself wrong side out. As soon as he is over the nausea, give him a second egg and a third, if he will eat it. When he refuses to eat the egg, and lets lie by him for several hours untouched, pry open his mouth and force the egg down his throat. Afterward you may trust him in your hen house.

The object in tying the dog is to let him get nothing else to eat while he is under treatment, or he may think it was the last thing eaten that made him so sick. The idea is to convince him that eggs no longer will lie on his stomach.

Strange Customs.

Some peculiar customs of Korak, in the peninsula of Kamscatka, are reported by the noted Russian explorer, Mr. George Kennan. There, the young man who would marry, has to work two or three years for his prospective father-in-law, and then win his bride by catching her in a chase through the tents, in which the girl is supposed to be fleeing from him, assisted in her flight by other women, who at the same time hinder her pursuer and beat him unmercifully with their sticks. Another queer custom is that of putting to death their sick and old, but Mr. Kennan found that those advancing in years look forward to this end with as much complacency as we do to a natural death.

Manners for Boys.

In the street—Hat lifted when saying "Good-bye" or "How do you do?" Also when offering a lady a seat or acknowledging a favor.

Keep step with any one you walk with. Always precede a lady upstairs, but ask if you shall precede her in going through a crowd or public place.

At the street door—Hat off the moment you step in a house or private office.

Let a lady pass first always, unless she asks you to precede her.

In the parlor—Stand till every lady in the room, also older people, are seated.

Rise if a lady enters the room after you are seated, and stand till she takes a seat.

Look people straight in the face when they are speaking to you.

The Boy for You.

When I find a boy that raises popcorn, or chickens, or honey, or strawberries, or onions, I just like to take that boy by the hand and claim relationship; and when our great nation of people get to where they can offer the boys encouragement in the way of good prices, we are on the road to better things. I allude especially to the boys that go out in the fields and work for themselves under God's clear sky, instead of hanging around the factories, begging for a chance to be "bossed" by somebody.—Gleaning.

A CORRESPONDENT of an exchange says if your horse has lock jaw take strong tobacco and put it on each side of the jaws while they are locked, and, in a bad case, bathe all over the body, and your horse will be well and eating in a few hours.

LADIES needing a tonic, or children who want building up, should take Brown's Iron Bitters. It is pleasant to take, cures Malaria, Indigestion, Biliousness and Liver Complaints, makes the blood rich and pure.

The Kansas legislature has 115 farmers and only three lawyers.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address F. J. Potatoes vs Fish.

"My father," says a Colorado judge, "was a stern, exacting man, who did not seem to think a boy on a farm needed any time to go fishing or hunt woodchucks. He was also a believer in the free use of the rod, which, as I used to think, often spoiled the child.

"One week my father had to leave home to be gone three days. He took me out to a field of potatoes and said, 'John, I want you to hoe those potatoes while I am gone. I shall be gone just three days. You can do it in that time if you are spry.'

"As soon as father was gone I went out and looked the field over. It was just the season of trout fishing in our region. I said, 'Sho, I believe I can hoe that field in two days easy enough!' So I went off and fished all the first day.

"The second day I went out and looked the ground over, and said, 'I believe if I get up and work real hard I can hoe those potatoes in one day.' So I went and fished all the second day.

"The third morning I went out, and the field seemed to have grown twice as big in the night. I said, 'I can't do it in one day the best I can work, and father will lick me for fishing two whole days, anyhow!' So I went and fished the third day."

The judge doesn't tell whether he finally hoed the potatoes or not, but he has certainly been a hard worker since then, and perhaps the rod did not spoil the child after all.

"August Flower"

For two years I suffered terribly with stomach trouble, and was for all that time under treatment by a physician. He finally, after trying everything, said stomach was about worn out, and that I would have to cease eating solid food for a time at least. I was so weak that I could not work. Finally on the recommendation of a friend who had used your preparations with beneficial results, I procured a bottle of August Flower, and commenced using it. It seemed to do me good at once. I gained in strength and flesh rapidly; my appetite became good, and I suffered no bad effects from what I ate. I feel now like a new man, and consider that August Flower has entirely cured me of Dyspepsia in its worst form. JAMES E. DEDERICK, Saugerties, New York.

ALLIANCE TALKS.

NEWS OF THE ORDER FROM ALL SECTIONS.

Items of Interest to Alliancemen Everywhere.

ALEXANDER ATKINSON ON ALLIANCE POLITICS AND CURRENCY.

The News and Alliancerman says that nobody in the world is more thoroughly and deeply interested in the Alliance and its plans than Mr. Atkinson, and but few are better informed as to the character and scope of the demands and plans of the organization, and to verify its assertion prints the following interview with him:

"But few people outside of its ranks, and not all of those inside, comprehend the magnitude of the evil and the magnitude of our demands for redress. Our country last year produced from seven to eight million bales of cotton, four hundred million bushels of wheat, seven hundred million bushels of oats, two billion bushels of corn, not to speak of its mines of precious and useful metals and coal, its vast manufacturing and railroad industries and its timber. Our national wealth and national production is almost beyond the powers of conception. Yet, in the face of all this, look at the increasing poverty of the producer! Those who make the wealth are growing poorer every day, and those who sit in idleness are storing and hoaring wealth by the millions. This has gone on year after year until those who are producing the wealth have now demanded an account with those who take it and keep it."

"A great many theories have been proposed to set the wrong right.

"Some say that the high protective tariff is the trouble. Some say combination and monopoly. The great object of the Alliance is to determine out of all this confusion what the truth is and to establish it." We asked Mr. Atkinson what he considered the most complete solution of the question. "I think," he said, "the cause of the whole is summed up in very few words—SHRINKAGE OF CURRENCY. Suppose you had a family beginning life in a small one-room house. As the family increases and new members are added to it unless you add to the house it becomes crowded and finally very uncomfortably. So it has been with our currency. While the business of the country has been growing, the population increasing, the production increasing, the currency has not only failed to increase in volume but it has contracted." "In whose favor do you think," we asked, "has this contraction worked?"

"Why, of course, he said, in favor of the captitalists who have the money. As currency contracts, the purchasing power of the dollar increases. I mean to say that if our currency were doubled in volume there would be two dollars to purchase cotton, corn and other produce where now there is only one. It is out of the question to talk about higher prices for our produce when the amount of money in the country is so small that a few capitalists can gather it up and say to the world just how much of it a certain article is worth. With an expanded currency this will be impossible."

"How," we ask, "would you propose to remedy this contraction?"

"We have demanded the free coinage of silver."

"Do you think that will effect a complete relief?"

"No. It is not complete to do that. If all the silver products were coined and put on the country as currency it would not be sufficient. Besides, the amount of precious metal produced annually is decreasing. We also demand the abolition of the National banks and this would further so far diminish the circulating medium as to render the free coinage inadequate."

"What is your idea about National banks?"

"They are robbers caves for the storage of State goods. A national bank buys a thousand dollars worth of bonds for eight hundred dollars and receives interest on them. The government then advances them nine hundred dollars on those bonds to be loaned to the people at a rate of interest amounting to about fifteen per cent. per annum, with the privilege of compounding every three months. The fact is they get about twenty-five per cent. All the time the people are paying interest on the bonds. The interest paid into national banks would run a dozen governments like ours in luxury."

"What do you think will give complete relief?"

"The direct issuance of money to the people in sufficient quantities to do the business of the country without the intervention of national banks. The value of money is often all based upon the ability of the government to pay, and that is based upon the wealth of the people. So why not come at once to the point without a great circumlocution and enriching thousands of middlemen! Issue the money on non perishable products and property. Their value is just as stable as the value of gold. The volume of the currency will then be adequate to to needs of business. Everything will take on new life. New industries will spring up, a greater revolution than the country has ever witnessed before will take place. Capitalists will then be ready to unload their hands and develop the country. What encouragement is there to invest money in productive enterprises now, when the products bring nothing?"

* * *

The Alliance (Tallahassee, Fla.) says: The professional politicians are beginning to dance up to the Alliance music. They have been driven from their opposition to the free coinage of silver by the aggressiveness of the Alliance. This is an important point scored for the former. Now let the war be pushed onward. With one out post captured the next will be easier in our advance upon the citadel of the money power.

Free coinage of silver will furnish more money, but it does not furnish a way or means of getting it into the hands of the people, nor will the government issue of treasury notes in double the amount of the present circulating medium meet the exigency, if the people cannot get hold of it. None are so stupid as to suppose that the government is to donate its money to the people. The people must either borrow, as the national banks do, or buy it with their labor or productions. What is needed is some fair, just and safe system of distribution to let the money out among the people. The sub-treasury plan settles this, and it is the only plan which has yet been devised which in all respects meets the pressing exigency. It will do no good to double or quadruple the volume of currency, if no way is provided for the people to get it without going to the Shylocks. The people are beginning to learn that they can more safely manage their own finances, and are prepared to dispense with the services of these manipulators. They have determined to knock out these middlemen, and come face to face with the government.

THE ALLIANCE.

The imperilled necessities of the people gave birth to our order.

The injustice and oppression of monopolistic power demanded a revolt.

The exactions of organized money-power have been cruel and severe.

The money-power of this country is completely organized; having complete and absolute control of the machinery of governments, with their tools in place and power; legislatures to enact laws in their interests. Judges to decide in their favor, and executives of their choice and dictation, with powers to enforce and armies to compel submission and obedience to their unjust and robbing laws, and that great power in the United States was given them by the voters of this country, said to be the people. The power to enslave the born and unborn and rob them by law of the wealth they produce. It cannot be denied but that under the present laws and conditions that every child born comes into existence with the chains of slavery around it.

This power has been given them by our votes. We have elected men to represent us, the people, who have betrayed us; who have enacted laws for a class in place of the mass of people. We have done so in ignorance and through party prejudice, voting for, and supporting and sustaining our party candidates without investigating their past votes and acts, or their future pledges or promises. We have to a very great extent been represented in our legislative bodies, and particularly so in Congress, by partisans, not statesmen. Had this people been represented by statesmen no such laws would have been placed upon our statute books, neither would such conditions be in existence as there are to-day. Thou, sands are out of employment. Sin, crime misery, destitution and want in every part of this highly favored land, where the natural opportunities are at least as great if not greater than most portions of this earth. A statesman is one who knows the force and effects of laws, who will pass laws in and for the benefit of all and not for a few nor a class.

Socrates said: "That just in proportion as laws are just and equitable is man's opportunities in life for health, wealth and happiness."

Good laws produce good effects, make good conditions, make good men and women, and make it possible for mankind to better their condition. Bad laws produce bad effects, make bad conditions and make it impossible to better their conditions.

Every man has certain, clearly defined, natural rights; he should know what they are, and advocate, and maintain, and defend them. To every right there is a duty, and he should know his duties and perform them.

Now, reader, have you ascertained your rights, advocated, maintained and defended them? Or have you ascertained your duties and performed them? Certainly not. If we all had, such laws would not have been placed upon our statute books. Nor such conditions been in existence as now are. In place of sin, crime and misery being in existence, peace, plenty and happiness would be the condition of this nation.

Each of you think the monopolies that dominate in your section are the greatest. If you examine carefully you will find the same robbing principle runs through all of them.

The national banking system is the daddy and mammy of all of them. It dominates all of them. Other monopolies only dominate a certain thing or article as the Standard does the oil. The national banks dominate and control all others. In fact, and in short, dominates production of all kinds.

The land is the source from which all wealth is produced. Labor is the means by which all wealth is produced. Money is the measure by which all wealth is exchanged. If so, then the logical deduction is, that amount of money in actual circulation in a country regulates the price of labor, labor products, and all property. It being the only means by which wealth is exchanged, and the legal means to pay debts. If so, then there is no question so vital, of so much importance to the people of a country as the control of the volume of money. The power to inflate or contract it is certainly a great power to place in the hands of any man or set of men. The power to say when you may work, the power to put a price on your labor, or the products of your labor, your farm, your grain, horses, sheep, hogs and cattle. This power the national banks have, the power to control the volume of money, to contract or inflate as their interest may dictate.

As they are organized, it is your duty to organize; and you have done so. Will you now sustain this organization? If so, you must be faithful and steadfast to the end.

The following is a quotation from an interview with Jerry Simpson: "Now, in the south the democrats declare the Farmers' Alliance is in with the republicans, and in the north the republicans declare we are nothing but democrats. And between the two we go ahead, gather strength, and in 1892 both parties will see what we are and whether we can paddle our own canoe."

A Vegetable Wool Plant.

J. A. Fernahdez de Trava has just imported a new plant known as "vegetable wool" which he is anxious of introducing into Louisiana. Mr. Fernandez relates that in 1872 a party of English tourists traveling in New Zealand found a new quality of cotton growing there and by way of experiment sent samples to large manufacturers in England to see what could be done with the new staple. Some years afterward the same plant was discovered thriving in Ecuador and a large crop was shipped to Europe. The woolen factories at once recognized the value of the new cotton and manufactured woolen gobds with it. While the plant has been known for several years, few persons have been able to obtain the seed, as the plantations on which it is cultivated are owned exclusively by an English syndicate who prevent the reproduction of the plant in other countries. Mr. Fernandez says the climate of Louisiana is especially suited for the plant and feels that if once introduced it would soon take a foremost place among the staples of the state. Mr. Fernandez has also on hand samples of magnificent cloth made from the "vegetable wool." —[New Orleans Picayune.

J. H. MORSE, a young man formerly well known in San Francisco, is leading a life which must be singularly independent and free from all the annoyances and cares of ordinary existence. He has bought himself, for the modest sum of $5,000, a small island in the Pacific Ocean. He has imported thither a population of South Sea Islanders, and has set out great quantities of cocoanut and banana trees. He is absolute ruler, and practically owns everything, animate and inanimate, in his domains. As his little kingdom is rich in guano, his purchase promises to be a profitable one. Of course there is nothing to prevent his returning to civilization at any time, but he seems to prefer to stay where he is. And who shall say that Mr. Morse is not one of the happiest men in the world to-day?

A viaduct costing $4,000,000 has recently been finished at Melbourne, Australia. The work of constructing it involved some eight or nine miles of tunneling and eleven miles of iron pipes and syphons. By this additional water source Melbourne will be able to supply a population from 650,000 to 700,000.

A Little Child.

A little child—so all have been,
So all must be who enter in
The home below, the home on high,
The glory of the earth and sky
Such innocence alone can win.

So Christ was born, the least in sin,
And brought into this fret and din
With power alone the feeble cry—
A little child.

Thus does the life of each begin,
Making this world to heaven akin,
Though age should come and dim the eye
And fortune favor, or defy,
He's but a traveler at our inn,
A little child

A MYSTERY OF THE SEA.

A TRUE STORY.

In the summer of 1884 I was coming across the Indian Ocean in the steamship Glencarn, homeward-bound from Shanghai with a cargo of tea. We had passed Ceylon, catching a glimpse of the distant island and a whiff of the spicy breeze offshore, and were nearing the treacherous chain of coral reefs known as the Maldive Islands, when I came up from the cabin after dinner for a stroll on deck. The evening sky glowed with the beauty of a rich sunset, such as is rarely seen outside the tropics. The good ship rocked easily upon a long, smooth swell, and plowed her way into a sea of molten gold, turning it, as by the touch of a magician's rod, into blue depths of water beneath her keel. The vessel's wake, churned into foam and shot through with countless flashes of phosphorescence, stretched far astern like a silvery path leading to the very edge of the full moon, which hung just above the horizon.

I found the chief engineer leaning against the rail and enjoying the glorious beauty of the evening. For some time neither of us spoke. At length he remarked in a meditative way:

"It was just here that we met the Portuguese brig when we were coming out."

Now Nesbit was a clear-headed Scot who had studied in one of the English universities and taken his degree; then, giving way to his passion for a roving life, he had gone to sea and spent twenty years afloat. He had doubled more than once the Horn and the Cape, made a dozen voyages to China and Japan, and, as an engineer in the Portuguese navy, had visited the whole coast of Africa, and once crossed the Dark Continent on foot just below the equator. In short, he had seen much of the world, and taken good note of what he saw.

The chief engineer, therefore, was a man who had in his head much material for a good story; and it was in the hope of getting a story now that I asked:

"Well, what about the Portuguese brig?"

He looked up in surprise.

"What! Haven't you heard of the adventure we had on the last trip out? No? 'Bout as curious a thing as I ever came within hail of. But it's a long yarn; so let's find some seats first, and then I'll spin it for you."

We took possession of a couple of steamer chairs on the after-deck, and forthwith the chief spun his yarn as follows:

"We came out in February loaded mostly with iron; had a rough time of it in the Bay of Biscay and the Mediterranean, but when we had gotten past those cussed Frenchmen on the Suez Canal our troubles for that voyage were over. Those canal pilots make an engineer swear more than a storm at sea.

"Well, just in this place, one day about noon, we passed a brig about four miles north of us. The sun was hot, there was not a breath of [illegible] and the brig lay [illegible] with all [illegible] showed no colors, and failed to answer the signals which we made to her. The captain swore a little at her want of manners and we went on; but when we had passed her some distance, perhaps a couple of miles, I went on the bridge and found him still leveling his glass at her. As I came up he said, 'I don't like the looks of that craft at all. She is n't ship-shape, and I am going to run over to her and find out what's wrong.'

"He put the steamer's head for the brig, and soon we were close as the swell would allow. We hailed her, but got no reply. Then the old man began to get excited, and ordered the mate to call away the crew of the cutter and investigate. When the mate came close alongside he hailed again. Still no reply. She lay with her starboard beam towards us. He pulled around her stern and found the port gangway open. A man in a red shirt and a pair of trousers sat there on the deck, his legs hanging over the side. He was leaning back upon a box under his left arm, and a red handkerchief trailed from his right hand across his lap. A loud hail at close quarters brought no movement or response, and a sudden awe fell upon the boat's crew. The man was dead!

"The mate pulled forward to the bow and climbed up the chains to the deck. He said afterward that nothing would have hired him to climb into the gangway beside that silent figure. Four men lay on the deck around the forward hatch. They had been dead a long time, and the burning sun poured down upon ghastly bodies which were almost skeletons, they were so thin.

"The crew of the cutter were ordered up, and they searched the ship from stem to stern. They found no one in the forecastle or the hold, and no one in the cabin; but in the galley they found the Malay cook and the cabin boy, both dead, the cook lying upon his face with his fingers twisted in his long black hair. All the men except the captain seemed to have died in agony, for their bodies were writhed and twisted.

"There was plenty of food aboard—a cask of salt beef, several hundredweight of rice, and some flour. There were plenty of coals for the galley fire. The ship was perfectly sound, not a sail was split, not a halyard started; the masts and spars were all secure, and the wheel and rudder in good order. But there was not a drop of water aboard. Here was the secret of the tragedy. Every water cask was dry, every butt had been upset and drained to the last drop. The little cabin boy lay with head and shoulders inside one of the overturned casks, and his stiff fingers grasped a tin cup into which he had been trying to drain a few drops of water.

"The ship's papers and two or three hundred Mexican dollars were in the despatch-box under the captain's elbow. I translated the papers—which were in Portugese—when they were brought aboard the steamer. They showed that the brig was Portugese, registered at Goa. Her name was the Santa Maria, and she had cleared from Goa three months before for a trading voyage along the west coast of India. Her master was also her owner; his name was signed to the papers with a cross. There was not, as it seemed, a single man on board who could write, for no log was found. There was a compass and a crude chart of the Indian coast in the cabin, but no sextant or chronometer and no signal-flags.

"So these poor wretches had probably been blown off the coast by a storm, and once out of sight of land they lost their bearings and could not [illegible] their way back again. [illegible] she required a crew of about fifteen men to handle her, and there were only seven bodies on board. What became of the others no one can tell. They may have drunk salt water, gone mad, or jumped into the sea to end their misery. There were lots of sharks swimming about the brig when we found her.

"I said there was no log on board. Perhaps that is true and perhaps it is not. On the deck by the captain's side was a little heap of pebbles which had evidently been brought up from the ballast, and carefully piled in one corner of the despatch-box beside the ship's papers were seventeen of these same pebbles. It is not unlikely that each pebble represented a day of thirst and watching. It makes me shudder, even now—the picture of that red-shirted captain sitting in the waist of the ship watching for a sail, and seeing his crew, maddened by thirst or by salt water, jump down one by one into the jaws of the sharks waiting below. I always think of that captain as catching sight of some steamer on the horizon and raising himself to wave his red handkerchief, his only signal of distress, then, as the steamer keeps on her course, falling back in despair—to die!"

We sat for a long time in silence, while the steady throb of the steamer's iron heart drove her forward into the night. At length I asked:

"What did you do with her?"

"We could not take her into port, and it is against the law to leave a vessel adrift upon the high seas. So when the mate had come back with a white face and told his story the captain sent the crew over to the brig and dismantled her. We took out her stores, cordage, sails and everything we could move. Then the carpenter went down and bored a lot of holes in her bottom. We put all the bodies in the cabin and laid the ship's flag over them. The captain read the prayer from the funeral service. Then we locked the cabin door and left her; and as we steamed away we could see her slowly settling down.

"We turned over everything belonging to her to the Portuguese consul at Singapore; and if you will ask the captain he will show you the letter of thanks he got from Portugal, with King Luis's own signature. The consul wrote to Goa and advertised in all the eastern papers three months for some one who could claim the things, but without success. At length they were sold and converted to the crown, for no living soul could be found who knew anything about the Santa Maria or her crew."—[Edwin K. Buttolph in the Century.

A Light For Watches.

A novel electric watch lighter, the tempolux, is being manufactured by a firm of electricians in Leicester, England. It resembles an enlarged open-faced watch case, and has in its rim a minute incandescent lamp and reflector. On placing the watch in the case and pressing a small stud, the face of the watch will be brilliantly lighted. A dry battery supplies the current, and may be placed in a closet, with a flexible conducting cord leading from it to the head of the bed or stand on which the watch is placed. The battery will last for this purpose for years, and no chemicals are required. —[Trenton (N. J.) American.

Uncle Sam's Fighting Men.

The United States have a small regular army—probably not above 30,000 men, the limit being 36,000. But the nation as a military power is not inconsequent. In the states are enrolled as militiamen 106,969. Behind these, as a reserve, are 7,023,242 freemen who are available for [illegible]

The Alliance Herald has a very ...teresting communication signed "Chilton," which maintains the Democratic integrity of the Alliance as opposed to a third party. "Chilton" is in line with at least 95 per cent of his Alliance brethren in Alabama.—Age Herald.

There are 180 papers in Alabama, 13 of this number are daily papers and 150 are weekly papers. With all of this literature, and without doubt it is cheap enough, the citizens of this State ought to become well acquainted with the public questions of the day. There is no better educator for the family circle than a good, clean and wide-awake weekly journal. They are an absolute necessity in every home.—Camden New Era.

There is more clear money in corn at 50 cents a bushel than cotton at 8 cents a pound. It can be turned into meat, colts can be fattened, oxen stall-fed and in fact corn is always in demand upon a farm. We have yet to hear of the farmer that raised more corn than he could profitably dispose of. Cotton should always be a surplus crop, and when there is plenty of corn in the country times are generally prosperous, but fail on corn and everything is depressed:—This year is a sure demonstration of that fact.—[Sumpter Sun.

A most excellent publication in its way, and one with a novel and interesting mission, is a beautifully printed weekly periodical issued by the well-known and reliable advertising agents, Messrs. George P. Rowell & Co., of No. 10 Spruce St., New York City. "Printer's Ink" is the very appropriate title of this little journal. Mr. John Irving Romer is the editor. For people who advertise and people who do not, it furnishes ideas in every issue that are the essence of business sagacity and success. It will give inspiration and new ideas to any business man, old or young, rich or poor. In this day of expert advertising, of business pluck, push and enterprise, this little journal fills a want that makes one wonder why such a publication was not thought of before.

The South and its Problems.

The Nineteenth Century Club, of New York, was entertained at its monthy meeting in the assembly rooms of the Metropolitan Opera House Tuesday night by the first speaker from the west of the Mississippi who has appeared upon its platform. The gentleman was Colonel Charles H. Jones, editor of the St. Louis Republic. He read a paper on "The South and its Problems." Colonel Jones said that the one difference between the two great sections of the country that culminated in the War of the Rebellion, slavery, was caused simply by the natural laws which make cotton grow in the South and not in the North. If Massachusetts had been a cotton growing State she would not have let all the slaves bought in Africa with New England rum go to the South, and if Louisiana had had no cotton fields she would have sold what slaves she had.

The politicians of the country precipitated the war, but its result was as much appreciated by the South as by the North, and the Southerners of to-day would resist a return of the human slavery system by force of arms if necessary. The people of the South went out to work after the war to seek things aright under the new conditions, but hindered by the carpet bag politicians. The blacks were given ... and learning they broke ... them or were prepared to use them intelligently, but because the Republican party wanted their votes to keep itself in perpetual power.

Colonial Jones gave a number of examples of the reckless and expensive legislation induced by these reconstruction acts in which the ignorant colored Senators had their ... in the capitol refurnished in the most elaborate manner six times in a session. Louisiana alone had its State debt raised from $6,000,000 to $48,000,000 in three and one-half years, and Governor Warmouth gained his present status as one of the richest men in that State from pickings in office.

The south was making gigantic strides forward, concluded the speaker, and would not only retrieve her shattered fortunes but would build new ones if left to solve the great race problem.

Asking for Re-appointment.

The different county Alliances are passing resolutions requesting the Governor to re-appoint Commissioner Kolb to the position which he now fills. The following was passed by the Alliance of Chilton:

Resolved, by the Chilton county alliance, in convention assembled, that the Governor of the state of Alabama, be, and he is hereby requested, by us as farmers, when the term of office of Hon. R. F. Kolb as agricultural commissioner shall expire in September next, to re-appoint said R. F. Kolb as said commissioner to fill the term to when his successor shall be elected and qualified in 1892.

On motion adopted and secretary instructed to furnish his Excellency Gov. Thos. G. Jones a copy of same.

The Only Way to Protect Ourselves.

The way in which this is to be done, and the only permanent way is for the honest peaceable, law-abiding citizens to serve upon the jury when they are summoned. For years it has been the custom in New Orleans for men who were summoned as jurors in the criminal court to offer all sorts of trivial excuses, to plead with the judges, the jury commissioners, and with those they suppose to have the slightest power or the smallest influence, to get them off, or to let them off, from jury duty. How can the people of New Orleans expect honest verdicts from dishonest juries? How can they expect honest juries unless honest men are upon them?—New Orleans Delta.

Do Your Part.

Every property holder in a city owes it to his neighbors that he should keep in perfect repair his home. Dilapidation is decay, when you look at a man's premises you can accurately estimate the character of the man for industry and pride. No individual has a right to disfigure the beauty of a city by having an unslightly and tumbled down fence and badly kept premises. People make a town, as the people so is the town, if the people are slothful and careless, indifferent to appearance and negligent to their duty, you can easily decide that the town has no future, and that ere long its race will be run.

The Oldest Place in America.

How many people know where the oldest place in America is situated? Not the oldest town in the country or continent, but the oldest land? Well, it is Mount Marcy, in the Adirondack Mountains.

Ages and ages ago, perhaps a million years, this entire continent was covered with ice and water; in fact there was no continent. Then the waters subsided, and that point was Mount Marcy. It would take too long to explain how this interesting fact was discovered, but it is vouched for by Agassiz and other famous geologists, and so it may be believed without question.

Mount Marcy is 5,337 feet high the tallest Peak of the Adirondack, and in fact the highest mountain in New York. It was named for Governor Wm. L. Marcy.—Exchange.

On Thursday evening a disastrous hail storm visited Choccolocco Valley. Stones as large as bird eggs completely covered the ground. All growing vegetation was beaten down.

IN A MAN'S LIFE.

Many Incidents Occur to Remind Us That Time Is Real, Life Is Earnest.

Two most pathetic and touching incidents are going the rounds of the papers which portray the realities of life. They run this way:

It must to have been somewhat of a surprise the young man met with who, when a boy, was sent by his parents for a pitcher of milk, instead of obeying, concluded to run away. He was gone many years, but finally concluded to return and see the old folks. Arriving he bethought him of the errand on which he was sent as a boy, so procuring a pitcher of milk, he walked into the house, sat it down and said to the old couple sitting at the fireside: Here is your milk. There was no response—a look of surprise only. The young man saw that time had made great changes, and he hardly recognized either of them; not so strange when the explanation came, that his father had died and his mother had married again; then his step-father had married again and as the Irishman said, it was neither of them. He had an entirely new set of parents.

This incident brings to mind almost a similar story of the boy sent out on a winter's night for a back log, but also ran away. Was gone about fifteen years, returning home on a cold evening, and peering in at the kitchen window saw the old folks sitting in the chimney corner just as he had left them. Going to the wood pile he selected a log and walking in threw it down on the hearth saying, "Father, here is your back log." The old man merely glancing up without the least expression of surprise, remarked: "Just so, but 'pears to me that you have been a deuce of a long time about it," and resumed his smoke without further comment.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India Missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and lung affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive, and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who desire it, this receipt in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. School Patrons.

Are requested to meet at the court house next Tuesday night without fail.

Mr. Thos. Foshee and his mother, of Maplesville, were in Clanton this week visiting Mrs. Foshee's sister, Mrs. W. M. Wilson. Mr. Foshee took a business trip to Birmingham from here.

Rev. R. M. Hunter is moving in the matter of building a new Baptist Church. He is encouraged with the subscriptions already received, and feels confident that he will succeed in giving his denomination a new church building.

The Sunbeams entertained a large congregation at the Baptist Church last Sunday night with recitations and songs. The children had been drilled only a short while. The church was very tastily decorated for the occasion and presented quite a pretty scene. A collection was taken up for missionary purposes, and the children gave very liberally themselves.

The celebrated Hamilton-Brown Shoe Company's goods can be had at W. L. Sampey's store at reasonable prices. They are first class shoes and wear well.

a petition, asking the Governor to pardon ex-Treasurer Vincent has been circulated in Clanton and was very generally signed, many ladies adding their signatures to the document.

At Jemison, on Sunday, the 19th inst., Mr. Charley Glasscock and Miss Ada Langston, were married. Many good wishes for the splendid couple. May their virtues continue to charm each other as in the past. A MOTHER.

About a half a mile from the town of Elmore, on the Wetumpka branch of the L. & N. road, has sprung quite a village called Altoona. There are about fifteen houses and the mills are sawing in the neighborhood of 50,000 feet of lumber a day. Mr. J. Fox Maull is the duke and founder of the new town.

The tax assessor and collector of Chilton, so far as we have been able to learn, have performed only a duty which the law imposed upon them in the matter of assessing and advertising delinquent tax lands. While some errors have occurred in the matter of assessment, the assessor claims that these errors were due to the neglect of the land owners to have their lands properly assessed.

Mr. W. M. Gore, of Jumbo, informed us Monday that Poke Mims, a citizen of Coosa county, was shot by a neighbor, Tom Hill, on last Sunday. The shooting was done while Mims was crossing the Coosa river, at Adams' Ferry. Hill stood on the bank and shot at Mims as he pushed off from the shore. The cause of the shooting was an old grudge between the two men. The wounded man was shot through the arm with a rifle ball. The bone was broken above the elbow and it is thought amputation will be necessary. Hill has been arrested. The shooting was done in Coosa county.

T——, a little boy of nine, handed in the following composition on George Washington: "George Washington was the father of his country, one day he went in his fathers yard and cut down a tree. What are you doing asked his father i am trying to tell a lie and cannot when he grew up he was president and was killed by a man named getto who was jellish of him and the no Engine house was draped in black."—Harper's Bazar.

Wheatology.

There are too many of the hands of industry on the market. They offer large quantities, and they find too many ready buyers.

A dime plated coin will not pass current any longer than a man of no principle is associated with educational accomplishments will.

A Troy policeman swore as follows: "The prisoner sat on me, calling me an ass and an idiot—all of which I certify to be true."

Poverty often deprives a man of all spirit and virtue. It is hard for an empty bag to stand upright.

All of us who are worth anything, spend our manhood in unlearning the follies or expiating the mistakes of our youth.

Make money your servant; don't let it become your master. To know how to guide and control it, get a practical education.

The nightmare is the effect of injudicious eating. Business troubles are frequently nightmares produced by injudicious education.

It is with diseases of the mind as with diseases of the body; we are half dead before we understand our disorder, and half cured when we do.

Education doesn't make the man unless there is good material to work with. Soft iron may be shaped into an ax, but it will never hold an edge.

Work, work, work was the old motto; but educate, think, work, is a combination whose spirit harmonizes better with the progressive spirit of the age.

Fill your head with good purposes, your stomach with good food, your pockets with honest money, and your measure of happiness will be reasonably full.

Educated talent is sometimes applied to knavish practices, just as good wheat is used in the manufacture of whisky. We value an article, however by the use, not the abuse of it.

The most perfectly developed horse is of no use until he is broken and trained, and the most brilliant and powerful mind lies dormant until trained by a practical education.

Education is sometimes called a ladder, but the person who goes to sleep at the foot of it will never secure what it leads to. Education is of no account unless purpose, character and action go with it.

The original tower of Babel wasn't finished because it was found that it would cost more than the original estimate, and to this day all structures from a chicken coop to a palace follow that memorable precedent.

A Utica boy thought he would play letter carrier the other day. His mother thought he was very funny, until she discovered that he had found about sixty of her old love letters and was distributing them at the neighbors' houses.

When you make a mistake don't look back at it long. Take the reason of the thing in your mind and then look forward. Mistakes are lessons of wisdom. The past cannot be changed. The future is yet in your power.

Deafness Can't be Cured

By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that we cannot cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Light Hearts and Plenty Money.

I have completed my first week with my Plater, and have $24.85 clear money. I am charmed with the business. I bought my Plater from the Lake Electric Co., Englewood, Ill., for $3, and feel confident if people knew how cheap they could get a Plater, and how much money they could make, we would see many more happy homes. It is surprising the amount of tableware and jewelry there is to plate; and if persons now idle would get a Plater, they would soon have light hearts and plenty money.

Boys, Tip Your Hats.

Do our boys ever think, as they raise their hats to a lady or girl friend, why respect should be shown in this way? Here is the explanation of the custom:

The custom of lifting the hat had its origin during the age of chivalry, when it was customary for knights never to appear in public except in full armor. It became a custom, however, for a knight, upon entering an assembly of friends, to remove his helmet, signifying, "I am safe in the presence of my friends." The age of chivalry passed away with the fifteenth century, but, among the many acts of courtesy which can be traced back to its influence, none is more direct in its origin than that of lifting the hat to acknowledge the presence of a friend.

Producing Rain by Science.

We may be considered visionary when we assert that the time is coming when copious rains will be produced at the will of man, and drouths will hence be the misfortunes of an unenlightened age relegated to the past by the progress of science. This problem of producing rain by scientific methods is not a new one. It has engaged the minds of our scientists in the past, and it is every day getting nearer to a practical solution. A few millions spent by the government in experiments in this direction will not be wasted, and when success is attained, as it will be, the benefits will be simply incalculable.—Western Plowman.

We learn wisdom from folly, but it is less expensive if we learn it from the folly of the other fellow.

For impure or thin Blood, Weakness, Malaria, Neuralgia, Indigestion, and Biliousness, take Brown's Iron Bitters—it gives strength, making old persons feel young—and young persons strong; pleasant to take.

It is best not to dispute, when there is no probability of convincing.

Too large

—the old-fashioned pill. Too reckless in its way of doing business, too. It cleans you out, but it uses you up, and your outraged system rises up against it. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets have a better way. They do just what is needed—no more. Nothing can be more thorough—nothing is as mild and gentle. They're the smallest, cheapest, the easiest to take. One tiny, sugar-coated granule's a gentle laxative—three to four are cathartic: Sick Headache, Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, and all derangements of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels are promptly relieved and permanently cured.

MOTHERS' FRIEND

"Mother's Friend" is the greatest blessing ever given child-bearing woman. I have been a midwife for many years, and in each case where "Mother's Friend" had been given much suffering, if any, and only for rising of the breast known, and remarkably short labors. I will not take $5 for the price for that alone.
Mrs. M. M. Baurer, Montgomery, Ala.

WORTH ITS WEIGHT IN GOLD.

If a price can be placed on pain, "Mother's Friend" is worth its weight in gold. My wife suffered more in ten minutes with either of her other two children than she did altogether with her last, having previously used four bottles of "Mother's Friend." It is a blessing to any one expecting to become a mother. Geo. F. Lockwood, Carmi, Ill.

Believed to be Man-Eaters—Married Are Killed With Poisoned Arrows—Older Than the Aztecs, but Now Becoming Extinct.

"There are 174 giant cannibals, men and women, living on Seri Island, in the Gulf of California, and not sixty miles from the mainland of Mexico," said George G. McNamara to a San Francisco Examiner reporter at the Palace Hotel.

"What I say might seem ridiculous, but it is nevertheless a fact, for I have seen some of them during my travels in Mayo Indian dance up at Yaqui, when the Apaches who lived in Chihuahua came and massacred all that did not escape. The country immediately round about is beautiful—low hills inside a basin something the shape of a saucer—with high mountains on all sides. The priests in those days only worked ore which paid $100 a ton or more, so the people that were with me said, and base metal was not mined.

"There is lots of land to be got there just for the asking. I went down there in the interest of a large company and brought up some specimens of ore. They are mostly copper glance and as yet I do not know what the specimens will assays."

A SERI ISLANDER—OVER SEVEN FEET HIGH

Who their ancestors were or how long they have occupied the island is not known, but they are now becoming extinct.

"I saw three women and one man and their appearance and manners gave me the impression that they are brutes by nature and brutes in heart and soul. It was just by chance that I saw them, as few of them venture away from the island except to sell the mats and shawls which they make from the skins and feathers of the albatross. They are cunning thieves, but otherwise their minds are dull—in fact they seem stupefied. They have a vacant stare in their eyes, and, when not serious, an idiotic smile spreads over their faces.

"The island of Seri is about twenty miles long and at places ten miles wide, and I was told no Mexican or white man ever ventures near or attempts to land on it, as they claim the island is their domain and shoot the intruders with poisoned arrows or capture and eat them. They exist on fish and goat meat, which are plentiful. Low houses, built of shrubbery, are their abode. Some live in 'dugouts,' or caves cut into banks. They roam about the island and lead the laziest life of any people that I have ever heard of. No one can really tell what their daily routine of living is, but it is a fact that the tribe is dying out, and it will not be many years before they will become extinct.

"Their mode of burial is not known, but it was estimated that where there are now a handful there were several thousand not ten years ago, and if they bury the dead and do not burn the bodies, as cannibals do, the bones of their enormous frames will cover a large area of the island.

"The man I photographed is over seven feet in height. His face was a study when he saw the lens pointed at him, and he could not understand what was being done. He, as is all his race, was superstitious, but we overcame that obstacle by giving him a present of an old pair of trousers, which he immediately tied around his neck. The gentleman standing next to him is about six feet tall and he had to hold the Indian's hand. An old rag encircled the upper portion of the Indian's limbs, and it was tied around the waist. The blanket is made of albatross skin and feathers. The bow and arrows which he holds is the only weapon they know of or use. His legs from the knee down are not covered. The hat he wears is of straw, and he, as he stands there, is the typical Seri Indian.

A WOMAN OF THE SERI ISLAND INDIANS.

"The women wear patched dresses made of cloth, which they receive for albatross mats and shawls. They are wrinkled and ... very few girls being among the tribe. The bowls on their heads contain broken vessels made of clay.

"They are a wonderful people," continued Mr. McNamara, "and no doubt their past history, if revealed, will bring to light facts that relate to the magnificent reign of the Montezumas, or even far beyond the time of Cortez.

NGRESSMAN-ELECT BEEMAN SUSTAINS M'ALISTER'S ASSERTIONS.

ciples Sacrificed to a Desire for Harony—Why Captain Burkitt Had Been lected—How the Report Affected the anding of the Organization.

CANTON, Miss., April 24.—Congressn-Elect J. H. Beeman, who was a egate from Mississippi to the National ance at Ocala last December, and irman of the State Alliance executive committee, published to-day a tement in which he sustains Assistt Lecturer McAllister's charges inst McCune and Burkitt, the latter whitewashing the former in the rgia Senatorial contest. The followis Congressman Beeman's statent:

"On hearing that an investigation s to be made of the complaints inst President L. L. Polk, Dr. Cune and Colonel Livingston in the tter of the Senatorial contest in orgia, and that a committee to be mposed of one delegate from each te represented in the meeting, was to appointed for this purpose, each Missippi delegation selected Captain rkitt for this duty, believing, as we ted to each other, that he possessed culiar fitness for work of this kind, at if anything should be found to be rong he would certainly have the urage to assert it, and that should y attempt be made to palliate or hitewash wrong doing, Captain Burtt would never be a party to it.

"He was accordingly appointed and rved on the committee. During the rogress of the investigation, I made quiry of him touching the likelihood f the charges being sustained. To this e made reply, that it had been agreed y the committee that nothing should e given out pertaining to the testimony r the action taken, until the investigaion should have been completed and the report have been prepared. Some emarks, however, were made, or some intimations were dropped, by which I inferred that the report, so far as Dr. McCune was concerned, would be damaging.

"Exactly what was said or hinted I do not remember. No disclosures were made, but I was prepared for and expected that the report in the case of Dr. McCune would be anything but favorable. Principle was sacrificed for harmy. I was surprised when it was submitted and especially so to learn that Captain Burkitt had signed it. To him I expressed this surprise at the first favorable opportunity, when he told me that it was in the interest of harmony that it had been done, that to have acted otherwise would have resulted in bursting the organization.

"From this statement of Captain Burkitt I was led to believe that he was impressed from the testimony before the committee that Dr. McCune's conduct was reprehensible, and but for the fact that he (McCune) had a large following in the meeting, the report would have been submitted. I remember saying to Captain Burkitt, when he mentioned having signed the report in the interest of harmony, or for the good of the organization, that while we owed much to harmony, we certainly owed more to principle. My information obtained from Captain Burkitt is that the report as first drawn was a complete vindication of President Polk, and that the clause expressive of regret at the writing of the Norwood letter was added to appease the friends of Dr. McCune and that he himself (Burkitt) did this in the interest of harmony.

"I thus furnish all I know of the matter or all that is material. There are some minor details which I deem unimportant. I thought at the time, and I have not ceased to think so, that a mistake was made in thus lightly passing over the whitewashing to affect, and which I believed did affect the high standing for purity which the organization had assumed.

IMPRISONED IN A MINE.

Two Hundred Men Go Through a Period of Terrible Suspense.

LONDON, April 24.—A serious accident, by which the lives of two hundred miners were imperilled, has taken place near Langton, Staffordshire.

Two large cages, or cars, are used for hoisting and lowering men and materials into the colliery in the Langton coal district. While one of them was being hoisted and another lowered they came into collision and were smashed to pieces. The result of this smash-up was that the shaft was badly damaged and choked up with the debris, thus cutting off communication with two hundred miners, whom the accident imprisoned in the mine below.

For fourteen hours the miners were shut up in the mine. This was a period of terrible suspense for their families and friends, who crowded about the pit mouth in a state of great agitation and distress. Eventually a small hole was pierced through the mass of wreckage clogging the shaft and food was lowered by means of a rope to the imprisoned miners. Further work upon the passage through which the food supplies were passed enabled the men engaged in the work of rescue to haul the two hundred miners, one by one, out of the mine.

SESSION OF THE W. C. T. U.

Interesting Reports and Addresses at Thomasville.

THOMASVILLE, GA., April 24.—In the Women's Christian Temperance Union convention this morning an animated discussion arose over $600 left of the sum contributed by the various unions to entertain the national convention in Atlanta last year. It was finally decided to leave it with the ladies of Atlanta as the nucleus for a fund to build a state headquarters at Atlanta.

At 12 o'clock there was Bible reading. The subject was, "Systematic Giving." It was conducted by Mrs. Chapin. The reading was followed by an interesting discussion. Various ladies gave the experiences of persons who had tried the experiment of giving one-tenth. All went to show that this was the way to support the church and all philanthropies, rather than by fairs and bazars.

The reports from the unions were furnished in the afternoon.

REPORT OF THE SUPERINTENDENTS.

The superintendent's department reported that the reports were very encouraging. Mrs. Frank Sibley, of Demorest, made a wondeful report of the work in Demorest. Prohibition is in force. There are no saloons, there is nobody in jail, nobody in trouble and money is abundant. She concluded her report by inviting all unions needing money to call on Demorest, as they had no need there and plenty to spare.

Mrs. William Sibley made the president's address, which was followed by the report of Miss Missouri Stokes, corresponding secretary. Both showed zeal and effective work.

Mrs. Abbott Blanchard and Mrs. Richard Webb made addresses. Mrs. Webb told of the great work done in Savannah. Two thousand dollars had been raised to pay for a home and a building bought for the purpose. Her talk elicited great interest.

ATLANTA LADIES COMPLIMENTED.

Resolutions complimentary to the ladies of Atlanta were passed on their great success in entertaining the national convention against all odds. The discussion on the resolutions was exhilarating. One lady gave an amusing account of her efforts to raise funds. She called on seven Legislators and Senators and collected $1, notwithstanding that the Legislature had invited the convention and then made no provision to entertain it.

Enemies No More.

BALTIMORE, MD., April 24.—The Worcester light infantry, which formed a part of the historic Sixth Massachusetts that fought the mob in Baltimore just thirty years ago, arrived here today and were given a hearty welcome. The band of the company played "My Maryland" as they marched to the Carrollton Hotel, escorted by the city officials and posts of the G. A. R., and crowds of people who filled the streets responded to the compliment with rousing cheers for the old Bay State.

Mayor Davidson delivered a welcoming address in which he spoke of this visit as another evidence that the brave and loyal veterans of the war had forgotten long since that heat and bitterness of the struggle between States, and laid them aside for more permanent conquests of generosity and kindness and brotherly affection.

Captains Sisson and Davis, of the Sixth Massachusetts, responded, and the visitors were then presented with the freedom of the city.

DEMOCRATS AT A FEAST.

EX PRESIDENT CLEVELAND THE PRINCIPAL SPEAKER.

The Banquet Given by the New York Democratic Club to Celebrate Thomas Jefferson's Birthday—The Ex President Pictures the Glorious History of the Party and the Work Before It.

NEW YORK, April 24.—Thomas O. Bell and J. M. Levy, the two governors of the Democratic club, gave a subscription dinner to-night in honor of Jefferson's birthday. J. H. V. Arnold presided. He was flanked by ex-President Cleveland and Gov. Abbett, of New Jersey. Many prominent local Democrats were present. Ex-President Cleveland was the first speaker. He said:

MR. CLEVELAND'S SPEECH.

Mr. President and Gentlemen:

I desire first of all to express my thanks to the promoters of this occasion for the pleasure which this goodly company affords me, and to congratulate the Democratic Club upon the indication of prosperity shown by its ownership of this beautiful building. The maintenance of such a center for the cultivation and dissemination of Democratic principles, together with the activity and earnestness of the members of the club, furnish most gratifying evidence that those who abide here fully realize the value and importance of unremitting political endeavor and thorough organization in behalf of true Democracy. It seems that the atmosphere which pervades this place is ill suited to selfish and ignoble designs; and I feel at this moment that I am surrounded by influences which invite patriotic partisanship and disinterested devotion to party principles. This sensation is agreeable, for I am glad to be called a partisan if my partisanship is Democratic. If a partisan is correctly defined as "one who is violently and passionately devoted to party or interest," I must plead guilty to the charge of being a Democratic partisan, so long as the Democracy is true to its creed and traditions, and so long as conditions exist which, to my understanding, make adherence to its doctrines synonymous with patriotism.

INSPIRING THOUGHTS.

It is a glorious thing to belong to a party which has a history beginning with the first years of our Government, and full of achievements interwoven with all that has made our country great. It is an inspiring thing to know that by virtue of our party membership we are associated with those who resist the attempt of arrogant political power to interfere with the independence and integrity of the popular suffrage, who are determined to relieve our countrymen from unjust and unnecessary burdens, who are intent upon checking extravagance in public expenditures and who test party purposes by their usefulness in promoting the interests and welfare of all the people of the land. These considerations furnish to those who love their country the highest and best incentive to constant and faithful effort in the cause of true Democracy. We are reminded on this occasion that we not only have a proud history and glorious traditions, but that our party had an illustrious founder, whose services and teachings have done as much to justify and make successful our government by the people and for the people as any American who ever lived.

A CLAIM TO BE PROUD OF.

A claim to such political ancestry is of itself sufficient to lend honor and pride to membership in a party which preserves in its vigor and purity the principles of that Democracy which was established by Thomas Jefferson. Those principles were not invented for the purpose of gaining the popular assent for a day, nor only because they were useful in the early time of the republic. They were not announced for the purpose of serving political ambitions, nor merely for the purpose of catching the suffrages of the people. They were laid as deep and as broad as the truths upon which the fabric of our Government rested. In a spirit of prophesy they were formulated and declared not only to the experiments of the new Government, but as sufficient in every struggle and every emergency which should beset popular rule in all times to come and in all stages of our country's growth and development.

THE REVOLUTION AT THE BIRTH.

The political revolution which accompanied the birth of our party was not accomplished while the principles of Democracy were laid away in a napkin, nor was unanimity of their first appliance secured by senseless and noisy spouting of partisan bigotry and a refusal to receive converts to the faith. No man believed more implicitly in the political instruction of our people than the great founder of our party and the first triumph of Democratic principles, under his leadership, was distinctly the result of a campaign of education. So, too, in the light of our last great victory, no man who desires Democratic success will deny the supreme importance of the most thorough and systematic presentation to our fellow citizens of the reasons which support the avowed and accepted purposes of our party. Those who now steer at the efforts in that direction are our enemies—whether they confront us as confessed opponents, or whether they are traitors skulking within our camp. It seems to me that this is peculiarly a time when the Democratic party should be mindful of its relations to the country, of its responsibilities as guardian of sacred principles and of its duty to a confiding people.

MISSION OF THE PARTY.

In the rejoicing which success permits let us remember that the mission of our party is continued warfare. We cannot accomplish what we promised to the people if we allow ourselves to be diverted from the perils which are still in our way. Blindness to danger and neglect of party organization and discipline are invitations to defeat. We cannot win permanent and substantial success by putting aside principles and grasping after temporary expedients. We shall court disaster if we relax industry in commending to the intelligence of our countrymen the creed which we profess; and we tempt humiliation and disgrace when we encourage or tolerate those who, claiming fellowship with us, needlessly, and often from the worst of motives, seek to stir up strife and sow discord in the councils of our party. As we celebrate to-night the birthday of the father of Democracy, let us reinforce our Democratic zeal and enthusiasm and renew our faith and trust in the aroused intelligence of our countrymen. Let the reflections prompted by the surroundings of this occasion confirm us in the assurance that we shall patriotically discharge our political duty and maintain our party loyalty, if in all we do as Democrats we bravely and consistently hold fast to the truths which illumine the path laid out by our great guide and leader.

Gov. Abbett also spoke.

The District Attorney's Report.

WASHINGTON, April 24.—The report of District Attorney Grant on the New Orleans affair has not yet arrived. Acting Attorney-General Taft says it may not arrive until the latter part of next week. It seems that District Attorney Grant finds it a little difficult to get accurate information in New Orleans about the lynched Italians, but he has informed the Department of Justice that he will forward his report at the earliest possible moment. Until it is received Secretary Blaine will do nothing more.

A Corpse Beside a River.

MILLEDGEVILLE, GA., April 24.—To-day, while a couple of fishermen were fishing on Walker's Island, on the Oconee river, they discovered the body of an unknown negro lodged against a raft way above low water. An investigation was made by a coroner's jury, which resulted in a verdict expressing the belief that the body was that of one of the four negroes drowned about twenty-five miles above here in February. The body was very little decomposed, but was dried up instead.

Representatives Mills and Crisp are clearly in the lead at this time in the race for the Speakership of the next House, but it doesn't necessarily follow that either of them will be elected; there are "dark horses" from the South as well as from other sections, any one of which may win the prize. There is a possibility, many think a strong probability, that a dicker will be made to give one section of the country the Speakership, another the nomination for President and still another the nomination for Vice President in order to insure harmony. Modern politics is nothing but a union of distasteful

THE MAFIA IN NEW YORK.

How the Bandits Stick and Slash One Another in Mulberry Bend.

[W. S. FALES, in Savannah News.]

NEW YORK, April 24.—A feature of the Mafia, the famous organization of banditti, which, driven at the bayonet's point from its birthplace in Sicily, has established a home in New York, New Orleans and the other cities of the United States, is the determined and unscrupulous opposition it offers to the officers of the law.

A counterfeiting case tried some time ago well illustrates this peculiarity. A Sicilian was arrested for uttering base coin. The officers of the government were secretly warned that the prisoner belonged to the Mafia, and in consequence took every precaution to prevent an escape and to insure a conviction. The first move by the criminal was offering bail. This appeared good at first sight, but on a careful investigation proved to be "of straw." Nothing daunted by the failure, the friends or colleagues of the counterfeiter attempted to falsify the dies and coin which were to be used in evidence. This was also prevented by the officers of the law.

A third step was an endeavor to corrupt the complaining witnesses. This proving ineffectual they tried intimidation, but with no greater success. A conspiracy was next hatched to kill the chief witness, and likewise turned out abortive. The government attorney began the trial, feeling certain of securing a conviction, and presented a very strong case, from which there seemed to be not a loophole of escape. Upon the defense, witnesses were produced by the accused, who swore that he was innocent, and that his daughter, a girl of about 20, was the real offender. The girl herself confirmed the story, and no contradictory witnesses could be obtained by the prosecution. The jury found the prisoner innocent and convicted the woman, whom neither the judge nor the officers believed to be guilty of the crime!

In speaking of this society George Riddle, a New York detective, said: "One of their oldest habits is to settle their own quarrels without appealing to the courts. The system they follow is neither the duel, the vendetta nor blood feud, but altogether original. I recall a case in Mulberry Bend. A gambler belonging to the Lombardi gang at No. 59, in that street, robbed a member of the Franci gang at No. 35 of a watch, revolver and considerable cash. The victim was asleep when it occurred, but on awakening went resolutely to work to find out who was the thief. In twenty-four hours he had identified the thief to his own satisfaction. Getting two friends to join him, he ambushed the plunderer and, with his knife at the latter's throat, recovered the revolver, but not the watch. As this had, in all probability been disposed of, he took what money and valuables his captive had and went back to his home. The vanquished thief swore to have revenge, and a few nights afterward, when he found his enemy alone in a low dive, attacked and slashed the latter with a razor. The police appeared upon hearing the outcry occasioned by the brawl, but the assailant escaped. The wounded man was carried to the station house, where his cuts were treated by the police surgeon. Though questioned and threatened by the sergeant he refused to give any information concerning the affray. The following week, when he had recovered his strength, he put his traveling arsenal into good order and went with his friends in search of his foe. The latter had anticipated a retaliatory attack, and never went anywhere without a body-guard. On this occasion the forces were equally matched. They met at night in a dark alley, which was so narrow that only two of each side could reach one another with their weapons. A quick exchange of blows and stabs resulted in the thief and his pal on one side and one of the other being severely cut. The noise drew a crowd, on whose appearance the combatants separated as quickly. The police appeared in time and captured two of the injured, who were streaming with blood. They behaved exactly as had the other member of the quarrel when he was arrested. There being no evidence against them the authorities were compelled to discharge them with a slight fine for disorderly conduct and carrying concealed weapons. The thirst for blood was still unassuaged. In the ensuing fortnight the two crowds had a third and much more serious encounter, all being injured and two being almost killed.

During all this time Franci and Lombardi sat still enjoying the tragedy going on under their eyes. The skill of the bravos, their fortitude, bravery and bloodthirstiness were discussed and lauded or deprecated according to the faction to which the critic belonged. After the third assault there was so much comment and gossip in the neighborhood as to attract the attention of both the press and police. Then and not until then did Franci and Lombardi interfere and make peace. Mutual forgiveness was sworn by the late enemies, and quiet again reigned in the two cellars where the cut-throats live when they are not drinking, gambling or committing robbery.

There is a comical side to these knaves. While they are not afraid of the revolver, and really enjoy a knife or a stiletto, they have a holy horror of the human fist and of the club. Captain McCullagh and Detectives Crystal and Gerow of the Elizabeth street precinct, which includes the low Italian colony seldom resort to weapons of any sort in governing and punishing these miscreants. On several occasions they have individually bested two armed ruffians by well directed blows from the shoulder. Such action deserves more than comment on account of the cool courage required. These brawlers are seldom satisfied with a single weapon, but always go provided with an armory. The loose pockets of the coat, the seams of the baggy trousers, and the folds of the great belt or sash with which they gird the waist, give every opportunity for the carrying of a weapon which can be used instantaneously. One fellow who was arrested in this precinct capped the climax in this regard. He carried upon his person not less than two revolvers, two razors, a case-knife, hunting-knife and a stiletto.

Nine Killed in a Crash.

CLEVELAND, O., April 24.—A frightful collision occurred on the Lake Shore railroad at Kipton station, about forty miles west of Cleveland, early this evening, in which six postal clerks and two engineers were killed. The fast mail, No. 14, bound east, collided with No. 31, the Toledo express, just as the latter train was about to pull on a siding to let the fast mail pass. The fast mail was running at full speed, and the force of the collision was so great that both engines, three mail cars and one baggage car were completely wrecked.

THE DEAD.

The following is a list of the dead: Edward Brown, engineer of No. 31, Toledo; Charles Topliffe, engineer of No. 14, Toledo; F. J. Nugent, postal clerk, Toledo; Charles Hammill, postal clerk, Elyria, O.; F. F. Clemens postal clerk, Cleveland, O.; John J. Bowerfine, postal clerk, Elyria, O.; James McKinley, postal clerk, Conneaut, O.; C. H. McDowell, postal clerk, Elyria, O.

THE INJURED.

—— Staley, fireman of No. 14, shoulder dislocated and leg broken; —— Danseig, a son of the section foreman, struck by the wreckage and badly hurt.

A Brute of a Father.

ST. AUGUSTINE, April 24.—Charlie Smith, 11 years old, son of a car inspector living at New Augustine, who ran away from home on account of the alleged ill treatment of his father and step-mother, and was sent back by Chief Phillips of Jacksonville, was found today by Marshal Allen chained to the floor in a dark room and his body blue from bruises inflicted at the hands of his brutal father.

He was taken away and is now in the care of Marshal Allen.

The boy was nearly famished when found, and says he had no food for two days and was terribly beaten by his father.

Much indignation has been aroused. His father is now in hiding.—Cor. Jacksonville Standard.

With those ruby lips of thine,
Tell me fondly, tell me often,
That you'r mine, forever mine."
Then she gaped and gaped and nodded,
Then another gap was born,
And her very silence answered,
"I am yawn, forever yawn."

A WAY TO EVADE THE LAW.

Two Per Cent. of Cotton Mixed in the Woolen Goods to Lower the Duty.

WASHINGTON, April 24.—The United States Supreme Court has affirmed the judgments of the circuit courts for Illinois and Southern New York in the important customs cases of Seeberger, collector at Chicago, against Farwell and others and Magone, collector at New York, against Edward Luckemeyer in regard to the proper rate of duty under the act of 1883 on importations of woolen goods, in which very slight amounts of cotton had been mixed in order to lower the classification of the goods. The tariff act of 1883 provided that dress goods composed in part only of wool should pay a duty of 5 cents per yard and 25 per cent ad valorem, and where composed wholly of wool should pay 9 cents per yard and 40 per cent. ad valorem.

TRICK OF THE IMPORTERS.

The importers, so as to secure the lower classification, introduced from 2 to 6 per cent. of cotton into the warp of the goods. The evidence showed that the cotton could not be detected, except on very close inspection, and that it cost as much, if not more, to manufacture goods with these cotton threads than if wholly of wool. The collector accordingly imposed a duty under the classification for all woolen goods. The lower courts decided and this court sustains their decisions that as Congress did not make any provision as to what amount of cotton must go into the goods in order to secure the lower duty that the importers had the right to mix any quantity of cotton, no matter how small, in order to secure lower rates. Justice Blatchford read the opinion and Justices Brown and Gray dissented.

World's Fair Laborers.

CHICAGO, April 24.—The laborers at the world's fair grounds will hold a meeting to-morrow, and unless matters are adjusted between them and the labor unions of Chicago a general strike will probably take place on Monday. The men say that McArthur Brothers paid them $1.75 per day for eight hours up to April 10th, but that since that date they have ignored their promises. It is also asserted that men who have been compelled to quit on account of sickness or from other causes were obliged to wait from ten to forty days for their money, or else give from 8 to 10 per cent. discount on their orders. About 300 men board and sleep on the grounds. These men, it is alleged, occupy quarters unfit for swine.

Death's High Carnival.

NEW YORK, April 24.—The mortality for the twenty-four hours ending at noon was 181. The total for the week was 1,347, the largest number for any week this year. Of the last day's deaths 20 were from the grip and complications. The total number of deaths from the grip to date is 356.

MOWING DOWN INDIANS.

NORTH YAKIMA, WASH., April 20.—La grippe is rapidly decimating the Indians in this vicinity. At White Bluffs nine died in one day, and at the Moses and Yakima reservations the death rate is large. It is not so much the disease as the treatment that causes the great mortality. When afflicted the Indians go into sweat boxes and from there jump into a cold stream of water, which results in pneumonia.

An Ovation to an Editor.

BAINBRIDGE, GA., April 23.—A large meeting of citizens of this city was held at the Sharon house to-night to do honor to Hon. Benjamin R. Russell, the senior editor of the Democrat of this city, on the occasion of his departure for Waycross to assume the chief editorship of the Waycross Daily Herald, which is just starting there. Stirring speeches were made by Hons. D. A. Russell, C. J. Munnerlyn, J. D. Harrell, W. W. Harrell, D. McGill, A. L. Hagan, E. C. Munnerlyn, B. Nessbaum. A handsomely engraved gold watch and a gold pen were presented to the editor in token of the love and esteem of the donors, and of their appreciation of his valiant service in the political and journalistic fields. The affair closed with a general hand-shaking, and leave taking.

"Will you please hold my horse," asked his favorite cousin, "while I wear a pin with a 'D' in it?" "Why, my dear," replied Clarence Rainbow, with tears in his eyes, "I'll hold them to the right."

A Sumpter county correspondent of the Age-Herald says:

"In all the grand jury of Sumpter county found only thirty-three true bills, said to be the smallest number ever found at one court in Sumpter. In strong contrast with this is the number of 160 true bills on the last criminal docket of Tuskaloosa county. The difference is believed to be accounted for largely by the non-existance of saloons in this county.

The following paragraph from the Athens (Ala) Advertiser is suggested by the Sheffield Enterprise as a good document for republican campaign purposes up North.

"We heard four ex-federal soldiers talking on our streets last week, about the appropriation by the State of Alabama for the benefit of the needy confederate soldiers of this State. They were all tax payers of our county, and the only objection we heard was that the amount was not large enough. While they helped to pay the amount by paying their taxes, yet it was the only way the old soldiers of the lost cause could get a pension, and they were willing to pay their part."

Rome is to advertise us as barbarians. They ought not to abuse their ancestry—nor ours. We, at least, are a straight breed, while Italy furnishes a race which is a cross of every ancient race. The noble Roman gathered the African, the Oriental and the European around him—bondmen, slaves and free men—commingling in all grades and classes. In the Italian race is found the blood of Asiatic, Greek, Carthaginian, Egyptian, Numidian, Gaul, Hun, Goth, Vandal, each of which in turn stamped in barbaric methods its impress on Italy, in manners, government and race. It is hardly fair that this composite or mongrel race should call the Teutonic barbarian, when the Italian is the sum of all barbarians of 1,700 years past.—Sheffield Reaper.

Last week we re-published an extract from the Age-Herald, calling attention to the position taken by a writer in the Alliance Herald signing himself "Chilton." The position was that the Alliance as a rule does not favor a third party, one of the reasons being that a third party would help to elect Cleveland president, and the Alliance does not want Cleveland because of his silver views. We were accosted the same day by a friendly Allianceman, who declared that "Chilton" did not express the real sentiment of the Alliance in this section or elsewhere, and he made the declaration that though the Alliance in the South does not want Cleveland elected President, "the order, as a rule, does favor a third party as the only means of defeating Cleveland." That is straight and honest talk, and shows that even Alliance men will disagree. And Cleveland, poor Cleveland, seems to be a "goner" sure. And if he should be slaughtered in 1892, he will deserve the honor of this epitaph: "He died of too much back-bone."

It has remained for an Alabama man, says the Sheffield Enterprise, to make the clearest, the most cogent and the most convincing speech on the nearly talked to death silver question, we have yet seen. His name is Capt. Joseph F. Johnston, the well known Birmingham banker, and the speech was delivered before a Birmingham Democratic club. The nuggets were thick in the body of the speech, and here is one of them we extract, which has force enough in it to knock over pretty nearly every argument the gold bugs have advanced against the free coinage of silver:

"If the whole silver produced in the world, less that used in the arts, were coined into dollars by the government of the United States, it would require the world's product for nearly ten years to bring up the per capita circulation of silver that France now has."

It should be born in mind that the per capita circulation of silver in France is but little more than [illegible]

A TRIP FOR MR. BLAINE, TOO.

Three His Ardent Friends Hope to Neutralize Harrison's Tour.

Washington, April 13.—A well-defined plan, having for its object the candidacy of Secretary Blaine in 1892, has been formulated by some of the plumed Knight's enthusiastic admirers here and in the West. It embraces the retirement of Mr. Blaine from his position as Secretary of State next Fall, or at any period within a few months, when it is safe to assume that the Italian affair will have been satisfactorily terminated.

The purpose is to have Mr. Blaine's retirement from official life take place after the effect of the President's tour in the South and West has worn off in those sections. Then Mr. Blaine's friends desire to take him over about the same route, though a more extensive one. The contemplated Blaine tour will comprise 10,000 miles of travel, as against the 6,000 miles embraced in the Harrison itinerary. The object is to bring the Western farmers as much as possible in personal contact with the man who has been endeavoring to get a foreign market for their "barrel pork" and "bushel of wheat." Such a tour, coupled with his retirement from the Cabinet, would, of course, be a sufficient plain avowal on the part of Mr. Blaine that he had entered the contest for the next Republican nomination for the Presidency.

President Harrison has declined to permit the special correspondents to accompany his party on the coming trip, but if Mr. Blaine's admirers carry out the plan they have outlined, particular provisions will be made for newspaper men. The trip which the President is about to take is palpably for the purpose of waking up his party in the hope that its effect will be felt in his own renomination. Mr. Blaine's friends want him to go through that section not as an office-seeker, but as their candidate who must take the nomination whether he wants it or not.

OVER THE COUNTY.

Neighborhood News Gathered by Our Correspondents.

Cooper's Station.

Farmers are moving along splendidly with their farm work in our locality.

We are having some sickness. Mr. P. C. Dennis has been under the weather for several days.

There is some talk of the postoffice at this place changing hands.

Bob Kendrick, the negro murderer has skipped out.

A very fine school is sustained at this place taught by Mrs. M. A. Bowdoin, and she cannot be surpassed by any one for energy and industry in the school room. We are going to give our school a picnic the first day of May. You and yours are requested to attend.

With good wishes for the VIEW,

Jemison.

The farms and gardens received good rains which excites a blush of thanks upon the faces of the many toilers.

Mr. James Skaggs the boss and builder of our Alliance store house at Jemison has manifested interest and good taste in the completion of all the work. Even both inside and out. All who believe we havn't got an appreciable store house can come and see.

From present indications, we will have plenty apples and black berries. But no peaches. However, we learn that in other portions of Chilton there will be peaches.

From the neat appearance of the VIEW office every time we see it, we have decided that the Editor could give some practical hints on house keeping.

A MOTHER.

Jemison Locals.

Prof. J. M. Corderie has sold his house and lot in Jemison and bought a place near Lomax, to which he removed to-day (Monday). We regret to give him and his excellent wife up.

The Farmer's Alliance have removed their stock of goods into their new store house where they have commodious quarters.

Mrs. A. E. Minter, of Dallaston, Ala., is visiting her daughter, Mrs. H. T. Caffey. Mr. Claude Mooney and wife, of Siluria, are visiting their old home.

Messrs. Walter Jeffries and Frank Crocheron of the C. & W. railroad are visiting their sweethearts in Jemison.

Dr. H. W. Caffey, of Verbena, spent a day in Jemison last week.

Rev. J. L. Wyatt and Mr. J. P. Allen and wife attended Presbytery at Cottondale last week. The former returned in time to fill his pulpit at Jemison Sunday and Sunday night, and preached two excellent sermons.

Mr. J. M. Hand retires from the saw mill business at Childersburg on May 1st, prox., and will return to his home at Jemison. We welcome him back to our midst.

"Through the dim vista of the future" we hear the jingle of wedding bells.

A NEW PARTY IN NEW ENGLAND.

Christened the Industrial Alliance and Will Co-operate With the Farmers.

A new factor in Massachusetts politics was born in Boston last Saturday.

It will be known as the Industrial Alliance, and proposes to co-operate with the Farmers' Alliance. It is the old labor party in a new form, but is better organized, and if reports are true, it will be a hustler.

Last Saturday night the parents of the new party met in Boston and gave the infant political a send off. Knights of Labor, trades unions, Nationalists, Socialists, and all others in favor of legislation for the industrial classes were invited to join the new party. With this end in view the Alliance has put forth the appended declarations of principles:

First. Government control of railways, telegraph, express lines, mines, gas and electric works, and all other natural and private monopolies which are oppressive to the people.

Second—That all local natural monopolies, such as street railways, gas and electric lighting, should be placed under municipal control.

Third—The abolition of the poll tax as a condition precedent to voting.

Fourth—Not more than eight hours should constitute a day's work for public employes.

Fifth—Annual as opposed to biennial elections.

Sixth—That the employment of private armed bodies, such as the Pinkertons should be made a penal offense.

Seventh—That the taking of money under the guise of fines from weavers and other employes should be prohibited.

Eighth—That land held for speculative purposes should be taxed to its full value.

Ninth—The amendment of contract labor laws.

Tenth—That the hours of women and children should be further reduced by legislation.

Eleventh—That the school age of children should be raised.

Twelfth—That the government issue money without the intervention of private corporations.

Thirteenth—Equal rights of suffrage, regardless of sex, free coinage of silver, and the election of United States Senators by popular vote.—National Democrat.

"Keep in de middle of de road" brother, and do not be frightened or dismayed by what the opposition may say or do. Redemption from debt and relief from serfdom is at the end of the lane. Do not get on the fence nor jump it, but toil on, hope on, fight on and your perservance and fidelity will be rewarded by a triumph that will make the home glad and the family circle resume its normal condition of sweet smiles and cheerful converse. Just "keep in de middle of de road."—Moulton Advertiser.

Information Wanted.

I will be glad to learn anything of the whereabouts of my brother Isaac Sabel, who left Montgomery sometime ago. He is about twenty years old. So far as I know he is in some part of Alabama. I am a cripple and any information will be gratefully received. I will thank any paper that copies this notice.

ARCHIE SABEL.

Go to Blank Brothers, Leading Clothiers, 2112, 2d Avenue, Birmingham, Ala., to buy anything you need in the way of clothing and gent's furnishing goods.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India Missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and lung affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive, and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who desire it, this receipt in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. Noyes, 820 Powers' Blk, Rochester, N. Y. apr16-y

Work on the M. T. & H.

Work on the Montgomery, Tuskaloosa & Memphis railroad, which was partly suspended in January, has been generally resumed all along the line. The grading is finished between Montgomery and Maplesville, and about half of the grading between Maplesville and Tuskaloosa has been completed. All the line except about ten miles is now covered by grading forces, and it is believed here that the road will now be pushed to completion.—Birmingham News.

Verbena Views.

The gentleman who has an interest in Stanton, who goes regularly, every two weeks, to look after that interest, even if he has to go by the way of Oxmoor, I think has bulldozed your fair correspondent so that she has let that feature of your paper, "its items from Verbena," drop out of your paper. 'Tis said he will soon cease to make these visits. Again Madam Rumor has it that one of Verbena's gallant young men is about to bring to Verbena one of Clanton's fair and noble daughters, even a duchess.

Dr. J. S. Pitts brought home with him on last Friday night one of Bessemer's lovely widows. He having married Mrs. Leverett, of that place. 'Tis said that there will be soon a marriage, which has some of the incidents of a romance connected with one or both parties. They loved each other, but for some cause they did not marry. The lady married another man, he died, she maried again, he died, and now she is about to marry her first love.

Quarterly meeting at the M. E Church Saturday and Sunday last. Dr. Blue the Presiding Elder gave us some excellent sermons.

Dr. Stewart, of your place, paid us a short visit this week, also, Miss Smith, of your place, and Mr. Nolen of the firm of Nolen & Bentley.

During the Presidential reception at the Caldwell house in Birmingham, an imprudent negro forced his way through the crowd to the parlor door. Mr. Russell Harrison, son of the President, seeing him, asked him what he wanted. The negro said "he was gwine to shake hands with the president." At this Russell took him by the collar and bounced him down stairs. This was a merited rebuke to the action of the negro, and coming as it did from the President's son, is very significant to the real feeling of the party as to social equality of the races.

This is why we give you more for your money than any one else and why we are doing the largest watch business in the world. We sell only first quality goods, but our prices are about what others get for second quality. Our $20 Silver Watch is a substantial Silver (not imitation of any kind) Stem-Wind American Lever Watch—either hunting case or open face. Our $35.00 Watch is a Stem-wind, Open Face, first quality, stiffened Gold American Lever Watch, guaranteed to wear 20 years. It is fully equal to any watch sold for $50 by others. We find a first-class Stiffened Gold Case much more satisfactory and serviceable than any Solid Gold Case that can be sold at less than double the money, as cheap solid cases are invariably thin, soft, of low quality and

FLORIDA SEA DEVILS.

MONSTER RAYS THAT SWIM OFF WITH THEIR CAPTORS' BOATS.

Some Thrilling Experiences With These Huge Fish—How a Boat With Five Men Was Towed Thirty-six Miles—Desperate Fight With a Devil Fish.

The ray family of fishes is well represented in the maritime waters of Florida, and may usually be found in the haunts of their kindred, the sharks and sawfishes. There are three species in the Gulf of Mexico, namely, the sting ray, the whip ray, and the great ray, which is also known as the sea bat, sea vampire, sea devil, and devilfish.

The sting ray carries a barb in its tail, which can be raised or depressed at pleasure, and, being very sharp and covered with a poisonous excretion, a wound made by it in the hand of a man is very likely to prove serious unless attended to promptly, and the pain is agonizing.

The eagle, or whip ray, is a comparatively harmless creature, and seems to devote much of its time to lashing the water with its long whip-like caudal, especially when several are together. both of these species are locally known as stingarees, whiparees, and clam-crackers, the latter cognomen being given them on account of their strength of jaw, which enables them to crush shell fish with the greatest ease.

These fish are so powerful that specimens weighing 50 or 60 pounds can easily tow a boat with two men in it for an hour or more before succumbing, and even then the sting ray will lash its tail against the craft with all its might or try to strike the hand lowered to haul it aboard. The only way in which these species can safely be taken aboard is to gaff it near the head, turn its back against the side of the boat, and stick it several times in the throat with a sharp knife. The blood will then spurt out as if it were driven by a force pump.

It is very dangerous to place a wounded stingaree in a small craft, owing to its habit of flapping about and striking at every object within range of its barbed lance. This and the whip ray attain about the same size, being, when full grown, from ten to twelve feet in length, and weighing between 150 and 200 pounds. Large as these may seem, they are mere pigmies compared to the great ray, or sea devil, for the latter often measures from fifteen to twenty feet in length, nearly the same in width, and weighs from 1,000 to 2,000 pounds, according to its condition and the season of the year. The majority of fishermen seem to be afraid of this genuine marine monster, and carefully avoid attacking it except under very favorable conditions.

Notwithstanding its enormous size, it is very playful when moving in shoals, and seems to take the greatest delight in flapping about near the surface, turning over and over, and thrashing the water so vigorously with its huge alar wings as to send clouds of mist high into the air. It moves through the water very rapidly, and with a smooth butterfly motion that causes little commotion even in the calmest weather.

It is very abundant in Charlotte Harbor, the Fahatchee, Shark, and Caloosahatchie rivers, which empty into the Gulf of Mexico, and in the lower part of Indian River, on the Atlantic coast. As it never takes a baited hook, the ordinary means of capturing it is with a heavy grains or lilly-irons, the latter being the best, as it retains a good hold in the flesh. When struck, the sea devil lashes the water with its huge wings and whip-like tail, and often throws large quantities of water into a small craft, or upsets or careens it by a powerful blow, and sends it occupant headlong into the sea. Not being vindictive, it never attacks them with its mouth, but should they come within range of its powerful wings, some of them would probably receive blows that would send them to eternity in a few moments. If it does not injure the boat at the first onslaught it is likely to put to sea and to run until it is exhausted or killed with a rifle or revolver. I have heard of a well authenticated case where it towed a boat containing five men thirty-six miles, and was then overpowered only when the crew used butcher knives fastened to poles to stab it in the head. I know of several instances where it towed small boats containing a couple of men from four to a dozen miles, and a schooner over a mile.

I was out with a party of four one day in search of tarpon, jewfish, or devil fish, but most desirous of meeting the latter. We were fortunate enough to run into a shoal of them that were playing near one of the keys that form the Ten Thousand Islands. They thrashed the water, rolled about, dived and came to the surface again, but each kept to itself, and did not approach the others in the wildest ecstasy of its gambols. Our most expert harpooner sent the grains into the back of a huge fellow, but it did not remain in long, a sudden forward plunge of the captive having torn it out and a large piece of flesh with it. The lilly iron was tried on the head of another, and buried so deeply that it retained its hold during the time that the creature towed us up and down a watery mal de mer which was at least two miles long. On becoming weary it sunk to the bottom and remained there despite all our tugging on the line and punching it with poles until it had a good rest, then rose suddenly to the surface, and, striking the boat a heavy blow with its wing, careened it sufficiently almost to fill it with water. We prevented a complete capsize by throwing ourselves on the port gunwale and sending half a dozen revolver bullets into the head of our assailant, before it collected its wits sufficiently to move out of range. The blood spurted out of its head in strong jets and dyed the water red for a distance of several yards all around us.

We notice in this instance what, I fancy, is rather a rare sight in Florida, and that is the different species of sharks running together and participating in a feast without fighting among themselves. Our Captain reported seeing the common brown, the nurses, the hammerhead, the shovelnose, and the blue shark in the same shoal. The first shoal seemed to disappear suddenly while the feast was at its best, and the Captain, in reply to our inquiries as to the cause, informed us that they fled before the approach of leopard and tiger sharks, which had smelt the blood at a distance and were running its trail, much as bloodhounds would that of a wild deer. He also added that these two specimens were the most dangerous in the ocean, being from twenty to thirty feet in length and having teeth strong and sharp enough to bite a piece out of a butcher's knife. They were rarely known to attack man, however, owing to the abundance of fish and other food easily obtained.—Detroit Free Press.

LOBSTERS AND CRABS.

Some Facts About the Crustacea That Carry Their Jaws at Arm's Length.

"Once upon a time," said an expert in matters crustacean, "there were crabs and lobsters in existence for which the modern fisherman would have gone a-hunting with the most approved weapons and caution. For example, in times antediluvian there was a lobster which had a body eight feet long and could stretch twelve feet with its formidable arms. Positive knowledge of this giant of long ago is conveyed by geological research. It must have contained meat enough to make a salad for a regiment of soldiers. In those days of long ago everything grew to enormous dimensions, whether animal or vegetable. Frogs were big and active enough to leap at one hop from the Treasury building to the Capitol, and other creatures, particularly those of a destructive sort, were in proportion.

"Only a few little specimens are left to illustrate the giant crustacean forms of that ancient epoch. It is known how crabs and lobsters are hatched from eggs, resembling upon birth nothing so much as the animalcules shown by the microscope in a drop of ditch water. They are as unlike the shellfish they are to become in mature life as a grub is unlike a butterfly. In the case of the crab the egg clusters are attached beneath the animal after extrusion, while with the lobster they become fastened to the tail, which by its fanning motion, increases the stream of oxygenated air through and among the ova.

"From the eggs of the lobster are hatched creatures not in the least resembling their parents—little fellows that swim with feather-like locomotive organs near the surface of the water. At the end of six weeks they develop legs, unless, as is highly probable, they have previously been devoured by fishes or other enemies, becoming thereupon small lobsters of familiar shape. Having reached this stage of growth, the young lobsters become walking animals, and, sinking to the bottom, immediately seek hiding places to protect them from their foes.

"The first experiments in the adaptation of knowledge on this subject to the artificial propagation of lobsters were made simply in glass jars with sea water that was changed daily. Even under these primitive conditions the newly hatched fry thrived and grew to be of some size and healthy. Any one who desires to rear lobsters by hand can accomplish the purpose most quickly by keeping the spawn-bearing females in suitable ponds or tanks until the young come out. In raising the animals on a large scale, however, it would be best to separate the eggs from the lobster and spread them upon trays, allowing the water to percolate among them, as is done with salmon eggs.

"There is no reason apparent, wherefore the same success should not be obtained with lobsters as has been achieved with salmon, which have been made to swarm once more by myriads in streams depopulated by imprudent fishing. Already the lobsters on the North Atlantic coast are rapidly vanishing and unless measures are soon taken for supplying their place by artificial propagation, there will be none left. Apparently, however, it will be entirely practicable to turn out upon the depleted grounds many millions of young lobsters yearly as soon as proper plants for this object have been established. One thing in favor of lobster raising, as to cheapness, is that they prefer food that is partly decomposed, and the waste food of the towns, now thrown away, might be most usefully employed by the lobster hatcheries. Stale fish is esteemed by lobsters an especial delicacy.

"For the purpose of a lobster farm rocky ground should be choosen, because that is their natural haunt and there they find suitable places to hide. Inasmuch as they do not walk abroad very much, but are addicted rather to adopt a home and keep it, except when making excursions in search of food, the water farmer who sows the pasture lands of the sea with a crop of lobsters on the Pacific coast, and the efforts so far made to carry them across the continent for transplantation have failed chiefly because the creatures have died on the way.

"There are many curious points about crabs and lobsters. Every one of either genus is provided with a big claw for crushing and a small claw adapted by its shape for cutting as scissors do. With these two claws they tear the food they capture into fragments and feed themselves literally 'from hand to mouth.' But there is every reason to suppose that the claws are intended quite as much for fighting as for eating purposes, inasmuch as such powerful hands are not needed for devouring the soft food they prefer. Crabs particularly are fighting animals; in fact, they will fight anything. I have seen a crab, in conflict with a lobster, catch the latter over the fore part of the head, where the shell is the hardest, and crush it in by one effort. And it rather bears out my idea that the claws of these creatures are particularly weapons of war; that the moment one of them receives severe injury in a claw it drops it off by voluntary amputation, severing its connection with the body at the shoulder by an act of its own will. It seems to me probable that if the claw was necessary for feeding nature would rather seek to cure an injury to it than let the animal discard it altogether.

"The species of crab which is most conspicuously a fighter is the hermit crab. Its first idea of independent life is to eat a harmless whelk and occupy its shell, its next notion is to give battle to every crab of the same persuasion as itself that it comes across. Altogether hermit crabs are undoubtedly the most quarrelsome creatures in existence."—Washington Star.

The Irish Shamrock.

In Ireland only one shamrock is known. It is an indigeneous species of clover, which trails along the ground among the grass in meadows. The trefoil leaves are not more than one-fourth the size of the smallest clover I have seen in America, and are pure green in color, without any of the brown shading of white and pink clovers. The creeping stem is hard and fibrous, and is difficult to dislodge from the earth. On St. Patrick's Day the true shamrock has to be searched out among the grass, for, though comparatively plentiful at that season, it grows close to the ground. Later it bears a tiny "whitey-brown" blossom. The information that shamrakh is the Arabic for trefoil may be of service to those interested in the origin of the Irish race. The word could have been introduced by the Milesians, or it may furnish an argument in support of the contention that one of the lost ten tribes of Israel settled in Ireland, which has been revived by the publication of a recent book.—Notes and Queries.

A JAPANESE GARDEN.

ORIENTAL NOVELTY TO BE REPRODUCED IN NEW YORK.

Tokio's Beautiful Private Gardens—Summer All the Year Round—Sweetmeats to Be Dispensed in a Tokohama Cottage.

"Little Japan" is the name given to a prospective Japanese tea garden in this city. It will appear, fairy-like, during the coming Summer, and will be the first and only enterprise of its kind in existence.

The tea garden is the result of several months of scheming on the part of a bright young Japanese of this city. There are in this city, however, two pretty and dainty young Japanese ladies who were in Paris during the Exposition, and who have oblique little black eyes that fairly dance with intelligence, and it is possible that the whole scheme of the tea garden originated in their round heads. They in turn say they got the idea while visiting Japan's exhibit in the World's Fair at Paris.

At a dinner recently given by a well-known Japanese of this city the two young ladies were present. The scheme of "Little Japan" was thoroughly discussed. One of those present was M. Z. Sato, and he has given a description of the novel garden.

According to Mr. Sato, arrangements have been completed by certain wealthy gentlemen, acting with some Japanese, for the site of the garden, its general features and its management. The ground to be occupied is nearly a block in area, and enough to give room for an exact reproduction of one of the most beautiful private gardens in Tokio. A large building will cover the site, and it will be fitted with fixtures for steam heat, so that the tea garden may be open to its patrons all the year round.

After the construction of the building, the floor space will be arranged into little hills, slopes and nooks. Then the magic of Japanese art will convert the outlined walks into white and winding shell paths, the pile of earth into green mounds and the slopes and level places into velvet bits of lawn. Near the center will be a little pond, and in the pond a variety of the oddest Japanese fish that can be gotten here alive, or hatched here from eggs imported especially for the purpose.

It is in the adornment of this bit of the Mikado's Empire that the greatest charm of the garden will lie. The oddest and rarest small trees and shrubs will abound, and among them will be a tree whose root rise out of the ground to the height of a native of Japan, and there meet the trunk, which rises as high again and bears drooping branches. Japan is famously rich in flowering bushes and shrubs, and the most beautiful of them all will be selected for the garden. It will be gay with flowers, and sweet with their mingled fragrance from New Year's to New Year's. There will be bits of shell walk, overhung with interlocking branches, blossoming dells and quiet nooks. A brook will run underneath a little Japanese bridge.

Half hidden by trees and shrubs in one corner, overlooking a slope and the pond, an imported Yokohoma dwelling, or tea house, will be placed. It will be built in Japan by native carpenters, and sent here in pieces. In this house, and perhaps in a second, Japanese tea will be served as it is customarily served in Tokio. In the serving of the tea will be introduced a most attractive feature of the glimpse of Japan.

Young girls, all of them Yum Yums, Pitti Sings or Peep Bos, will be brought over to prepare and carry the tea to the patrons. The girls will be dressed daintily in the style of their native land and will serve the tea in little lacquer cups on lacquer salvers. The tea, as all know who have enjoyed the hospitality of the Japanese at home, will be of a light amber color and served without sugar. But in the place of the sweet little American cubes, the Japanese girls will serve stoneless preserved cherries and sweetmeats. The cherries will be strung on sticks, six on each and lie in a circular lacquer box. The other sweetmeats will be served in a circular box. Both boxes will be of bamboo, and will be enclosed in one large section of bamboo.

If some morning visitor shall happen to say "ohayo" to one of the young ladies serving tea, she will smile a funny little smile, and make a quick, jerky little bow. Then she will patter back in her Japanese slippers to the little straw-thatched, picturesque tea house. "Ohayo" (pronounced Ohio) means "good morning."

The business arrangements for placing a Little Japan in the midst of the metropolis are carefully guarded secrets as yet, but it is said that there are five in the company, and that the five include a very rich and enterprising New Yorker. They will send a special agent to Japan at once, if they have not already, to secure six of the best native gardeners who can be induced to come. If possible, gardeners with pretty young daughters will be engaged, as it is quite difficult to separate Japanese daughters from families.—N. Y. Continent.

Out of Danger.

The baseball umpire was enjoying his vacation by means of a sight-seeing time. While passing through a museum he saw a specimen of armor.

"Look at them," said he to his wife in an admiring tone.

"It's fine, isn't it?" she replied. "It is several hundred years old, too."

"Yes," he sighed; "it must have been a pretty comfortable matter to umpire in those days."—Washington Post.

ZULU HABITATIONS.

They Look Like Big Beehives and the Women Build Them.

The Zulu woman is the architect and builder of the Zulu house, and the style of architecture is known in the colonies as "wattle and daub." It looks like an exaggerated beehive, for the Zulu mind has this peculiarity, that it cannot grasp the idea of anything that is not round or elliptical in form. There are no squares in nature. To build her house the woman traces a circle on the ground 14 feet in diameter, and getting a number of long, limber branches, she sticks them firmly into the ground and then bends the tops over, and ties them with fiber obtained from the numerous creepers, or "monkey ropes."

Then she twines thicker creepers in and out of these sticks, all around the circle of spaces about twelve inches apart, and then taking wattle (a kind of coarse grass or reed) she thatches the edifice, leaving a small hole at the top for a chimney, and another hole three feet square for a door. In front of this she builds a covered way, extending outward about three feet, and the interior of the house is finished by a coating of "daub" or mud. She then seeks the nest of the white ant, and digging them up obtains a quantity of white clay, which she beats to powder, dries and then mixing it with water, kneads it until it is quite smooth. This she spreads all over the ground inside the hut, and beats it carefully until it is quite hard and free from cracks. This floor a good housewife will scour twice a day with smooth stones, until it is like a piece of polished marble.

The fireplace is near the door, and is simply a ring of this clay to confine the embers in one place. The other necessaries found in a hut are a bundle of spear-shafts drying some tobacco and several bunches of millet hanging from the roof. Grouped around the walls are the three animal (a species of sour milk) jars, the native beer jars and open clay baking-pan. Of course, the dusky head smokes rising coats the roof, mellowing and hardening with soot, and long "icicles" of it hang in every direction; but the dusky will be clever enough to cut off, boil in lukewarm water, and drink—Sunday Herald.

The Third Largest Diamond.

The third largest diamond in the world is now in the possession of J. W. Carroll of this city, and admirers of precious stones can feast their eyes on this seventy-five thousand dollar beauty, which passed through the Custom House yesterday. It weighs 115 carats, and there are only two larger diamonds known to lapidaries, the Great Mogul, which weighs 195 carats, and another between these two.

This stone was found in the South African mines in 1884, and was sent to Amsterdam to be cut. A London jeweler became the possessor of it, and at the time of the Queen's jubilee it was purchased by the women of the Court as a present to Queen Victoria, the price paid for it being £10,000. The Queen having intimated that she would prefer the money to endow a hospital, it was sold to E. S. Lawrence, a Colorado millionaire. After the failure of the Baring Brothers, Lawrence in turn sold it to Edward Bruce, secretary of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, and Carroll became its purchaser on February 23.

It has a light orange tint and is of the style and color so much in vogue in the French court of Napoleon III. Were it pure white it is claimed that it would be worth $3,000,000.—N. Y. Press.

Disappointed.

Miss Romantic—"I do love birds. Are you not fond of them?"

Mr. Bashor—"I should say I am. They make simply an ideal lunch; but we can't afford them any more. Everybody in the street has been [illegible] since the [illegible] struck 'Tansy.'"—Judge, Grey & Co.'s Monthly.

Deceased.

James I., being requested by his old nurse to make her son "a gentleman," answered magnificently, "I cannot; for a beggar's son was born a beggar, and he will die a beggar." Napoleon, had he been asked to make a Marshal of France out of Marie Louise's footman, would have found it impossible to do so.

Suicide of Employees.

The death near Allentown, Pa., a few days ago of David Heffner recalls the fact that he was one of a family of forty-one children. His father was John Heffner, of Reading, who was accidentally killed by the cars in that place six years ago at the age of sixty-nine.

Heffner was one of Reading's characters, and it is doubtful whether his parental record has been equalled in modern times in this country. He was a dwarfed hunchback and was born in Berlin, Germany, in 1816. In 1849 he came to this country and shortly after he arrived settled in Reading.

Until his death he made a living by collecting and selling rags and paper. His remarkable family history is part of the records of the Berks County courts, it having been found out a short time before his death, while he was a witness in a lawsuit.

He was married the first time in 1840 to a buxom young woman of his native land. In eight years she bore him seventeen children. The first and second years of their marriage she gave birth to twins, and for four successive years afterward she bore triplets. In the seventh year she gave birth to one child and soon afterward died. Of the seventeen children she left the oldest was consequently only 7 years of age.

Heffner engaged a young woman to look after his large brood of babies, and three months later she assumed the robes of a bride and became Mrs. Heffner No. 2.

She presented her husband with two children the first two years, and in the next five years added ten more to the lot, two at each birth. Then for three years she added but one a year.

She died before another year came around.

Of the thirty-two John Heffner had been blessed with, twelve had died at the time his second wife had passed away. The twenty that were left did not appear to be an obstacle to a young widow with one child consenting to become the third wife of the jolly little hunchback, for he was known as one of the happiest of men, notwithstanding that his big family made him work like a slave.

The third Mrs. Heffner became the mother of nine children to her husband in ten years, and the contentment and happiness of the couple were proverbial.

One day in the fall of 1885, the father of the forty-one children, while crossing the railroad track, was struck by an engine and was run over and killed. But for that sad ending it is impossible to estimate what the size of the little hunchback's family might have been. His widow and twenty-eight of his children are still living, most of them in Reading. They are a thrifty lot and very respectable.

Mr. Bett's Cyclone Annihilator.

Mr. Edward Daniel Betts is an artist and a man with a sharp eye. He read the other day about some hunter on the plains who was pursued by a relentless cyclone. In sheer desperation the hunter turned and fired his trusty rifle at the rapidly approaching funnel-shaped cloud. Instantly the wind began to lose its nerve, and in less than a minute the landscape was as beautiful as a day in June.

Mr. Betts shut himself up and wrestled with the secrets of nature. At last he struck pay gravel, and his patent is applied for.

"It is a large rubber ball filled with gun cotton or dynamite," he explained yesterday, "which will be hurled with terrific force at the advancing cyclone. The explosive will have a fuse to it which will be ignited automatically."

He further explained that the propelling instrument was so arranged that it always pointed at the cyclone. The ball was thrown after the wind had attained a certain velocity.

Mr. Betts has had a great deal of trouble in arranging this last detail. For he found that if he set it at too low a notch the machine would go off in a stiff breeze and throw the rubber ball of dynamite over into a neighboring pasture or down into a cow lot, doing great and immediate damage to the cows without any material advantage. Then again, if the machine were set too high, it would not get into active operation until after the entire family had crossed the Dark River and the cyclone was in the next county.

Mr. Betts says there is no question but that a dose of dynamite will knock any cyclone cold. The machines can be put on a high pole out of the reach of goats and children.

An Old Superstition.

The sentimental and superstitious who are given to tracing the laws of coincidences will find an interesting subject for their attention in the recent death of a jeweler in Bucyrus, O. For many years it has been the office of a skilful German watchman, named Frank Kehrer, to attend to the town clock. During the past few months the health of Mr. Kehrer has been poor and the clock, deprived of his careful attention, has been keeping indifferent time. One Monday morning recently the timepiece struck 5, and a few moments later it stopped. Early risers who heard the chime affirm that there was something indescribably weird and peculiar about it. Later risers, noticing the clock hands pointing to 5:05, commented upon the subject and its aged guardian. Later in the day the news spread that Mr. Kehrer's condition had suddenly become worse and that he had died at 5:05 that morning.

When the late State Senator B. J. Smith, of Hancock County, W. Va., passed away, his family looked at his watch to see the time. The hands pointed to 12.02. When S. G. Smith, son of the late Senator, began housekeeping in Wheeling, his father gave him a family clock which he had always attended to himself. After the funeral Mr. Smith returned to Wheeling. As soon as he saw the clock Mr. Smith turned to his mother and sister and asked them if anything in the room had attracted their attention. "The clock," said the sister, and the mother nodded assent. The clock had stopped at 12.02.—Pittsburg Times.

Depravity of a Fire Horse.

One of a pair of horses belonging to the Baltimore Fire Department, has developed a taste for beer which would make a Prohibitionist weep for the weakness of brute nature. He takes his beer with the relish of a regular, and holds the glass between his lips while he sips the fluid. He also eats tobacco with evident relish. The horse sips off a piece when the plug is held out to him never "bites a larger piece than he can chew." The horse has also been taught to wipe his mouth upon a handkerchief after drinking a glass of beer, taking it from the pocket of his keeper for the purpose. He can also open the latch of a door as quickly as a person.

A Letter on a Postage Stamp.

When the postmaster at the little country office in Ellington, Conn., opened his mail bag one day last week a single cancelled postage stamp fell out. He looked among the letters to see if the stamp had come from any of them, but they were all right. Then he examined the back of the stamp to see if the gum was still on it. He found that Mrs. J. F. Irvine, of Hartford, in this State, had moistened her tongue and strained her eyesight by writing a letter on the back of the stamp. The size of the writing was a small fraction of what the paper, such as is always found on the back of postage stamps, would contain. Mrs. Irvine's letter was addressed to Miss [illegible], Ellington, Conn.—Hartford Times.

HOW CHINESE GET HERE

THE WAY THEY ARE SMUGGLED OVER FROM CANADA.

Clever Tricks Played on Customs Officials—Old Chinamen Made to Look Young—Passports Made to Do Duty Over and Over Again.

Every Chinaman who leaves Canada takes a certificate which shall serve as his passport when he returns. He may take out a certificate when he does not mean to leave the country. He may take one when he is merely going to smuggle himself over the border, and never means to go back to the Dominion. Or he may take a certificate when he has made all the money he needs, and is on his way to China to end his days there, after years of that luxurious idleness which the average laborer counts upon obtaining in China from the judicious investment of $2,000—the coolie's plum. Of course it is fair to presume that in many cases the certificate is demanded by men who mean to return. At all events, these certificates, which are passports to Canada, and indirectly to the United States, have a money value.

They are sold in China. They can be purchased openly to-day in the streets of Hong Kong, like ducks or chopsticks. There they possess a fluctuating value, and have been known to fetch as high as $65. Sometimes they are let go at a less price than the $50 they are expected to save in the avoidance of the poll-tax, the fluctuations being governed by the demand at the time of the departure of a vessel, because only so many uncertified Chinese laborers may take passage on the steamers under the Canadian law—one to every fifty tons of the ship's burden. Of those who carry certificates, and of those not of the laboring class, as many as chosen may come.

It is to guard against trickery with the certificates that the custom officials at Victoria and Vancouver have all that they can manage. When a Chinaman enters the office of the collector to apply for a certificate, several men are called in—the interpreter and a clerk or two. The Chinaman gives his name, age, place of birth, and other particulars of value in identifying him. He is asked to step upon the platform of a measuring machine, such as is in use in our army and elsewhere—an upright pole marked off into feet and inches, and fitted with a sliding rod that gives the man's hight when it rests upon his head. All this the Chinaman perfectly comprehends; but what he does not know is the description of himself that the men around him are going to write down in the big government book after he has gone, a description which takes in his general appearance, the peculiarities of his features and limbs, and shape, with notes of every scar or pit or mark upon his hands, neck, face and head.

And yet, in spite of these precautions, Chinamen who go away from Canada looking at least 40 years of age return appearing to be only 24, and others who measure five feet and nine inches when they depart come back in a few months several inches shorter or taller than when they sailed for China. They are newcomers, with certificates of other men, of course. The silent scanning of the features of applicants for certificates does not pass unnoticed by these shrewd and intelligent people. The manner in which they endeavor to make themselves appear like the persons whose certificates they carry show this.

They frequently go so far as to disfigure themselves for life in order to save the $50, and to bear out what they judge must be written in the customs book against the numerals that mark each of the certificates—which, by-the-way, contain no word of the descriptions of the men who take them out. While I was in Victoria, one of these tricksters arrived with a great scar burned in his forehead, a cut disfiguring one cheek, and a deep pit burned in his neck. When questioned, and proven to be a fraudulent fellow, he confessed that he had never been to Canada before.

The cross-examination each certificated Chinaman must undergo in the British Columbian custom-houses before he is allowed to pass into the country without paying the tax is very searching. He is asked what city he worked in while in Canada, and then he must name the principal streets in that city, some of the names of the merchants there, and also the notable peculiarities of the town; what sort of looking things drag the railroad cars; what kind of machines are used to put out fires—a hundred questions cleverly devised. In spite of all this, the customs officials frequently have to admit that they cannot tell whether they are being imposed upon or not in especial cases. Doubtless many Chinamen slip through.

The men who sell the certificates accompany the sales with descriptions of themselves, and with a great amount of the information they acquired of the localities they were familiar with. As to the general facts about Caucasian life, there are plenty of men in China and on the ships to post the immigrant fully.

Every three weeks, when a ship arrives, the Chinamen with certificates are questioned, and several are found to be the purchasers of the certificates of others, but not one Chinaman has yet been sent back on this account. All that Canada wants is her tax, and if any Chinaman caught at this trickery lacks the $50, he finds his countrymen in Victoria or Vancouver willing to advance the money to him.—Julian Ralph in Harpers.

BUSTER, THE ORACULAR MULE.

He Was Blindly Trusted, and Then Died His Followers for a Mule at Least.

BUSTER HAS DONE IT AT LAST. The hands of the law have closed upon him, and woe sits by the hearth at Uncle Morg Binder's, in the Pine Creek region. Buster is a mule—a little mouse-colored mule—that has been in the Binder family so many years that his age is forgotten. He was the autocrat of the Binder premises. His chief duty was to haul Uncle Morg and Aunt Peggy when they wanted to go visiting or to town to trade. That is, Buster hauled them if he hadn't made up his mind to a different course. They never knew whether the mule was going to take them or not until they got into the wagon. Then Uncle Morg would take up the lines and say:

"Now, then, Buster! What 'o ye think about it?"

If Buster pricked up his ears and started off that was as much as to say that he thought it was all right, and he would take Uncle Morg and Aunt Peggy wherever they were going, and fetch them back home slick as a greaser. But if Buster replied to Uncle Morg's inquiry by laying his ears back on his shoulders and scowling, they knew that the mule thought it wasn't all right, and without another word Uncle Morg and Aunt Peggy would dismount, unhitch the mule and turn him out, and go contentedly into the house to wait until some day when Buster was willing.

"Make him go agin his will!" Uncle Morg always exclaimed when asked why he didn't force the mule to go. 'W'y, man, sumpin' 'd happen surer'n 'tater rot if we sh'd go away agin Buster's idee o' the matter! Buster knows!"

It was the same way with persons. Buster's opinion of an individual decided Uncle Morg and Aunt Peggy. When he folded his liberal ears back and threatened a rush, upon any person under his scrutiny that person could do no business with the Binder family. "Buster knows!" was always the emphatic remark of his two loyal subjects after the mule had given his opinion, and that in spite of several queer judgments the arbitrary Buster had put on record. There was the case of the man who drove up to the Binder place once when the railroad was building. He started for the house but Buster blocked the way. He not only laid back his ears and threatened the man with his front, but turned about and let his heels fly so viciously and so rapidly in the direction of the man's head that the stranger backed away and shouted to Uncle Morg, who stood on the stoop, to call his mule off.

"I have got some business with you!" shouted the man.

"No y' hain't!" replied Uncle Morg. "Ye hain't got no business with me, fer Buster's agin ye, n' Buster knows!"

The man went off in a huff, and, come to find out, he was the agent of the railroad, and wanted to contract with Uncle Morg for a big lot of ties. The consequence was that other parties got the contract, which proved to be one with big money in it.

"Don't care!" said Uncle Morg. "The chances is th't if I'd ha' took the contract I'd ha' put the money in a bank, 'n' the bank'd a busted! Buster knows!"

Then there was the new preacher in the district, the Rev. Absalom Dubbs, the meekest, mildest, and most harmless of men. When brother Dubbs went to make his first pastoral call on Sister Binder, he was bounced off of the premises by Buster so quick that he never knew how he got out in the road. It saddened the hearts of Uncle Morg and Aunt Peggy to know that Brother Dubbs had been weighed in Buster's balance and found so lamentably wanting. But there was no getting around it. Brother Dubbs was under suspicion, and Uncle Morg and Aunt Peggy stayed home from meeting all that year. Their faith in Buster's wisdom was not shaken a bit by the fact that the dominie quit the district with a spotless record.

"The world hain't come to an end yit!" said Uncle Morg. "Preachers is doin' some turr'ble queer things these days w'en ye hain't s'pectin' of it. Buster knows!"

But the oracular little mule is suffering greatly in prestige now. Uncle Morg's and Aunt Peggy's heretofore unwavering trust in Buster has been rudely shaken, and their calm philosophy does not serve to sustain them in their painful awakening. Two or three months ago one of the nicest-appearing young men who had ever been seen in that part of the Pine Creek country stopped his horse at the Binder farm and got out of the wagon. Buster took to him on sight. He put his nose on the stranger's sleeve and walked him right up to Uncle Morg's door. Buster even seemed to want to follow the man into the house, he had taken such a fancy to him. That was all the recommendation Uncle Morg and Aunt Peggy wanted for the stranger, and he didn't dilly-daily in presenting the business he had in hand. In less than fifteen minutes he had Uncle Morg's signature to a contract to act as agent in that district for the Grab Quick Stump Puller and Lightning Chuck-hole Filler. Last week the contract turned up in the shape of a cut-throat judgment note for $150, and Uncle Morg was called upon to settle. He kicked, and they levied on property of his, including the oracular mule.

"If I hef to pay the swindlin' note I will," says Uncle Morg. "Tain't the money I mind, but to think th't arter we've let Buster hev the run o' the place for twenty year 'n' better he'd turn to 'n' steer us agin a bunco game is w'at's breakin' us all up!"—N. Y. Sun.

How An Earthquake Feels.

To the average resident of the temperate zones an earthquake is a rare and terrible event, creating more consternation than any other visitation of nature. In the tropics, however, particularly in Central America, it is wonderful how easily the residents become accustomed to the shocks, which do not come, however, wholly without warning.

You are sitting on a piazza, of a hot afternoon, chatting with your friends, when suddenly the sky seems to grow heavy, the crows stop cawing and the buzzards quit fighting in the street. There is a general rush, and, though you may not know what is the matter, you cannot help feeling uneasy.

The old natives say, "We are going to have a little shake," and then the ladies begin to rock, the tumblers fall off the table, you feel deadly sick at the stomach, and the house is all over. The sky clears, the crows begin their noisy screams and the buzzards resume their quarrel over the street offal.

There is something inexplicably weird, writes, however, about the trepidation of the earth, says the New York Journal. The slightest oscillation will startle the most [illegible] of the Venetians, and you become [illegible] conscious that you are [illegible] Many a person who would [illegible] would [illegible] [illegible]

A VISIT TO THE MIKADO

THE IMPERIAL GARDEN PARTY DESCRIBED BY SIR EDWIN ARNOLD.

A Gorgeous Scene in the Garden of the Royal Palace at Asakusa—The Festival of the Chrysanthemum—His Majesty Mutsuhito and His Court.

SIR EDWIN ARNOLD, IN A LETTER to the London Telegraph writes as follows about the garden party of Mutsuhito, the Mikado of Japan. The garden party of the Emperor is held on or about the 12th of every November in the spacious demesnes of the Palace of the royal palaces at Asakusa. It is the Festival of the Chrysanthemum, which brings with it so happy an innovation. At this time of year the flower par excellence of Japan, the national Kiku, is everywhere in glowing and glorious bloom, and the ostensible reason or the gathering in the Asakusa Palace Gardens is therefore to view the innumerable and splendid specimens of this special plant of Nippon which the skilful gardeners of the court have reared during the year past. Everywhere are now chrysanthemum shows, and chrysanthemum parties, and while private gardens are embellished with choice displays in all sorts of colors, the hillsides and lanes are also full of the more modest and quiet wild blooms of the same imperial plant, which grows everywhere, and is everywhere, even in the simplest specimens, bright and pretty. In one quarter of the capital may, indeed, be seen at present an exhibition of all the principal events in Japanese history and mythology worked out in chrysanthemums of every imaginable hue.

Of course, the imperial gardeners show samples of the Kiku, which were well worth the study and admiration of all floriste and botanists, if attention had not have been devoted to them. There is nothing to be seen at your own Temple Gardens, or at any other centre of the cultivation of the "golden-bloom" in England to compare with the really marvellous developments of the Kiku under Japanese hands. Ranging through an endless number of colors, and displaying all forms and fashions of structure, the beautiful plant shows in one place a cluster of close and compact stars of varying hues, in all tones and tints of white, yellow, russet, amber, purple and cream; and in another fantastic and dishevelled yet wildly symmetrical blooms, the petals flung abroad from the corolla in beautiful profusion of scattered loveliness and glory; some as if of shot-silk or satin, some revealing a satin lining splendidly contrasted with the brilliant upper surface, some in tangled delicacies of one and the same rich taint—the sum total of their blossoms proudly recorded on wooden tablets, which also bear the highly fanciful and poetical titles allotted to their productions by the imperial *ueke

CHILTON COUNTY

Is the geographical center of Alabama. The Louisville and Nashville, the R. T. V. & Ga. and the Montgomery, Tuskaloosa and Memphis Railroads pass through the County, and the Coosa river is the boundary line on the east. The chief industries are farming and saw milling. Population 15,000.

Clanton, the county seat, is on the L. & N. R. R., 56 miles south of Birmingham and 40 north of Montgomery. Several large saw mills are located in the vicinity of the town.

Anniston's city council has appropriated $14,000 for public schools, which is the largest amount ever authorized to be spent in that direction.

E. A. Moten of Bay Minette, Baldwin county, charged with handling green goods, pleaded guilty in the United States court at Mobile and was sentenced to six months at hard labor.

Last week's signal service weather crop bulletin, reports that all Alabama crops are generally in fine condition, but rain is very much needed in some sections. Oats are especially suffering from the drought.

A very romantic marriage occurred at Waverly a few days ago between a Mr. Macbeth of Washington City and Miss Jester of Waverly. It was the result of a newspaper correspondence, and the parties had never met until the day of the marriage.

Permanent arrangements for the Georgia-Alabama reunion to be held at Cullman on August 5, have been made. Georgians, Alabamians and Germans are alike represented in the organization and all enthusiastic in their efforts to make it the most pleasant ever held in the state.

Lancaster B. McVay, who was over 80 years of age, recently died at his home in Lawrence county. For nearly sixty years of his long life he taught school in that county and thousands of people lament the death of one who was their preceptor in days long gone.—Age-Herald.

Col. William A. Johnston, who died recently at Tuscumbia, was one of the most prominent citizens in the Tennessee valley, and the wealthiest man in Tuscumbia. Before the war he was a steamboat captain on the Ohio and Tennessee rivers, and amassed some money. After the war he started over again, and accumulated a fortune by his own labors.

At a meeting of ladies of Birmingham held a few days ago to organize in the interest of the fair to take charge of the departments of home industries and ornamental work, Mrs. George C. Ball was chosen president, and the following executive committee was elected: Mesdames Joseph F. Johnson, John W. Bush, A. O. Lane, William Hardie and R. N. Rhodes.

The general council of Mobile granted to the street railway corporation, of which W. B. Duncan, of Nashville is president, and which now operates all the street car lines in the city, the right to introduce machinery for electric propulsion of cars. Work will begin in a few weeks, but will not be pushed until the heavy summer traffic is over. It will be in operation by the first of next year.

The Sheffield Enterprise says: "The contracts and agreements have all been signed up between the Sheffield Land, Iron and Coal company and Messrs. Williams & Keechlin for two acres of ground on the river front in the angle north of the Tennessee road and east of the river drive, for the establishment of a brewery, the capacity to be 12,000 barrels per annum. Work will commence within fifteen days and be completed by January 1, 1892. The amount to be expended at once is $40,000."

The comptroller of the currency recently issued an abstract of reports showing the condition of the thirty national banks in the state of Alabama on the fourth day of May last. These banks had resources to the amount of $14,766,-42.98, of which loans and discounts were $8,765,594. United States bonds to secure circulation, $1,229,500; stocks, securities, etc., $996,383.46; due from reserve agents, $647,245.36; due from other banks, $723,729.28; specie, $561,638.94; and legal tender notes, $306,028.94.

The charter has been received for the Lawrence County Oil, Gas and Mineral company of Sheffield, with a capital of $200,000. The company owns 20,000 acres of valuable lands, containing iron and lead ores, besides oil and gas lands. The property is adjoining the Gayer Oil company, owned by Memphis, which is now operating a fifty-barrel well, and several smaller ones. This is the second company of the kind in Sheffield. The other is the Lawrence Oil, Gas, Pipe and Line company, with a capital of $500,000.

The grand jury at Eufaula have found indictments against Messrs. W. M. Reeves, president; J. H. Reeves, vice-president, and C. Rhodes, cashier of the John McNab bank. Indictments were found on four counts jointly against Messrs. Reeves and Rhodes, and a separate indictment on one count each against W. N. Reeves and J. H. Reeves. Warrants were served and bonds in $600 given on each of the four counts in the first indictment, $1,000 on the count in the indictment against C. [illegible] Reeves, and $500 on the separate count in the indictment against J. H. Reeves.

The postoffice department has completed the readjustment of salaries of first-class postmasters, to take effect July 1 next. The total number of the first-class offices is 128, a net increase of 14 during the year. The aggregate of salaries of the 128 first-class postmasters is $450,600, an increase of $41,500 as compared with July 1, 1890. The net increase of gross receipts which accrued at first class offices for the year ended March 31, 1891, is stated at $2,062,247. From a table showing the increase or decrease of revenue by cities and postmasters' salaries Birmingham, shows: Postmaster's salary for coming year, $3,200; increase receipts last year, $8,094. Mobile, salary $3,100; increase receipts $2,910.

A Birmingham dispatch says: Judge Bruce, of the United States district court, has ordered the temporary suspension from office of United States Commissioner Ferguson, of Cleburne county, pending the investigation of certain charges brought against him by District Attorney Parsons. These charges are eight in number and of various kinds. It is alleged that Ferguson sold corn from his mill to illicit distillers, that he knew, by personal knowledge of violations of the revenue laws, which he did not prosecute; that he consulted the interest of prisoners more than that of the government; that he was negligent and careless. Ferguson's resignation had been requested before this motion was made, but he refused to give it.

Col. Abercrombie Killed.

Col. R. H. Abercrombie, while walking in his garden Monday night, was mistaken for a burglar by his son-in-law, Dr. D. A. Baker, who shot and instantly killed him. Col. Abercrombie, the victim of one of the saddest accidents in the history of Alabama, was one of the state's most prominent citizens. He was a Macon county man and lived in Tuskegee, where he stood at the fore front in law and politics. He was a colonel in the late war. He was a man of wealth and owned several large plantations. In the boom year of 1887 he moved to Gadsden, where his daughter, Mrs. Baker, resided, and had lived there since. He was a most elegant and polished gentleman, a true son of the old south.

After Nineteen Years.

A Mobile dispatch says: Nineteen years ago Mac Holyfield killed one Williams at Three Rivers, Jackson county, Miss. The coroner's jury exonorated im from blame, but the grand jury subequently indicted him. Public opinion was with him, and he made good his escape. he moved over into Alabama and settled in Baldwin county. All would have gone well with him had he not been suspected of train wrecking. He was brought to trial on that charge and acquitted. His record was hunted up, however, and the detectives found out the pending charge of murder. The authorities at Pascagoula, Miss., were notified and the grand jury brought in another bill and Holyfield will be tried at this term of the court, he having surrendered voluntarily.

Tri-State Fair Exhibit.

The Montgomery Advertiser has the following: Governor Jones has received a letter from a committee representing a movement to have a tri-state representation at Chicago, at the World's fair in 1893. It states the object of such a movement, and asks Alabama to join hands with Tennessee and Georgia for the purpose of establishing a joint exhibition at the great exposition. It also requests Governor Jones to appoint a certain number of delegates from the state to meet delegates from the other states in convention at Chattanooga at an early date for the purpose of furthering the matter and taking such action as will bring about a successful consummation of this great scheme. Believing he possessed no authority for appointing such delegates to the Chattanooga convention to represent the state, Governor Jones has respectfully referred the matter to the Commercial and Industrial association of Montgomery. This organization has the matter now under consideration, and will probably assume the power of appointment and select such delegates as will intelligently and honorably represent the state at the approaching convention in Chattanooga. This is an important matter, and must be discreetly and systematically worked.

The Fourth of July as a Day of Thanksgiving.

The Oak Grove Alliance in Fayette county recently passed some resolutions, four of which are as follows: "Resolved, That we, the members of Oak Grove Alliance, in session assembled, do hereby set apart the 4th day of July as a day of thanksgiving to Almighty God for past and present blessings upon our order and our people, and to implore a continuance of His mercy and favor to guide us to the consummation of this great work. Resolved 2, That all alliances, churches, organizations and institutions who recognize the Fatherhood of God are most earnestly [illegible] requested to [illegible] this week in our effort to exalt the God of the Bible and humble ourselves before Him. Resolved 3, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the National Economist and the Alliance Herald for publication, and that a copy be sent to Brother S. M. Adams, state president, and that he be requested to confer with Brother L. L. Polk, national president, asking him to issue a proclamation to the effect that the labor organizations of the nation may spend one of our national holidays in solemn prayer to Almighty God. Resolved 4, That the alliance primary or county meet at their halls or some convenient place and spend the day in prayer and praise, and that 11 o'clock be set apart for a special appeal to God for His aid to carry on the work to its final consummation."

The Inspector's Report on the Pratt Mine Disaster.

Mine Inspector Hooper has filed with Governor Jones his official report of the mining disaster at Pratt Mines on May 23. The document is a lengthy one and covers every detail in the case. It concludes as follows: "From my investigation of this occurrence I wish to say that if this explosion occurred as claimed by the officials of the Tennessee Coal and Iron company, as one of those unforeseen accidents that could not be guarded against, then this is a dangerous and unfit place to work convicts, who are ignorant of the dangers of mining and not competent to protect themselves and who have no option as to where or when they shall go to any place to which they are ordered; that if this explosion could have been guarded against then there is very great neglect somewhere in the management of the parties in charge of shaft No. 1. I also wish to state that in view of the dangers incident to the working of gaseous mines and of the ignorance of the convicts, (who are generally recruited from the cotton fields of South Alabama) that no convict should be allowed to work in a gaseous mine; that this is especially dangerous where there is only one avenue of escape from said mine and where the carelessness of one man may cause the loss of several hundred lives; that I do not consider an air shaft 360 feet deep, which is crooked and in which the smoke stacks of underground boilers are placed, is an escape shaft; that the entrance from old slope No. 1, which comes in at the bottom of No. 1 shaft, is not, I think, a reasonably safe method of escape; that the Tennessee Coal and Iron company were well aware that this was a gaseous mine, as in the past two years two men have been killed and a number, I don't know how many, burned. I think in view of these facts No. 1 shaft is a dangerous and unfit place to work men who have but little knowledge of the dangers to be guarded against in mining. I have not expressed these conclusions without careful thought, as probably the best prison in the south is built at this point and of the management of the convicts above ground I cannot speak too highly, from what I saw while at the prison. I also wish to say in regard to and in justice to Mr. Ramsey, that the progressive plan of the work in the mines is good and that the trouble seems to be in the detail of the work in the mines."

A Montgomery, Ala., dispatch says: Mine inspector Hooper reported Friday to the governor relative to the Pratt mine gas explosion on the 22d ultimo. The report is very lengthy, and shows that the principal mine boss prohibited the subboss to let the men enter or work in that shaft that day, being full of gaseous substances. He had a placard put on the entrance of that shaft, No. 1, with the word "Fire" on it, to prevent the men being placed therein. He blames DeLacy, a boss, more the result of ignorance than carelessness, and the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company, the owner of the mine, come also in for a good share of severe criticism.

A TRI-STATE EXHIBIT

At Chicago by Georgia, Alabama and Tennessee.

Delegates representing the various counties, cities and commercial bodies of Alabama, Georgia and Tennessee met in Chattanooga Wednesday to consider the advisability of a united exhibit of the three states at the world's fair at Chicago in 1893. The meeting was a very enthusiastic one, and the whole day was consumed by discussion. General Moore, of Huntsville, Ala., was chairman of the convention. Resolutions were unanimously adopted favoring a united exhibit, and a permanent organization was effected to carry out the purpose. Major J. F. Shipp, of Chattanooga, was made permanent chairman; Governor Buchanan, of Tennessee, Governor Northen, of Georgia, and Governor Jones, of Alabama, vice presidents, and Hon. H. Clay Evans, of Chattanooga, secretary and treasurer. The plan for the three states to exhibit a single [illegible] building, the [illegible] of the states to be [illegible] the [illegible] of the [illegible]

NEWS OF THE ORDER FROM ALL SECTIONS.

Items of Interest to Alliancemen Everywhere.

THE NEW YORK HERALD ON THE THIRD PARTY MOVEMENT.

The New York Herald says that the National Union conference held recently in Cincinnati, is not to be pooh-hoohed away as an insignificant gathering of cranks and soreheads. Following this the Herald continues: "Party leaders, Republican or Democrat, who look upon it with indifference or treat it with ridicule, fail to see its significance and its warning. Admit that the interests represented are diverse, even incongrous and discordant; that visionary schemes may be favored and extreme demands made. It may be that no practical agreement will be reached, no platform adopted, no third party formed. All this signifies nothing. The real significance of the event is rather in its origin than in what may be its immediate results, in the causes which have led to it rather than the effects which may now come from it. From this point of view the gathering on the banks of the Ohio, representing as it does the Farmers Alliance and the Knights of Labor, to say nothing of other organizations, is more significant than any so-called third party movement we have had in this country for years. The greenback, the prohibition, the woman's suffrage and even the labor cause have appealed to special classes of limited numbers. They lacked the elements of national strength, and consequently of national achievement. Different from all these is the movement now looming up with growing importance especially in the west. We have said that its significance is in its origin, its cause. That cause is party politics. It is a deep seated grievance felt by the farmers and the wage earners of the country in consequence of the shameful disregard of their interests and welfare shown by the party in power. The organization of the aggrieved classes is a practical protest against such party management. As the grievance affects agricultural and industry the scope of the movement may be as broad as the nation, as general as the masses. * * * The Farmers' Alliance joined with the forces of labor and other organizations may prove a factor in coming politics more potent than many affect to believe. Of course it is not expected that a third party, if one should be formed next year, would elect its candidates. It might, however, carry enough States to throw the choice into the house, which would insure the election of a democratic president. But whatever may be the immediate effect of this new uprising, the movement is not going to disappear while the cause which started it exists. Either party in power must look to the interests of the farmers, workingmen and the masses generally, or these classes will combine for their own protection."

THE "CRUSHING OUT" IDEA.

"The fiat has gone forth. The national banks have assumed control of the old political parties and directed that the Alliance be forced to stand alone as a third party. They forget, however, that if the Alliance Democrats and Republicans in their respective parties go to the primaries that they are numerically strong enough to control the workings thereof. Do they expect to be able to buy up the farmers of the country by taking advantage of their oppressed condition and holding them in thrall by threats and glittering promises as heretofore? Oh, no! They realize that the poor worm has at last turned, and that the farmer is thinking for himself, and that his thoughts are turned to his own hard condition and how to improve his opportunities to secure a fair amount of relief for himself and his family. Hence the edict goes out that the farmer must be led or forced into a third party, and the two old parties unite to crush him out of political existence. And the city press has been bought up and are one and all united in an effort to turn the attention of the farmer to the high offices and great wealth awaiting him as the reward of independent political action. But the farmer will not be thus led from the enemy. He will be at the caucus and at the convention, and his voice will be raised in defense of his home and his family. If there is to be a third party formed let the bankers and monopolists organize it, and let them come before the American people defending a platform framed in the [illegible] banking [illegible] of liberty. By [illegible] the position the farmers shall take, and they will be kept busy from now until their platform is rent asunder by the wrath of an outraged people. If the farmers of Tennessee adopt the sub-treasury plan they will defend it to the last.

ALLIANCE EDUCATIONAL CAMPAIGN.

The Washington correspondent of the Atlanta Journal sends the following to his paper: "The last issue of Col. L. L. Polk's Raleigh paper, the Progressive Farmer, has a significant front-page illustration, representing a female debutante, labelled "Third Party." Colonel Polk did not gainsay the suggestiveness of the cartoon in his paper, and finally declared that unless the next congress got down to business according to the Alliance forms, the waters in 1892 were going to be mightily agitated. He stated further that an Alliance educational campaign had been agreed upon for the summer and the leaders of the order would appear at different points, north, south and west, and address the people. The campaign in Georgia will be vigorous. The season will open at Americus on July 14, and Hon. J. B. Weaver, of Iowa; Hon. Jerry Simpson, Dr. C. W. Macune, Mrs. Anna L. Diggs, of Kansas, and Col. Polk will appear. Atlanta will be visited by this party on the 15, Athens on the 16, and Rome on 18. In stating the names of the speakers for this educational work, Hon. J. F. Livingston was not overlooked. Along with a number of speakers, he is expected to appear at Gainesville and Lakeland, Florida, in July, and at various points in Mississippi during the present month. The states included in this grand educational campaign are Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland Mississippi Missouri, New York North Carolina, North Dakota, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, the two Virginias and the territory of Oklahoma. The whole trend of this movement indicates the intention of the Alliance to put a presidential ticket in the field in '92. Senator Peffer stated as much during a recent visit to Washington, and Colonel Polk did not deny that such a program had been discussed, and practically agreed upon, but it depended on the acts of the next congress.

In its salutatory the Industrial Union, Creston, Iowa, says: We are here to champion the cause of the masses and to sustain labor in all its just demands. As the official organ of the Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union we shall ever be found true to the principles embodied in its declaration of purposes, and ready to champion and defend the principles of the order. We realize that the alliance is entering upon a tempestuous voyage. Nothing but the energy of its leaders and loyalty of its members will serve to guide it aright. The Industrial Union expects to be assailed from every side. It will be ridiculed and reviled. It will be assailed by open enemy and secret foe. All the forces of monopoly will be brought into requisition to drive the order out of existence. Be it so. We are here to defend the right, and, with the approval of the farmers and laborers of Iowa, we shall with charity for all, with malice toward none, with courage for the right as God gives us to see the right, keep up the war against oppression of every kind until all class legislation is forever stricken from the statute books, and in their stead shall be written, "Equal and exact justice to all."

The Liberty Bell (Sioux City, Iowa) speaking of the power of the Alliance says: "The good, solid common sense of the American people, when they have fully determined upon doing what their conscience and their judgment tell them is right, that they will not long allow them to be kept from uniting to carry out that purpose. They are now firmly convinced their demands are right, and hence every effort to prevent it only unites the more firmly, and in spite of all that politicians may do or attempt to do, the sound, common sense of the "great, plain people" will prevail. We repeat, that in our opinion, the Alliance has been strengthened by thus showing its ability to foil the attempts of its enemies to divide and set to warring each other its two principle divisions."

On the sub-treasury plan a correspondent of the Union says: "Economists have for 500 years been trying to adjust the volume of money to the available amount of precious metals. This is, and must always remain as impossible as "squaring the circle," because the metals always run away and hide in time of trouble, when we need [illegible]. The real problem in [illegible] is just always keep, and [illegible] every [illegible] to [illegible]

The membership of the Colored Alliance is increasing beyond count. National President Humphrey writes the Alliance Bureau, at Washington, that the organization is prospering beyond all precedent so far as organization is concerned. His greatest hindrance is in the educational line. The demand for literature is far in excess of ability to supply. Organizations having literature which they can dispose of, can do much by forwarding it to President Humphrey, or distributing it among colored Alliances that may be near them.

The Faulkner County Wheel (Conway, Ark.) says: "Why is it that the metropolitan press have maintained a graveyard silence on the issues presented by the Farmers' Alliance? Because they plainly see that a simple discussion of them would open the eyes of the people, and they would quickly hurl some of their demigods from place and power. They will never discuss issues, they only throw a little tariff sand to blind the people."

People's Economist (Thomasville, Ga.) says; "The Alliance warehouse in Griffin has just declared a dividend of 45 cents per bale for the season of 1890-91. That means that the cost of storage and handling their cotton to the farmers who stored in the Alliance warehouse was only 5 cents per bale."

The Canton (Miss.) Progress says: "The sub-treasury scheme has an object to accomplish—the lessening of the money pressure. This result will the scheme accomplish, and that, too, without a sub-treasury in every county."

National Lecturer J. F. Willetts is doing excellent work in the field. Good reports follow wherever he goes. The alliance needs a thousand just such men to advocate its cause.—National Economist.

EXCITEMENT CREATED

Because the Itata is Not Allowed to Unload.

A dispatch of Sunday from Iquique, Chili, says: There is great excitement here over the decision of the American admiral to take the Itata without allowing the discharge of her arms and ammunition. The press is very bitter and considers that the United States, the recognized cradle of republican idea, commits a grave error in thus indirectly assisting the dictator. The Binacional, in an editorial, says: "We know we have the sympathies of the people of America, also of the people of all other civilized nations, but the act of the United States government against the weaker power in arms for liberties and rights is not in harmony with the traditions of that government."

The article concludes: "Let Americans take our ship and our guns, but let them reflect that they leave nailed in the hearts of three million men sentiments of having been deceived in their hopes and of having lost faith in the nobleness of mind and liberality of the sentiments of the government at Washington."

A PLEA OF GUILTY

Is Entered by Ex-City Treasurer Bardsley.

A Philadelphia dispatch says: John Bardsley, ex-city treasurer of Philadelphia, was brought up from Moyamensing prison Tuesday morning and arraigned in court before Judges Fell and Wilson, on sixteen separate indictments, charging him with loaning money as a public officer, deriving gain from the deposit of public money, and converting public money to his own use. When Bardsley was asked how he plead, he pleaded guilty to every count of the indictment. It was then arranged that hearing the evidence for and against Bardsley should be set for June 23d, and the court could then weigh and pronounce sentence. In the seventeen indictments on which Bardsley plead guilty, the total amount of money involved is $679,406.

EARTHQUAKES IN ITALY.

Whole Towns Collapse—Several People Killed.

A cablegram from Rome, Italy, says: The cities of Verona and Mantua were shaken by an earthquake Sunday. Many houses were damaged. An invalid lady was so badly frightened by the shock that she died. Lombardy, Venetia and part of Tuscany were visited in the early morning by repeated shocks. The worst shocks occurring about 2 o'clock. Shocks were also felt in Venice and Milan. The center of the disturbance was at Verona. A subterranean noise was heard like the roar of artillery, which was followed by three strong shocks. The inhabitants rushed into the streets in terror. At Marcenigo three persons were killed, and at Badia, Calavena, seventeen were badly injured by falling houses and chimneys.

A later dispatch from Rome says: Advices from Badia, Calavania and Tregnanzo, two of the towns in northern Italy visited by the earthquake Sunday, show that the inhabitants were terror-stricken and have taken to the fields for safety. The authorities have, as far as possible, sought to alleviate distress among the people and have furnished a large number of tents to shelter those who have fled from their homes. The subterranean rumblings continue and occasionally slighter shocks, than those of Sunday are felt. The people are in dread of momentarily seeing the earth open and swallow them. The damage done at these two places is much greater than was indicated in the first reports. The towns were practically destroyed by the severity of the shocks. The commission, appointed by the authorities to examine houses which were not thrown down by the undulations of the earth, have made hasty examinations and they report that three-quarters of the houses are in such a condition that public safety demands that they be pulled down entirely. Large bodies of troops have been dispatched to these places to assist the authorities in clearing the streets of debris in tearing down dangerous houses and to render such other assistance as they may be called upon to give.

VESUVIUS HEARD FROM.

A cablegram of Monday from Naples says: A large stream of lava is issuing from the new crater of Mt. Vesuvius at the base of the central cone. Signor Palmieri, director of the observatory, states that the flow is directly connected with Sunday's earthquake in Lombardy, and that seismic disturbances generally stop when an eruption commences. He does not consider the lava stream dangerous.

IN NEW JERSEY.

A dispatch from New Brunswick, N. Y., says that a distinct shock of earthquake, from southeast to northwest, accompanied by a rumbling noise, was felt there at 11 o'clock Sunday morning.

TO RAISE FUNDS

For a Memorial to Davis, Lee and Jackson.

The college of Charleston, S. C., issues a circular in which it earnestly invites the co-operation of all southern colleges in the forming of an association to raise funds to be applied to the erection of a monument to perpetuate the fame and memory of Jefferson Davis, Robert E. Lee, Stonewall Jackson and the confederate dead in general. In order to arrange some definite mode of procedure, it is proposed that a convention of southern universities and colleges be held in Charleston, at such time during the coming fall as may be found most expedient and convenient, and that an interstate oratorical contest be made a feature of the proposed convention, each institution being represented by one contestant. Every southern university and college is earnestly requested to send a representation to the convention, whether such delegation takes part in the contest or not.

THE GRAND JURY REPORTS

On the Lynching Case at Walla Walla, Washington.

A dispatch from Walla Walla, Washington, says: The grand jury empaneled to investigate the lynching of A. J. Lucas by the soldiers on April 25th, made a report to the superior court, Wednesday. The report says in part: "We found a true bill against only seven enlisted men of the Fourth United States cavalry, for we are satisfied there are a number of soldiers against whom [illegible] charges have been preferred to murder, [illegible] that are equally guilty [illegible]

CHILTON COUNTY

Is the geographical center of Alabama. The Louisville and Nashville, the E. T. V. & G. and the Montgomery, Tuskaloosa and Memphis Railroads pass through the County, and the Coosa river is the boundary line on the east. The chief industries are farming and saw milling. Population 15,000.

Clanton, the county seat, is on the L. & N. R. R., 56 miles south of Birmingham and 49 north of Montgomery. Several large saw mills are located in the vicinity of the town.

Anniston's city council has appropriated $14,000 for public schools, which is the largest amount ever authorized to be spent in that direction.

E. A. Moton of Bay Minette, Baldwin county, charged with handling green goods, pleaded guilty in the United States court at Mobile and was sentenced to six months at hard labor.

Last week's signal service weather crop bulletin, reports that all Alabama crops are generally in fine condition, but rain is very much needed in some sections. Oats are especially suffering from the drought.

A very romantic marriage occurred at Waverly a few days ago between a Mr. Macbeth of Washington City and Miss Jester of Waverly. It was the result of a newspaper correspondence, and the parties had never met until the day of the marriage.

Permanent arrangements for the Georgia-Alabama reunion to be held at Cullman on August 5, have been made. Georgians, Alabamians and Germans are alike represented in the organization and all enthusiastic in their efforts to make it the most pleasant ever held in the state.

Lancaster B. McVay, who was over 80 years of age, recently died at his home in Lawrence county. For nearly sixty years of his long life he taught school in that county and thousands of people lament the death of one who was their preceptor in days long gone.—Age-Herald.

Col. William A. Johnston, who died recently at Tuscumbia, was one of the most prominent citizens in the Tennessee valley, and the wealthiest man in Tuscumbia. Before the war he was a steamboat captain on the Ohio and Tennessee rivers, and amassed some money. After the war he started over again, and accumulated a fortune by his own labors.

At a meeting of ladies of Birmingham held a few days ago to organize in the interest of the fair to take charge of the departments of home industries and ornamental work, Mrs. George C. Ball was chosen president, and the following executive committee was elected: Mesdames Joseph F. Johnson, John W. Bush, A. O. Lane, William Hardie and R. N. Rhodes.

The general council of Mobile granted to the street railway corporation, of which W. B. Duncan, of Nashville is president, and which now operates all the street car lines in the city, the right to introduce machinery for electric propulsion of cars. Work will begin in a few weeks, but will not be pushed until the heavy summer traffic is over. It will be in operation by the first of next year.

The Sheffield Enterprise says: "The contracts and agreements have all been signed up between the Sheffield Land, Iron and Coal company and Messrs. Williams & Keochlin for two acres of ground on the river front in the angle north of the Tennessee road and east of the river drive, for the establishment of a brewery, the capacity to be 12,000 barrels per annum. Work will commence within fifteen days and be completed by January 1, 1892. The amount to be expended at once is $40,000."

The comptroller of the currency recently issued an abstract of reports showing the condition of the thirty national banks in the state of Alabama on the fourth day of May last. These banks had resources to the amount of $14,766,-42.98, of which loans and discounts were $8,765,594. United States bonds to secure circulation, $1,220,500; stocks, securities, etc., $996,383.40; due from reserve agents, $647,245.36; due from other banks, $793,723.28; specie, $31,638.94; and legal tender notes, $98,028.94.

The charter has been received for the Lawrence County Oil, Gas and Mineral company of Sheffield, with a capital of $200,000. The company owns 20,000 acres of valuable lands, containing iron and lead ores, besides oil and gas lands. The property is adjoining the Gayer Oil company, owned by Memphis, which is now operating a fifty-barrel well, and several smaller ones. This is the second company of the kind in Sheffield. The other is the Lawrence Oil, Gas, Pipe and Line company, with a capital of $500,-

The grand jury at Eufaula have found indictments against Messrs. W. N. Reeves, president; J. H. Reeves, vice-president, and C. Rhodes, cashier of the late John McNab bank. Indictments were found on four counts jointly against Messrs. Reeves and Rhodes, and a separate indictment on each count against W. N. Reeves and J. H. Reeves. Warrants were served and bonds in $500 given on each of the four counts in the first indictment, $1,000 on the second count in the indictment against [illegible] Reeves, and $500 on the separate count in the indictment against J. H. Reeves.

The postoffice department has completed the readjustment of salaries of first-class postmasters, to take effect July 1 next. The total number of the first-class offices is 128, a net increase of 14 during the year. The aggregate of salaries of the 128 first-class postmasters is $450,600, an increase of $41,500 as compared with July 1, 1890. The net increase of gross receipts which accrued at first class offices for the year ended March 31, 1891, is stated at $2,062,247. From a table showing the increase or decrease of revenue by cities and postmasters' salaries, Birmingham, shows: Postmaster's salary for coming year, $3,200; increase receipts last year, $8,094. Mobile, salary $3,100; increase receipts $2,910.

A Birmingham dispatch says: Judge Bruce, of the United States district court, has ordered the temporary suspension from office of United States Commissioner Ferguson, of Cleburne county, pending the investigation of certain charges brought against him by District Attorney Parsons. These charges are eight in number and of various kinds. It is alleged that Ferguson sold corn from his mill to illicit distillers, that he knew, by personal knowledge of violations of the revenue laws, which he did not prosecute; that he consulted the interest of prisoners more than that of the government; that he was negligent and careless. Ferguson's resignation had been requested before this motion was made, but he refused to give it.

Col. Abercrombie Killed.

Col. R. H. Abercrombie, while walking in his garden Monday night, was mistaken for a burglar by his son-in-law, Dr. D. A. Baker, who shot and instantly killed him. Col. Abercrombie, the victim of one of the saddest accidents in the history of Alabama, was one of the state's most prominent citizens. He was a Macon county man and lived in Tuskegee, where he stood at the fore front in law and politics. He was a colonel in the late war. He was a man of wealth and owned several large plantations. In the boom year of 1887 he moved to Gadsden, where his daughter, Mrs. Baker, resided, and had lived there since. He was a most elegant and polished gentleman, a true son of the old south.

After Nineteen Years.

A Mobile dispatch says: Nineteen years ago Mac Holyfield killed one Williams at Three Rivers, Jackson county, Miss. The coroner's jury exonorated him from blame, but the grand jury subsequently indicted him. Public opinion was with him, and he made good his escape. he moved over into Alabama and settled in Baldwin county. All would have gone well with him had he not been suspected of train wrecking. He was brought to trial on that charge and acquitted. His record was hunted up, however, and the detectives found out the pending charge of murder. The authorities at Pascagoula, Miss., were notified and the grand jury brought in another bill and Holyfield will be tried at this term of the court, he having surrendered voluntarily.

Tri-State Fair Exhibit.

The Montgomery Advertiser has the following: Governor Jones has received a letter from a committee representing a movement to have a tri-state representation at Chicago, at the World's fair in 1893. It states the object of such a movement, and asks Alabama to join hands with Tennessee and Georgia for the purpose of establishing a joint exhibition at the great exposition. It also requests Governor Jones to appoint a certain number of delegates from the state to meet delegates from the other states in convention at Chattanooga at an early date for the purpose of furthering the matter and taking such action as will bring about a successful consummation of this great scheme. Believing he possessed no authority for appointing such delegates to the Chattanooga convention to represent the state, Governor Jones has respectfully referred the matter to the Commercial and Industrial association of Montgomery. This organization has the matter now under consideration, and will probably assume the power of appointment and select such delegates as will intelligently and honorably represent the state at the approaching convention in Chattanooga. This is an important matter, and must be discreetly and systematically worked.

The Fourth of July as a Day of Thanksgiving.

The Oak Grove Alliance in Fayette county recently passed some resolutions, four of which are as follows: "Resolved, That we, the members of Oak Grove Alliance, in session assembled, do hereby set apart the 4th day of July as a day of thanksgiving to Almighty God for past and present blessings upon our order and our people, and to implore a continuance of His mercy and favor to guide us to the consummation of this great work. Resolved 2, That all alliances, churches, organizations and institutions who recognize the Sabbath as God's most [illegible] requested [illegible] our effort to exalt the God of the Bible and humble ourselves before Him. Resolved 3, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the National Economist and the Alliance Herald for publication, and that a copy be sent to Brother S. M. Adams, state president, and that he be requested to confer with Brother L. L. Polk, national president, asking him to issue a proclamation to the effect that the labor organizations of the nation may spend one of our national holidays in solemn prayer to Almighty God. Resolved 4, That the alliance primary or county meet at their halls or some convenient place and spend the day in prayer and praise, and that 11 o'clock be set apart for a special appeal to God for His aid to carry on the work to its final consummation."

The Inspector's Report on the Pratt Mine Disaster.

Mine Inspector Hooper has filed with Governor Jones his official report of the mining disaster at Pratt Mines on May 23. The document is a lengthy one and covers every detail in the case. It concludes as follows: "From my investigation of this occurrence I wish to say that if this explosion occurred as claimed by the officials of the Tennessee Coal and Iron company, as one of those unforeseen accidents that could not be guarded against, then this is a dangerous and unfit place to work convicts, who are ignorant of the dangers of mining and not competent to protect themselves and who have no option as to where or when they shall go to any place to which they are ordered; that if this explosion could have been guarded against then there is very great neglect somewhere in the management of the parties in charge of shaft No. 1. I also wish to state that in view of the dangers incident to the working of gaseous mines and of the ignorance of the convicts, (who are generally recruited from the cotton fields of South Alabama) that no convict should be allowed to work in a gaseous mine; that this is especially dangerous where there is only one avenue of escape from said mine and where the carelessness of one man may cause the loss of several hundred lives; that I do not consider an air shaft 360 feet deep, which is crooked and in which the smoke stacks of underground boilers are placed, is an escape shaft; that the entrance from old slope No. 1, which comes in at the bottom of No. 1 shaft, is not, I think, a reasonably safe method of escape; that the Tennessee Coal and Iron company were well aware that this was a gaseous mine, as in the past two years two men have been killed and a number, I don't know how many, burned. I think in view of these facts No. 1 shaft is a dangerous and unfit place to work men who have but little knowledge of the dangers to be guarded against in mining. I have not expressed these conclusions without careful thought, as probably the best prison in the south is built at this point and of the management of the convicts above ground I cannot speak too highly, from what I saw while at the prison. I also wish to say in regard to and in justice to Mr. Ramsey, that the progressive plan of the work in the mines is good and that the trouble seems to be in the detail of the work in the mines."

A Montgomery, Ala., dispatch says: Mine inspector Hooper reported Friday to the governor relative to the Pratt mine gas explosion on the 22d ultimo. The report is very lengthy, and shows that the principal mine boss prohibited the subboss to let the men enter or work in that shaft that day, being full of gaseous substances. He had a placard put on the entrance of that shaft, No. 1, with the word "Fire" on it, to prevent the men being placed therein. He blames DeLacy, a boss, more the result of ignorance than carelessness, and the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company, the owner of the mine, come also in for a good share of severe criticism.

A TRI-STATE EXHIBIT

At Chicago by Georgia, Alabama and Tennessee.

Delegates representing the various counties, cities and commercial bodies of Alabama, Georgia and Tennessee met in Chattanooga Wednesday to consider the advisability of a united exhibit of the three states at the world's fair at Chicago in 1893. The meeting was a very enthusiastic one, and the whole day was consumed by discussion. General Moore, of Huntsville, Ala., was chairman of the convention. Resolutions were unanimously adopted favoring a united exhibit, and a permanent organization was effected to carry out the purpose. Major J. F. Shipp, of Chattanooga, was made permanent chairman; Governor Buchanan, of Tennessee, Governor Matthew, of Georgia, and Governor Jones, of Alabama, vice presidents, and Hon. H. Clay Evans, of Chattanooga, secretary and treasurer. The plan is for the three states to [illegible]

NEWS OF THE ORDER FROM ALL SECTIONS.

Items of Interest to Alliancemen Everywhere.

THE NEW YORK HERALD ON THE THIRD PARTY MOVEMENT.

The New York Herald says that the National Union conference held recently in Cincinnati, is not to be poh-hoohed away as an insignificant gathering of cranks and soreheads. Following this the Herald continues: "Party leaders, Republican or Democrat, who look upon it with indifference or treat it with ridicule, fail to see its significance and its warning. Admit that the interests represented are diverse, even incongrous and discordant; that visionary schemes may be favored and extreme demands made. It may be that no practical agreement will be reached, no platform adopted, no third party formed. All this signifies nothing. The real significance of the event is rather in its origin than in what may be its immediate results, in the causes which have led to it rather than the effects which may now come from it. From this point of view the gathering on the banks of the Ohio, representing as it does the Farmers Alliance and the Knights of Labor, to say nothing of other organizations, is more significant than any so-called third party movement we have had in this country for years. The greenback, the prohibition, the woman's suffrage and even the labor cause have appealed to special classes of limited numbers. They lacked the elements of national strength, and consequently of national achievement. Different from all these is the movement now looming up with growing importance especially in the west. We have said that its significance is in its origin, its cause. That cause is party politics. It is a deep seated grievance felt by the farmers and the wage earners of the country in consequence of the shameful disregard of their interests and welfare shown by the party in power. The organization of the aggrieved classes is a practical protest against such party management. As the grievance affects agricultural and industry the scope of the movement may be as broad as the nation, as general as the masses. * * * The Farmers' Alliance joined with the forces of labor and other organizations may prove a factor in coming politics more potent than many affect to believe. Of course it is not expected that a third party, if one should be formed next year, would elect its candidates. It might however, carry enough States to throw the choice into the house, which would insure the election of a democratic president. But whatever may be the immediate effect of this new uprising, the movement is not going to disappear while the cause which started it exists. Either party in power must look to the interests of the farmers, workingmen and the masses generally, or these classes will combine for their own protection."

THE "CRUSHING OUT" IDEA.

"The fiat has gone forth. The national banks have assumed control of the old political parties and directed that the Alliance be forced to stand alone as a third party. They forget, however, that if the Alliance Democrats and Republicans in their respective parties go to the primaries that they are numerically strong enough to control the workings thereof. Do they expect to be able to buy up the farmers of the country by taking advantage of their oppressed condition and holding them in thrall by threats and glittering promises as heretofore? Oh, no! They realize that the poor worm has at last turned, and that the farmer is thinking for himself, and that his thoughts are turned to his own hard condition and how to improve his opportunities to secure a fair amount of relief for himself and his family. Hence the edict goes out that the farmer must be led or forced into a third party, and the two old parties unite to crush him out of political existence. And the city press has been bought up and are one and all united in an effort to turn the attention of the farmer to the high offices and great wealth awaiting him as the reward of independent political action. But the farmer will not be thus led from the enemy. He will be at the caucus and at the convention, and his voice will be raised in defense of his home and his family. If there is to be a third party formed for the benefit and [illegible] capitalists, organize it, and let them come before the American people defending a platform adopted [illegible] this national [illegible] the position the farmers shall take, and they will be kept busy from now until their platform is rent asunder by the wrath of an outraged people. If the farmers of Tennessee adopt the sub-treasury plan they will defend it to the last.

ALLIANCE EDUCATIONAL CAMPAIGN.

The Washington correspondent of the Atlanta Journal sends the following to his paper: "The last issue of Col. L. L. Polk's Raleigh paper, the Progressive Farmer, has a significant front-page illustration, representing a female debutante, labelled "Third Party." Colonel Polk did not gainsay the suggestiveness of the cartoon in his paper, and finally declared that unless the next congress got down to business according to the Alliance forms, the waters in 1892 were going to be mightily agitated. He stated further that an Alliance educational campaign had been agreed upon for the summer and the leaders of the order would appear at different points, north, south and west, and address the people. The campaign in Georgia will be vigorous. The season will open at Americus on July 14, and Hon. J. B. Weaver, of Iowa; Hon. Jerry Simpson, Dr. C. W. Macune, Mrs. Anna L. Diggs, of Kansas, and Col. Polk will appear. Atlanta will be visited by this party on the 15, Athens on the 16, and Rome on 18. In stating the names of the speakers for this educational work, Hon. J. F. Livingston was not overlooked. Along with a number of speakers, he is expected to appear at Gainesville and Lakeland, Florida, in July, and at various points in Mississippi during the present month. The states included in this grand educational campaign are Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland Mississippi Missouri, New York North Carolina, North Dakota, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, the two Virginias and the territory of Oklahoma. The whole trend of this movement indicates the intention of the Alliance to put a presidential ticket in the field in '92. Senator Peffer stated as much during a recent visit to Washington, and Colonel Polk did not deny that such a program had been discussed, and practically agreed upon, but it depended on the acts of the next congress.

⁂

In its salutatory the Industrial Union, Creston, Iowa, says: We are here to champion the cause of the masses and to sustain labor in all its just demands. As the official organ of the Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union we shall ever be found true to the principles embodied in its declaration of purposes, and ready to champion and defend the principles of the order. We realize that the alliance is entering upon a tempestuous voyage. Nothing but the energy of its leaders and loyalty of its members will serve to guide it aright. The Industrial Union expects to be assailed from every side. It will be ridiculed and reviled. It will be assailed by open enemy and secret foe. All the forces of monopoly will be brought into requisition to drive the order out of existence. Be it so. We are here to defend the right, and, with the approval of the farmers and laborers of Iowa, we shall with charity for all, with malice toward none, with courage for the right as God gives us to see the right, keep up the war against oppression of every kind until all class legislation is forever stricken from the statute books, and in their stead shall be written, "Equal and exact justice to all."

⁂

The Liberty Bell (Sioux City, Iowa) speaking of the power of the Alliance says: "The good, solid common sense of the American people, when they have fully determined upon doing what their conscience and their judgment tell them is right, that they will not long allow them to be kept from uniting to carry out that purpose. They are now firmly convinced their demands are right, and hence every effort to prevent it only unites the more firmly, and in spite of all that politicians may do or attempt to do, the sound, common sense of the "great, plain people" will prevail. We repeat, that in our opinion, the Alliance has been strengthened by thus showing its ability to foil the attempts of its enemies to divide and set to warring each other its two principle divisions."

⁂

On the sub-treasury plan a correspondent of the Union says: "Economists have for 500 years been trying to adjust the volume of money to the available amount of precious metals. This is and must always remain as impossible as "squaring the circle," because the metals always run away and hide in times of trouble, war or [illegible] commercial. The [illegible] people [illegible] this [illegible]

⁂

The membership of the Colored Alliance is increasing beyond count. National President Humphrey writes the Alliance Bureau, at Washington, that the organization is prospering beyond all precedent so far as organization is concerned. His greatest hindrance is in the educational line. The demand for literature is far in excess of ability to supply. Organizations having literature which they can dispose of, can do much by forwarding it to President Humphrey, or distributing it among colored Alliances that may be near them.

⁂

The Faulkner County Wheel (Conway, Ark.) says: "Why is it that the metropolitan press have maintained a graveyard silence on the issues presented by the Farmers' Alliance? Because they plainly see that a simple discussion of them would open the eyes of the people, and they would quickly hurl some of their demigods from place and power. They will never discuss issues, they only throw a little tariff sand to blind the people."

⁂

People's Economist (Thomasville, Ga.) says; "The Alliance warehouse in Griffin has just declared a dividend of 45 cents per bale for the season of 1890-91. That means that the cost of storage and handling their cotton to the farmers who stored in the Alliance warehouse was only 8 cents per bale."

⁂

The Canton (Miss.) Progress says: "The sub-treasury scheme has an object to accomplish—the lessening of the money pressure. This result will the scheme accomplish, and that, too, without a sub-treasury in every county."

⁂

National Lecturer J. F. Willetts is doing excellent work in the field. Good reports follow wherever he goes. The alliance needs a thousand just such men to advocate its cause.—National Economist.

⁂

The alliance in Maryland is thoroughly awake and decidedly aggressive. It proposes to take a hand in the coming campaign. It is growing rapidly.

EXCITEMENT CREATED

Because the Itata is Not Allowed to Unload.

A dispatch of Sunday from Iquique, Chili, says: There is great excitement here over the decision of the American admiral to take the Itata without allowing the discharge of her arms and ammunition. The press is very bitter and considers that the United States, the recognized cradle of republican idea, commits a grave error in thus indirectly assisting the dictator. The Einacional, in an editorial, says: "We know we have the sympathies of the people of America, also of the people of all other civilized nations, but the act of the United States government against the weaker power in arms for liberties and rights is not in harmony with the traditions of that government."

The article concludes: "Let Americans take our ship and our guns, but let them reflect that they leave nailed in the hearts of three million men sentiments of having been deceived in their hopes and of having lost faith in the noblemess of mind and liberality of the sentiments of the government at Washington."

A PLEA OF GUILTY

Is Entered by Ex-City Treasurer Bardsley.

A Philadelphia dispatch says: John Bardsley, ex-city treasurer of Philadelphia, was brought up from Moyamensing prison Tuesday morning and arraigned in court before Judges Fell and Wilson, on sixteen separate indictments, charging him with loaning money as a public officer, deriving gain from the deposit of public money, and converting public money to his own use. When Bardsley was asked how he plead, he pleaded guilty to every count of the indictment. It was then arranged that hearing the evidence for and against Bardsley should be set for June 23d, and the court could then weigh and pronounce sentence. In the seventeen indictments on which Bardsley plead guilty, the total amount of money involved is $678,408.

A Chattanooga girl's opinion of Sam Jones: "I think he is just lovely! I think he is sincere, too, and if his sincerity pays him $25,000 per year, so much satisfaction only tends to make his sincerity more genuine. The Lord does not make mistakes, neither has He been caught putting genius and magnetism in a mud heap. Then again the public, "dear people," as politicians express it, may err occasionally, but their judgment can generally be depended on in making and unmaking men. They have not only made Sam Jones, but they persist in standing by their creation. He has not only "caught on," but his hold appears to be perpetual. If I did not respect him for his sincerity, his originality would be my admiration. If his genius did not effect me, I would be inhuman not to revere his income, and, therefore, you can put me down as one of the evangelist's admirers.

Governor Buchanan Against It.

Governor Buchanan, of Tennessee, is in New York looking after the financial affairs of his State. As is known, Governor Buchanan is a Democrat, but secured his nomination in his party as an Alliance candidate, and was elected by a very large majority.

A reporter got after the Governor about the Third Party movement, when he said: "I am a Democrat out and out. I am a member of the Farmers' Alliance, just as I might be a Mason or an Odd Fellow. I am opposed to the Third party movement inaugurated at Cincinnati. There is no reason why any Democrat in the South or West should follow it. The platforms of the Democratic party and the Alliance are the same, with the exception of differences on the Sub-Treasury scheme and free silver."

A Sensible Young Woman.

That was a wise young woman who advertised for a farmer as a husband. She knows that the farmer is the coming man. She wants to get into the Alliance, both matrimonial and agricultural, at once.

In the past, the farmer was considered undesirable by husband-hunting girls. They then reasoned that a farmer's wife had to work too hard, and was deprived of the pleasures of fashionable society and fine dress, while the wife of a city man lived for pleasure only. But now, with a woman's quick intuition, they can see that the farmer is the coming man, that he may soon enjoy advantages above [illegible]

WASHINGTON, D. C.

ED. VIEW—It may be that the sickness of Secretary Blaine is a blessing in disguise. When he was secretary of State under Garfield, he announced a "jingo" policy which created alarm among the Democrats of the country. The untimely termination of Garfield's administration and the retirement of Mr. Blaine, to be succeeded by the conservative Frelinghuysen, prevented all danger of Mr. Blaine's aggressive foreign policy.

Mr. Blaine has now been secretary of State for nearly two years, and has not only been secretary of State, but has really been the administration. His commanding intellect dominates the small people who compose the remainder of it as effectually as the physical strength of John L. Sullin would dominate a colony of dwarfs.

The result is that we have a very vigorous—perhaps too vigorous a foreign policy. Already we we have a number of treaties which may produce unexpected complications, and it is announced that we are about to enter into an alliance or an "understanding," as it is called, with France and Russia who are to support us in the event of any trouble with Great Britain or any other European power. Neither Russia nor France will make any contract of that kind without a "quid pro quo."

It is known to every reading man that France is only waiting an opportunity, to be made, to attack Germany in the effort to recover its lost provinces Alsace and Lorraine. It is equally well known that Russia is fully determined in the near future to possess herself of Mediterranean ports, by driving Turks from Europe. This will be opposed by Germany, Austria-Hungary and Italy as well as Great Britain. These two nations have a similar object in view, and are only waiting a chance to go to war with all Europe on the other side, and of course they would like to have the moral, if not the material aid of the United States in such a war.

That is the banquet to which Mr. Blaine's vigorous foreign policy is inviting us. Should Mr. Blaine be sick enough to retire himself to private life, all danger of such a course will end. He will not leave any one in the administration with either the brains or the courage to do anything else.

Another Republican statesman is in a fair way to receive his deserts, which will be a suit of penitentiary stripes. The party alluded to is, "honest" John Bardsley, Treasurer of Philadelphia. "Honest" John has been dallying with sirens of Wall Street, and as a result is a defaulter of a million dollars. There is a possibility that a Republican statesman of much greater consequence than "honest" John will be smirched, when all the facts are known as to how "honest" John came to be so large a defaulter.

The Ashville Ægis says:

The Ægis does not take the encouraging view of the relation of the alliance in the south to the third party movement that so many democratic papers seem to take. The leaders mainly of the southern alliance are running the latter for all its worth in the direction of democratic disorganization or the control of the latter by the alliance—and it cannot be denied. Some of these leaders, however, try to occupy a sort of middle ground between the third party members of the alliance and the democracy as the most popular policy, likely to bring best returns in the end. But disguise it as it may be, the combined effort will be made by all these leaders to subvert the democracy in the south to the party ends of the Alliance. The real farmers are to be made the victims as they always have been where their interests have been involved in this way, to the aggressive steps of these leaders, for power, plunder and position. As a fact, with but few exceptions, the farmers who belong to the alliance, are under the direction of the broken down hacks of other business or repudiated politicians of both old parties, and the latter are going to use them for all they are worth for their own selfish aspirations.
